A total of 11 weapons, including 5 G-2's, 1 G-4, 2 carbines and 3 guns, were seized from the enemy. Some of the captured prisoners were released unharmed on the day of the attack.

'VOPB' RAPS GOVERNMENT OVER FOREIGN LOAN PROGRAM

BK231248 (Clandestine) Voice of the People of Burma in Burmese to Burma 1200 GMT 23 Aug 81

[Unattributed article: "The Military Government Does Things in a Big Way--on Credit"]

[Summary] The so-called People's Assembly released all sorts of figures claiming that the economic growth rate in 1980-81 was 6.7 percent which surpassed the target of 6.5 percent, that there was 674.4 million kyat surplus funds and that if this trend could be maintained, the third 4-year plan was bound to be a success. Although they were lavish in reporting various successes, the facts which people really wanted to know were omitted.

The capitalist economy, which the military government calls the world economy, is in a shambles. It is plagued by inflation, rising prices and unemployment. Restrictions imposed on imports, soaring interest rates and so forth are rife in capitalist countries. As a result developing countries--so-called because they are economically dependent on other countries--are shouldering the burdens of the capitalist world. Their export value has declined while prices of imported finsihed goods have risen. These countries are debt-ridden and as of 1980, the debts to be settled by these countries amounted to over $8.8 billion [as heard].

"There are over 30 countries like Burma in the world where individul yearly income remains at between U.S.$1,000 and $1,100. These are called the world's poorest nations." People in these countries are concerned as debts rise.

"How much does Burma--one of the poor countries--owe? To what extent if Burma reliant on the capitalist countries? The figures released by the military government do not answer these questions."

"According to figures in the report of the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development and the Asian Development Bank, Burma had debts of $106 million in 1977, $351.1 million in 1978 and $471.7 million in 1979." In terms of kyat, the debt in 1979 was 3.4689 billion. On the basis of a population of 32.6 million in Burma in that year, it means that every person in Burma owed 106.41 kyat.

"The military government takes foreign loans without restraint, shows surplus funds in hand and uses the excuse that loans are for the success fo short- and long-term projects. Since the beginning of the third 4-year plan, the military government has brought in loans, assistances and large amounts of imports. Exports, however, have failed to keep up with imports and deficits have been recorded continuously in foreign trade.

"The deficit in foreign trade in 1977-78--the last year of the second 4-year plan--was 358.7 million kyat, and the figure rose to 1.9503 billion kyat in 1980-81--the 3d year of the third 4-year plan.

"In this year also, imports will be 5.5249 billion kyat while earnings from exports will be 3.7563 billion kyat. More than half of the 5.5249 billion kyat import cost will be covered by foreign loans and assistance. This is just an estimate. If last year's figures are any yardstick, loans and cost of imports are bound to rise.

"At this rate, more losses in foreign trade are about to be incurred. Last year, the estimate for the foreign trade deficit was 93 million kyat. However, the actual trade imbalance at the end of the year was 674.4 million kyat. This year again, the estimate for the foreign trade deficit is 72 million kyat, but the trade imbalance is bound to rise."

Loans come with interest repayments, and even interest-free loans come with conditions. Burma uses 20 percent of its export earnings to repay loans and interest. Although debts rise, the military government will continue to take loans. At a so-called seminar held a year after the military clique usurped power, the top boss of the military clique said: "We Burmese have always been involved with loans. We would even ride an elephant if we could buy one on credit." That was when he insulted the peasants over agricultural loans.

The Burmese people have had experience with foreign loans and are not the ones who would buy an elephant on credit. It is very obvious that it is the rulers who want to ride elephants. "Today, the military government is trying to ride an elephant at any cost while the people are in debt up to their necks. The people are being trampled by the 'economic elephant' of the Buram socialist program party." The people must struggle for a self-reliant and independent economic system.

BRIEFS

SHAN REBELS, COMMUNISTS SPLIT--Shan resistance forces have severed their 10-year-old ties with the outlaws Communist Party of Burma, accusing the Peking-backed communists of committing "atrocities." The decision to end the alliance, formed in 1971 to fight the Rangoon regime of Burmese President Ne Win, was made at a recent jungle summit of 200 chieftains of the Shan State Progress Party, the political arms of the Shan State Army. Shan rebels have been fighting a mini-civil war against the Burmese Government since 1958, demanding the right to secession for the three to five million ethnic Shans living in a 60,000 sq mile State that includes one of the richest opium growing areas of the notorious Golden Triangle. The Shans accused their former communist allies of terrorising the mountain people of northern Burma with summary executions, pillage and forced conscription. "People were summarily shot to death just because they were rich enough to have a corrugated roof over their heads" said one Shan officer. "Those who owned an extra bullock cart were trussed up like animals and beaten." The Shan said the communists requisitioned rice and salt from villagers at gunpoint and forced young village boys to join their ranks. The Shan charged the communists with "forcing" local tribesmen to grow opium poppies and then insisting that the harvest be sold only to them at prices far below the markets level. Shan officials said the rebels initially made their alliance with the communists because they needed help from the communists superior military forces in fighting government troops. AIR FORCE PLAN FOR OPERATIONAL READINESS REPORTED

Kuala Lumpur ASIAN DEFENSE JOURNAL in English Oct 81 P 61

[Text] A major effort has been made by the Indian Air Force to ensure a high state of operational readiness with gradual discontinuation of restrictions on combat exercises — restrictions that were affecting the operations potential of front-line units.

According to defence ministry sources the restrictions, particularly on low-flying exercises, had been introduced some years ago to minimise air accidents, particularly those caused by bird hits.

Such restrictions, it was felt, had greatly curbed the initiative of fighter commanders, supervisors and young pilots, making them over-conscious of flight safety. It was also felt that the restrictions would adversely affect the morals of the fighter pilots.

The IAF discontinued the restrictions to maintain a very high level of air combat-worthiness at all times. The recently-acquired deep penetration strike aircraft — Jaguars — are considered specially suited for low-level flying and at near-sonic speeds.

While greater emphasis is being placed on combat capability, the emphasis on flight safety remains very high and, in terms of priority, is next only to combat capability.

In the mid-70s about 60 per cent, of air accidents in the IAF occurred during non-tactical exercises. This had been brought down to 40 per cent, during the last three years.

Pilot's error accidents have also been reduced from around 4 per 10,000 hours of flying in the early 70s to less than one for 10,000 hours now.

According to published figures, the U.S. Air Force loses 25 to 30 aircraft every year in low-flying accidents. In combat exercises, the aircrew are subjected to very high speed accelerations and G factors which, sometimes, cause loss of consciousness of the pilots for short durations and other accompanying hazards. It is learnt the U.S. lost 17 aircraft last year due to loss of control by pilots during combat training exercises. The IAF losses, in similar circumstances, over the last three years, have been a fraction of this.

The Indian air space, especially at low altitudes, is heavily infested with vultures and kites. The presence of these birds poses a very serious hazard, particularly to high performance aircraft now in the inventory of the IAF.

Air Force headquarters are at present engaged in an in-depth study of this with the assistance of the Bombay Natural History Society, and several remedial measures have already been introduced.

Air accidents in the transport wing of the IAF have also been progressively reduced, though such aircraft, including helicopters, undertake a large number of sorties every month in extremely difficult terrain and weather conditions.

The IAF is, however, still operating some aircraft like the C-47 Dakota which were introduced nearly 40 years ago. However, through careful maintenance, supervision and flying skill, the accident rate in the transport wing has been reduced.

PAPER ON SRI LANKA'S TAMIL PROBLEM

BK301422 Delhi INDIAN EXPRESS in English 22 Sep 81 p 6

[Editorial: "Sri Lanka Dilemma"]

[Text] A heartening aspect of the post-riot situation in Sri Lanka is the effort made by President Jayewardene to curb the wild men in his own party. From all accounts, they played a most reprehensible role in the events leading up to the mob violence on the hapless Tamils in the central provinces. Apart from making inflammatory speeches, some of them are known to have played a more active part. Mr Jayewardene publicly spoke in anguish about the damage they had done to his party as well as the nation. That he was not just expressing pious sentiments is clear from his subsequent action. First, he dismissed a deputy minister, Mr G.V. Punchinilame, found guilty of gross misbehaviour. This was followed by last week's expulsion from Parliament of Dr Neville Fernando, a member of the ruling United National Party [UNP]. The UNP working committee has also asked three other party members, including another deputy minister, to withdraw the rabidly anti-Tamil remarks they had made in the pre-riot parliamentary debate over the censure motion against Mr Amrithalingam, leader of the opposition and secretary-general of the Tamil United Liberation Front [TULF].

The Sinhala chauvinists in the ruling party are reported to be rebelling against these decisions. It is to be hoped that the president will be able to contain the revolt. Otherwise, the situation will become more complicated. A split in the ruling party is bound to jeopardise the proposed joint efforts towards a peaceful settlement of the Tamil problem, in pursuance of the recently announced agreement between the government and the Gulf leaders.

The sufferings of the Tamil minority in Sri Lanka have naturally caused concern in the country. In Tamil Nadu particularly, feelings run high, as demonstrated by the hartal sponsored by the state government itself and the DMK's mass picketing campaign. The government of India cannot afford to ignore this, especially since those who are exposed to danger in Sri Lanka include many awaiting repatriation to India. At the same time, it cannot lay itself open to the charge of interfering in the internal affairs of a neighbouring country.

DELHI COUNTS COST OF RECORD IMF LOAN

London 8 DAYS in English 29 Aug 81 p 23

[Text] IMF officials say India must expect stringent measures to be demanded if the Fund is to approve the approximately $5bn loan requested by New Delhi. The loan, if granted, will be the largest-ever accorded by the IMF. In particular, IMF sources said, India would be expected to lift several food-price subsidies and restrict loans by setting higher interest rates. Some limited devaluation of the rupee, to about 10 to the dollar, may also be 'recommended.'

The IMF has noted that, as a preliminary measure to advance its case, the Gandhi government has already reduced fertiliser subsidies and allowed a considerable increase in retail oil prices. India is also trying to boost exports through tax incentives.

IMF officials stress that India's situation is far from desperate. Although foreign-currency reserves have slipped by about $2bn in 18 months, they still stand at about $5bn. But India had an unfavourable trade balance of $1.9bn in 1980 and will have one this year of over $5bn, principally because exports.

Indian officials blame the situation largely on oil prices and note that remittances from Indian workers in the Gulf are static.

STATE OF AIR FORCE EXAMINED

Kuala Lumpur ASIAN DEFENSE JOURNAL in English Oct 81 pp 62-63

[Article by Pushpindar Singh]

[Text]

As the Indian Air Force approaches the fiftieth year of its existence (founded in October 1932), it is engaged in a major review of its organisational set up and in planning for the future. The training infrastructure, already accepted as one of the most comprehensive and extensive in the world, is being reorganised and expanded whilst new aircraft missiles, and equipment are being inducted to replace obsolescent types in service which would be phased out within the next few years.

The Indian Air Force is planning to substantially raise the number of pilots it trains every year. While in the immediate future, the existing facilities will be properly utilised, it is proposed to appreciably augment those facilities. In fact, an additional training academy is likely to be established.

Though the Air Force at present finds itself hard pressed to meet the training requirements of pilots for itself, its sister services, and foreign armed forces it is also concerned about the quality of men who choose a career of combat flying.

It has been found that there are insufficient applicants of merit to fill the quota of direct-entry pilots. These are young men who after their graduation seek commissions, as opposed to those who have their initiation to the armed forces at the National Defence Academy.

Initially, it had been stipulated that only science graduates could seek direct entry to the Air Force but now the rules have been amended to include arts graduates as well provided they had done mathematics and science at school. It is hoped that this change will attract more candidates.

Air Force officials concede that they — in fact, the armed forces as a whole — no longer attract the cream of the youth. Many of the young men who apply for commissions do so after having failed to make the grade in other professions. Entering the management cadres of commercial houses and certain public sector undertakings appears a more attractive proposition to most young men.

Living Conditions

It is not only the lower emoluments that prove the discouragement. Living conditions can be difficult and there are many places in which the officers do not enjoy the type of accommodation and recreation facilities to which they are entitled. The Government is in the know-how of this situation.

Perhaps some consolation can be drawn from the fact that the IAF is not alone in this predicament. The Royal Air Force was similarly afflicted and only a few months ago the British Government announced a substantial increase in the pay and service conditions for those seeking commissions.

The drop in the quality of the "raw material" has made IAF training more rigid and strenuous, for it has to be ensured that the finished product is of requisite standard. The training is obviously good, for there are a large number of developing countries, who wish to have their pilots trained by the IAF.

And it is from the money realised as training charges that the additional training facilities could be financed. It has been calculated that the training of foreign personnel could generate a revenue of Rs 14.7 crores a year. Within two years the additional facilities would have been paid for.

The training of pilots for the aviation branches of the Army and the Navy is also the responsibility of the IAF and the demand for such training has been proportionately more than what the Air Force projects for itself.

This is because Army and Naval fliers do not devote their entire professional career to flying as does the Air Force pilot. They fly at a particular period of their career and then move on to non-flying assignments. Is this economical? The IAF does not think so and would cite this as a reason why the aviation wings of the other two services need not be expanded much further.

Training is an expensive proposition. It is calculated that the cost of training a flier, from his basic flying to his commission, is Rs 25 lakhs. And while the Air Force has not always been able to fill the vacancies for pilot trainees, not all those who want to be pilots make the grade.

But rather than allow those who do not qualify as pilots go waste, the IAF trains them as navigators. Former cadets of the National Defence Academy, who fail to make pilot status are automatically diverted to navigation, the direct-entry trainees are offered commissions as ground duty officers but have the option to seek their fortune in civvy street.

Adequate trainer aircraft would be one stumbling block in the IAF's expansion plans. At present basic flying training is imparted on the HT-2, there has been much delay in the development of the indigenous HPT-32. The first jet aircraft which a pilot learns to fly is another HAL product-the Kiran. Production of this had at one stage fallen short of requirement and the Iskara aircraft had to be imported from Europe.

The Air Force feels that the Kiran will fulfill its role as the initial jet trainer for at least 15 years more. It will become obsolete only when there is a complete revolution in the design and power plants of combat aircraft — something which is still not round the corner.

Production of the Kiran in sufficient numbers would be possible if the Air Force projects its requirement to Hindustan Aeronautics well in advance. The IAF is currently thinking in a 20-year time frame; thus it hopes that it will not run into bumpy weather for want of adequate jet trainer aircraft.

If the training programme is to be expanded, another air base will be required. Every airfield has limitations imposed by runways and available air space. The new base will preferably be located in the southern part of the country, where most of the present training facilities have been established.

While looking to the future, the IAF hopes that it will be in a position to induct almost 200 pilots a year, at present it can train a total of just 128 pilots (from all services, including foreigners). That number ought to suffice to keep the force with sufficient pilots for its fighter/bomber aircraft, transport planes and helicopters.

The future would also see requirements of new aircraft and land-based detection and attack systems. This too involves some foresight for the average life-span of a particular type of combat aircraft which is about 15 years. In fact the moment you induct one type of aircraft is the time to start thinking of its replacement.

Air Force personnel feel a trifle annoyed at the general impression that they suddenly decide to buy aircraft. At present, there is much talk of the Mirage 2000 — the Air Force maintains that it had projected a requirement of an aeroplane of that type, described in official parlance as an "air superiority fighter", in 1974.

Similarly, though the contract for the Jaguars materialised in 1979, the requirement had been projected in the 1960's. Most laymen do not appreciate the fine points of distinction between aircraft a different type is required for the role it would be expected to play.

There are three basic roles — air defence, support to ground forces, and counter offence. And each requires an aeroplane with different capabilities. There are "multi-role combat aircraft" being produced, but their induction would not be cost effective.

Air Defence

The IAF at present uses the Mig-21 FL and the Mig-21B is for air defence, which essentially means attacking enemy aircraft before they can strike at their targets. It is to increase our ability to thwart attempted attacks that the IAF would like an aircraft like the Mirage 2000. The need for such an aircraft becomes imperative in view of the probability of the USA supplying F-16s to Pakistan.

The offensive air support operations are carried out by Mig-21 MF, the Sukhois and the Marut and Ajeet. Counter air operations — striking at the enemy's airfields, attacking his war machine — would be done using the Jaguars, which is slowly replacing the Hunter and the Canberra.

A new dimension to warfare has been added by developments in the fields of electronics and in this a series of devices and counter devices have been developed. For example radar initially proved extremely effective in detecting enemy raiders, and there was time enough to scramble one's own interceptors to engage them before they delivered their weapons.

But the realisation that radar became less effective when the raiders were flying low has resulted in the development of strike aircraft which operate at a little above treetop heights. The difficulties of navigation and aiming of weapons from a low height have been removed with the use of computerized navigation and attack systems. Most strike aircraft are equipped with electronic "jamming" devices to render radar and "homing missiles", less effective. But the man operating the radar and missiles has his systems designed to counter the jamming device of the raider. It is a constant battle of wits, the man who uses his system quicker is the winner.

Thus, while the IAF is on the look out for better aeroplanes to meet the anticipated threat it is also seeking to augment its own missile and detection capability.

There are two recent "actions" which highlight the importance of electronics in warfare in the air. The Israelis were able to attack the nuclear installation near Baghdad unchallenged because they were able to "jam" the Iraqi air defence system. Conversely, the American attempt at freeing the hostages in Iran failed because the electronic systems aboard the aircraft were rendered useless by some counter devices — suspected to have been used by the Soviets.

In today's environment the talk of the IAF needing only defensive aircraft and systems becomes totally irrelevant. Adopting a defensive posture would mean that the war would be fought in our own skies, and whatever damage was caused would be ours. It is imperative to hit an enemy before he hits you; but even more than the old adage of attack being the best form of defence is the fact that the best deterrent to an enemy is to make him realise that you can hit him very hard. □

'J 'G' CORRESPONDENT ON INDIAN ARMS BUILDUP

[Excerpts] According to JANG correspondent Akhtar Jamal reporting from Vienna on 21 September, the Indian leaders, in order to counter the Pakistani move to find replacements for its 20-year old aircraft, have started negotiations with several countries to purchase modern planes, tanks and ships. According to European military experts, India entered agreements worth $10 billion or more in 1980-81 alone for purchase of arms. Indian defense personnel are reportedly trying to conclude three more such agreements by the end of 1981. The last of these agreements involves some $8 billion under which the Soviet Union will supply India with MiG-25 planes by 1982-83. These planes are also known as "Foxbat." Other agreements include making Jaguar-type French planes in India and purchase of British-made Harrier planes. The latter will reach India by 1983. Plans are underway to buy 150 Mirage 2000 planes by May 1983. An Indian purchase team of defense personnel will leave for Paris within the next few weeks to finalize an agreement to that effect.

Assembly work on the Jaguar planes has begun at the Hindustan Aeronautics Factory in Bangalore. Parts from the United Kingdom are then assembled to make the fighter planes. According to Indian defense experts, India is interested in learning the know-how and technology to help it make such planes within the country. Since the beginning of the last decade, Indian defense experts have been following the policy that the capability to build modern weapons and missiles should be developed within the country. Thus dependence on arms supplies from other countries is decreased. Apart from this, India also has plans to build French missiles, Italian radar equipment, certain Swedish weapons and Soviet tanks by itself. By 1984 India will build 600 T-72's under Soviet license. Some 100 T-72 tanks are expected to arrive in India in the next year. According to information, the Soviet Union has offered full aid to India for building ships. It may be recalled that the Soviet Union has made great progress in this field. The Indian navy is already the strongest in the subcontinent. It is expected to add two Soviet destroyers and two modern frigates on. India is the only Third World country whose navy includes an aircraft carrier. Experts believe a helicopter-carrying ship is under construction in Bombay.

INDIA NEARS ITS OIL AMBITION

London 8 DAYS in English 29 Aug 81 p 48

[Text]

INDIA'S OIL and Natural Gas Commission (ONGC) has just celebrated its 25th birthday and has much to be pleased about. Petroleum Minister P.C. Sethi announced that annual production in Bombay High will go up from the present 9m tonnes (172,600 b/d) to almost 20m tonnes (383,560 b/d) by the end of 1983. India uses about 32m tonnes a year and currently imports two thirds of its consumption.

The ambitious target has been made possible particularly because of a recently concluded agreement between ONGC and France's Compagnie Francaise des Petroles (CFP) for the development and exploitation of hydrocarbon reserves in the Bombay High area.

ONGC will pay CFP around $50m for transfer of technology and technical services. The fee is not related to production levels, an Indian government spokesman told 8 Days. CFP will assist ONGC in evaluating the petroleum potential of the offshore areas along the Bombay-Ratnagiri coast starting from the Heera field in the north and extending westwards to the edge of the shelf. Development plans of Bombay High north, south and east of Ratna field will also be updated with the help of CFP experts.

There are very few Indian public sector organisations with a track record as impressive as that of ONGC. When the commission was first set up in 1956, the annual oil production was a mere 400,000 tonnes, mainly from a few wells in Assam in northeast India. Any significant increase in output seemed unrealistic at the time as western oil experts had labelled India 'petroleum-destitute'. Exploration activity was in its infancy and any talk of offshore reserves seemed a pipe dream. As the Indian Express pointed out, the prospects of finding substantial hydrocarbon deposits appeared so hopeless that the ONGC was provided with just Indian rupees 85m ($9.6m) to search for oil.

ONGC has come a long way since those parsimonious days. India's recoverable reserves are currently estimated at about 300m tonnes, while the annual output is expected to exceed 16m tonnes this year — nearly 40 times higher than production twenty five years ago. ONGC's performance to date has been comparable to the world's top oil companies. It has already produced over 82m tonnes of crude oil and over 8,240 cubic metres of gas.

During the next five years, ONGC plans to produce over 63m tonnes of crude oil from offshore reserves and over 27m tonnes from onshore fields. As a result India will make a foreign exchange saving of IR160bn ($18bn) at current world market prices. ONGC also expect a seven-fold increase in gas availability by 1985.

Some doubts have arisen about the availability of external aid for ONGC's projects. The US government is reported to have recommended that the World Bank scraps or drastically cuts back its lending programme to public sector oil and gas projects in the Third World. Some 17 such projects in the Third World are currently under World Bank scrutiny including India's Godavari offshore project. ONGC has asked the World Bank for $120m. but if the institution accepts Washington's advice, the Godavari project will be seriously affected. Fortunately, the World Bank has already committed itself to $400m in aid for Bombay High.

Meanwhile, the Gandhi cabinet has approved the state takeover of Oil India Limited and the Assam Oil Company. Oil India was jointly owned by the government and the Burmah Oil Company of the United Kingdom on a fifty-fifty equity basis and will continue as a separate oil exploration company. The Assam Oil Company, a fully owned Burmah Oil subsidiary, will lose its separate identity after the takeover.

BRIEFS

AIR FORCE PLANS--The RMAF will aspire towards expanding its air support services so that the various Asean air forces can use its facilities for their common interests, said the Chief of Air Force, Lt. Gen Datuk Mohamed Taib recently. He said millions of dollars could be saved if the RMAF was self-reliant in maintenance, repair and recovery work. He said he was proud that the RMAF had begun pioneering efforts in this field some time ago. He was speaking at the opening of the Air Support Headquarters (Mabanud) at the TUDM base. The RMAF, he said, was in the process of buying new jet planes to supplement and replace existing planes. This, he added, would increase the burden on the RMAF organisation, especially that of Mabanud. He said Mabanud would be given the responsibility of training all personnel (including pilots and technicians), the assembly of planes and logistics supplies. Apart from these, Mabanud would also be given other support duties, including the air force reserves and the RMAF band. As a high-technology organisation, the RMAF needs personnel who are skilled and of high calibre. In this respect, the right kind of training was an important and necessary factor, he said. The RMAF, he said, was at the crossroads in the drive towards more intensified development, the success of which depended upon the undivided support of all personnel. It was of no use having expensive and sophisticated equipment if they were not well used and maintained, or if the spirit of dedicated service was not present, he added. AIR FORCE PILOT SHORTAGE--The RMAF is hard-pressed in its efforts to train its pilots in the face of a shortage of trainer jets and other training aircraft. The main training aircraft used now are the 11 Tebuans based in Kuantan and the F15 jets for jet plane training and the 13 Bulldogs in Alor Star for basic training besides a number of Cessnas. Although tenders for advanced trainer jets were closed last month, the jets are only expected to arrive in 1982 or later. Six such jets have been ordered up to 1983 and another six after that. Modern turbo trainers are also intended for future training purposes. It is understood that 120 pilots will be trained annually. In the meantime, trainee jet pilots will continue to use the Tebuans. Nine Tebuans have crashed in the last six years, although they were tested for airworthiness before take-off and checked again after landing. A trainee jet pilot is supposed to have logged at least 210 flying hours before embarking on the course. During the course, he is required to log 85 flying hours before he is deemed qualified. The 68 refurbished A4 Skyhawk jets which the RMAF intends to buy from the US Navy for about $7.5 million each will not replace the Tebuans, although 14 of them will be converted to two-seaters for training purposes. The RMAF also plans to intensify its training programme to overcome the shortage of technical staff, especially fitters where there are 2,700 vacancies. The RMAF will also continue to send its staff overseas for training. About 500 returned from the United States recently after a 13-month course. NEW NAVAL BASE--The Royal Malaysian Navy which had just celebrated its 29 years old recently will have another modern naval base in Kuantan in addition to its existing one in Lumut. The base in Kuantan will become the RMN's headquarters for all aspects of marine safety in peninsular Malaysia. It will take on its role from the K.D. Malaya based in Woodlands which would become the headquarters for the RMN's warship operations, according to a statement from the communications division of the Defence Ministry. The base in Kuantan is now being built on a 200 acre site at Tanjung Gelang costing $125 million. It would be fully completed at the end of 1983 and could accommodate 500 personnel. The statement said the transfer of RMN's operations to Lumut by 1985 signified the beginning of RMN's reconstruction programme. At present, 60 per cent of the Lumut base is completed. The rest would be ready by the end of 1984 or early 1985. Early last year, the recruits and cadet officers training centre, K.D. Pelanduk, was transferred to Lumut and several groups of recruits, including the women, completed their training there. The original estimate for constructing the naval complex at Lumut was $450 million but this has increased to nearly $1,200 million. The RMN expects to base 30,000 married seamen at the complex. The Lumut base would have a dockyard to enable the RMN to repair its own ships. [Text] [Kuala Lumpur ASIAN DEFENSE JOURNAL in English Oct 81 p 9]

GRADUAL ISLAMIZATION OF LEGAL SYSTEM URGED

Islamabad THE MUSLIM in English 24 Sep 81 p 4

[Editorial: "Islamisation of Judicial System"]

[Text]

AT a recent meeting at Quetta, the Federal Cabinet discussed at length the recommendations of the its sub-committee formed to bring the existing cumbersome judicial system in conformity with the tenets of Islam in order to provide inexpensive, expeditious justice to the people. After a fuller scrutiny in another couple of meetings, the draft recommendations would be circulated for eliciting public opinion.

That Islam was the raison d'etre of Pakistan has been repeated ad nauseam over the past thirty four years. Yet, the social and legal order under which we have lived has been far from Islamic. True, it is not possible to transform, in one sweep, the character of the socio-legal infrastructure inherited from the alien rulers. Yet, no visible effort was made during the first thirty years of independence to even initiate the process of Islamisation of laws and life in the country.

The Fundamental Law of Islam, enshrined in the Quran and the Sunnah, is a code of Divine Commandments and does not lend itself to change through legislation by man. But this age of ever-changing socio-economic landscape has witnessed innumerable points of conflict between human conduct and the Islamic Fundamental Laws. The situation is fast deteriorating and it is time a clear line of demarcation was drawn between what is Islamic and what is not.

Since the birth of Pakistan, successive governments have publicly committed themselves to the establishment of a complete Islamic order in the country. It does not have to be emphasised that laws are the most effective single instrument of change from one social set-up to another. Yet, no appreciable process of Islamisation of Laws was initiated until 1966, when the Council of Islamic Ideology was first instituted. Its terms of reference included bringing all existing laws in conformity with the Quran and the Sunnah and recommending abolition of all laws repugnant to the spirit of Islam. In 1967, a Law Reform Commission was constituted, with the then Chief Justice of Pakistan, as its chairman. After three years of hard work under its terms of reference, the Commission submitted its Report in 1970. It can be presumed that the Report must have recommended reforms on various aspects of the existing codes of law. But, neither the Report, nor its recommendations ever saw the light of day, and we have continued to live under the obnoxious Anglo-Saxon Laws, which not only suffer from inherent defects, but under which, redress is unbearably expensive and unnecessarily lengthy.

Since it took over, the present regime has repeatedly announced its resolve to completely Islamise all existing laws. An Ordinance was promulgated in February 1979, establishing a Law Commission to study and keep under continuous review, the laws and the judicial systems itself. The object was stated to be to bring them into accord with the changing needs of the times, yet keeping to the soul of Islamic laws, notably the concept of Islamic social justice. The aim was to evolve a simple and effective procedure for the administration of law and ensure substantial, inexpensive and speedy justice to the litigants and to remove extant anomalies in the existing judicial system.

Since the Council of Islamic ideology was reconstituted in 1977 and given a fresh mandate, it has done some constructive work, which deserves honourable mention. Its recommendations leading to the introduction of the Zakat and Ushr Ordinance, interest-free banking, promulgation of the Enforcement of Hudood Ordinance, the establishment of Shariat Faculty (now Islamic University), the constitution of the Federal Shariat Court, introduction of measures for the training of Qazis and the initiation of programmes for imparting knowledge of fiqh to civil judges and magistrates, are no doubt some of prominent milestones on Pakistan's journey to Islamisation of laws.

It is recognised on all hands that there is no room in any polity, much less Islam, for the judiciary to be at the mercy of the executive. The fourth Khaleefah-i-Raashed, Amir-ul-Momineen, Imam Ali (May Allah be pleased with him), wrote the most glittering chapter in the history of the independence of the judiciary by deciding to stand in the docks in the court of the Qazi. Yet, here in Pakistan, each Government has been louder than its predecessor in proclaiming its pious resolve of redeeming the judiciary from the pernicious stranglehold of the executive. But, things are where they were 34 years ago.

It is strongly felt that instead of introducing all Islamic Laws in one package, at one point of time—which may well take decades—individual laws may be brought in conformity with the spirit of the Divine Commandments and promulgated without unnecessary delay. Now that the President has made it clear that his government would continue running the affairs of State till the Islamic administrative set-up was provided at all levels, it was imperative that the institutions associated with the task of Islamisation of Laws speeded up their work to bring the transfer of power to the people nearer.

CHANGE TO LOCAL INDUSTRIES URGED

Karachi MORNING NEWS in English 26 Sep 81 p 7

[Text] INDUSTRIALISTS have been advised to invest in sophisticated branches of manufacturing so that the country's growing needs can be met locally. The timely advice was given the other day by the Governor of Sind while addressing the local industrialists. The country's industrial strategy in the fifties and the sixties was based on the promotion of import substitution. This was in essence a sound idea, though some of the industries set up for the avowed purpose of import substitution increased the country's dependence and failed to strengthen the economy. For these and other reasons doubts came to be expressed about the wisdom of the very idea. Import substitution is now back in favour — and rightly — with the difference that it is thought to be advisable to extend it, where possible, to the realm of industrial processes which have a higher value-added component. As has been pointed out earlier many a time, the country has come to depend very heavily on imported goods and technologies. The total imports of manufactured goods of all types increased from Rs. 10,146 million in 1975-76 to Rs. 24,788 million in 1979-80. This works out to a rate of increase of 25 per cent per annum in spite of governmental efforts to keep importation in check.

The technology transfers over the last three decades have added to our debt liability as well as created a heavy technological dependence on foreign countries, to the detriment of national interests. So far, we have been content to import plants and instal imported machinery and equipment. We have to import even spares and ordinary components for day-to-day replacements in industries and in power and transport sectors. It is no wonder our import bill is rising steeply. In a recent fiscal year, the country imported auto spares worth over Rs. 500 million. Apart from ball bearings, such simple items as spark plugs, oil and air filters, brake linings, auto bulbs, wind screen glasses, etc., are all imported because either they are not produced locally or their quality is very poor. In quite a few cases, import substitution has made little progress or its quality has been spurious. One example is presented by assembly plants whose licensing was contingent upon progressive manufacture of the goods locally. But these plants have remained units for assembling or packing the materials imported at exorbitant prices. Pharmaceutical industries are another case in point. Most of them have been and are glorified packing units. For much of our industrial production, we rely heavily on imports of industrial raw materials.

According to a recent PICIC study of import substitution, progress "has been outstanding in some areas (as for example steel, fertilisers and polyester fibre) and disappointing in others (chemicals, capital goods, transport vehicles and equipment, electrical machinery and electronics). It will need planned and vigorous efforts to extend import substitution to industries in the second category. This involves moving into the realm of sophisticated industries. The development of engineering, chemical and electrical industries will go a long way in putting industrialisation on a sound footing, reducing dependence and paving the way for technological progress and innovation. Pakistan has now joined the group of developing countries which are producing their own steel. This important development will give a fillip to industries in general and advanced industries in particular. Pakistani entrepreneurs have so far failed to enter this highly lucrative field whereas many countries, which became independent later than Pakistan, are today well-established producers of sophisticated goods.

'MAIL' SUGGESTS INDIA THREATENS BANGLADESH ELECTIONS

Peshawar KHYBER MAIL in English 25 Sep 81 p 3

[Editorial: "Clouds Over Bangladesh"]

[Text]

The daughter of the late Shaikh Mujibur Rahman, Haseena Wajid, has lately signified her intention for taking her party to the polls for President that would be held in November. To people in Pakistan this would be a harmless move and suggesting that there is nothing wrong for a political party to take part in elections, as a matter of right. No one would dispute the right. The question is what would it lead to eventually. Elections are often a very tricky affair. People in Pakistan know very little of what happened during the 1970 polls. We would like to enlighten them. Bangladesh, when it was East Pakistan, had a substantial Hindu minority, who lived in separate villages and some in the cities, as they do now in that country. Since some time before the polls, shoals of West Bengal Hindus began infiltrating into that region. The result was a terrorizing of the patriotic Muslim elements, 43 per cent of whom did not go to cast their polls. Of the 57 per cent who did, 25 per cent were Hindu votes, 15 per cent were cast against and as many as 10 per cent were bogus votes thrust for the Awami League candidates, leaving 7 per cent of the polls which catapulted the party into power. What transpired later is known to everyone. The latest information reaching Pakistan shows that actually more than 90 per cent of the people favour the party in power today and have a soft corner in their hearts for Pakistan. Five per cent are opposed to the Government and it may be less than 5 per cent who would be supporting the Awami League which is obviously being supported by India. This is factual analysis, but by no means the one that would be reflected in the coming elections. What would actually transpire is very difficult to say. But, it in itself portends of evil when a party with a following of only 5 per cent of the people, which it must know, has decided to rush into the arena. It must be some cards which it is keeping up its sleeve and of which the Government knows little.

Some people may point out that there have been pro-Awami League demonstrations in Dacca and even strikes were threatened which forced the Government to how before their demand for postponement of elections. Demonstrations are not very difficult to promote in a highly-populated, poverty-ridden country like Bangladesh. They can be rigged up by any one as long as it can invest some cash, throw about lies which seem to appear true to the unsophisticated poorer citizens. Bangladesh has a 300-mile long border, and there are ample chances for making a pretty penny through illegal trade with India. This way, with full Indian cooperation, a new class of businessmen who made a big pile in a very short time grew up in Bangladesh in the early years following its establishment. It is this section which wants cooperation with India to return and backs the Awami League. The Awami League could muster a sufficient force to rig up demonstrations, further swelled by on-lookers and the youngsters who get a kick out of such tamashas. The Awami League has received further strength from its fresh backing from India. The other day the papers were full of an Indian plan to be put into execution for the sub-verting of the Government by the end of August and the beginning of September. It is on the cards that the Government accepted the demands of the Awami League for the postponement of elections only to avoid the plan to be put into operation as was probably expected. While the Government would be trying to plug the gaps in their security plans, the other side would be busy reorganising it to be used during the polls.

The Awami League stands for full cooperation with India and a secular Government, in which religion plays no part. The present Government, however, is for promoting better relations with the Muslim countries especially Pakistan. The Soviet lobby would be active in the support of the Awami League. But, fortunately, the communists of that ilk are not very strong, rather the pro-Chinese reds have a greater voice with the people, and they would not like the Awami League to come to power. Bangladesh as a problem country, due to its excessive population (10 crores now in an area one-fifth of that of Pakistan) and the absence of many resources, mainly of management know-how and investment potential, though the country, has forged ahead during the presidency of Ziaur Rahman. The latter had built a position among the Muslim nations of the world and had been receiving substantial aid from the petro-dollars, and was able to fill difficult gaps. With his assassination, it is not quite certain how the people would react. Shah Azizur Rahman, the Prime Minister ,is a strong enough person. He was a student-leader at the time of independence and is a man of parts. He, however, lacks the charisma of his predecessor. He may be able to ward off Indian machinations with success. Bangladesh would be saved if the present party returns to power at the polls and any underhand methods to subvert the results are offset.

NATION SHOULD CONSIDER NUCLEAR ALTERNATIVES

[Editorial: "The Symington Amendment"]

[Text]

On the eve of the discussions in the US Congress regarding the Symington Amendment, which sought to control military aid to nations which are on the road to proliferation of nuclear weapons, the Zionist American media have let loose a broadside against Pakistan. After close discussions with the Pakistani authorities, the Reagan Administration had tentatively decided to provide weapons assistance to this country in view of the danger that loomed large on its western horizon from the "predatory eyes" of the Soviet Union. The Congress was to discuss recommendations on that score. It seems that the Symington Amendment was passed only for application to Pakistan during the Nixon regime whose foreign policy was dominated by that great Jew, Dr. Kissinger. For, in actual practice the law has not been applied to any other country. It is well known that the United States has provided six billion dollars worth of military and to Israel annually for the last several years, in addition to guaranteeing more when it was needed. Israel is known to have been developing the atomic bomb since it was delivered essential nuclear raw materials by an American Zionist firm. The white racist Government of South Africa has similarly been on the path of building up a nuclear stockpile and although the Pretoria Government does not have any military assistance from the United States, it has its commercial and other relations with.

The most discriminatory example is that of India. This country has not only not agreed to sign the nonproliferation treaty, it has consistently refused international inspection by the International Atomic Energy Commission, but actually developed the bomb with American enriched uranium and heavy water facilities. Even after the 1974 explosion, the Symington Amendment did not come into operation though the supply of heavy water and uranium certainly brought these items within the definition of military use. It seems the Indo-Israeli connection, which has not been played up at all but has always been there has certified the increase of nuclear blasts by Indian and promptly accepted by the leaders of the Uinted States. As we have been consistently writing in these columns, the attitude of the United States and other Islamic nations to the question of their defence is overshadowed by the expansionist policies of Israel so clearly underwritten by the United States and its allies. In the meantime Israel is utilising American weapons to destroy Muslim lives and property in Lebanon by openly attacking the Palestinian refugee camps and also the Muslim inhabitants there.

American congressmen already in the pay of Israel or themselves Zionists, have started a solid opposition to the President's promises to open the doors of military supplies to Pakistan. The press and audio-visual media have opened up a barrage against such sanction by the Congress. Pakistan and her friends across the Gulf shall have to consider seriously the alternative open to them, which are actually very few. In such a case it would be suicidal for this country to continue its policy of playing second fiddle to any big power. It would prove to be a veritable death-wish to do so. This country as well as its other Muslim friends shall have to mend their fences with those who threaten our very existence and for which our erstwhile friends do not have anything for us in the shape of support.

BETTER QUALITY OF PRODUCED GOODS URGED

[Editorial: "Quality Control"]

[Text] The deteriorating quality of our finished industrial products is a matter which is being viewed with alarm by all concerned. The falling standards of our industrial goods which are no more durable nor reasonably priced had increased the incidence of smuggling and induced people to go more for imported goods through illegal channels than make use of the ones produced in their own country. This surely has undermined our national pride and our liking for indigenous goods, though patriotism warrants that we should be proud of using goods produced in our own country. But the case is quite different. The sad part of the whole thing is that many of our industrialists have not only duped foreign importers by supplying them sub-standard items but also not giving a fair deal to the indigenous consumers. Their craze for money has brought a bad name to the country. At least this is a matter which should not be brushed aside so easily and government must come down with a heavy hand on the unscrupulous elements who are out to besmear the image of their country for a mess of pottage.

To quote a few out of the many, we may for instance take the case of pharmaceutical industry which has played havoc with the national health. When the generic system of medicines was introduced in the country one could see life-saving drugs being produced and packed in the dingy streets under most unhygenic conditions. Their preparation was not backed by any research as was the case with the drugs manufactured for firms of repute. Thus the sub-standard drugs had not only no efficacy but they also proved a drain on the national exchequer. The medical practitioner was wondering as to why the patient was not responding to the drug and his treatment. Was it due to some error in the diagnosis? The patient on the other hand was losing confidence in his doctor. The chemists were baited by the manufacturers by allowing them high margins of commission to sell their sub-standard products. The last two were thriving on the hard-earned money of the poor man. Then there is the case of electrical goods manufactured in the country whose very durability is questionable. The specifications as set by government are totally ignored in their case with the result that inferior quality goods with not much of durability have to be purchased over and over again and thus causing a drain on the pockets of the people. Still the manufacturers and those responsible for the enforcement of the quality control in this industry are unmoved.

Government has banned the import of foreign goods and with stringent measures recently adopted the smuggled items have not totally disappeared from the local market but the indigenous goods are yet to take their place. One may rightly question the need for the production of such goods. It is about time proper heed was paid to such things and a lot could be done if there is the will. The present government has taken upon itself the responsibility of cleaning the aegen stables and the rubbish left by the previous regimes. But for one, the Government alone cannot do everything by itself. We would appeal to the consumers as well to come out with a helping hand and boycott patronising such products which are of sub-standard and thus expose the manufacturers. At the same time newspapers and other media of publicity should exercise greater restraint and project only those products which they honestly consider to be of real use to the people. Let us all make a crusade against such evils so as to restore national pride and our ardent desire for using our own products. Only then we will become real Pakistanis.

WORLD BANK REPORT ON ECONOMY

Karachi MORNING NEWS in English 26 Sep 81 p 7

[Article by A. T. Chaudhri]

[Text]

THE national economic scene sketched by the World Bank in its Annual Report (1981), against the backdrop of "mild global downturn", has both bright and bleak features which characterise most of the economies of South Asia. But the analysis of the plus points in the national economy, for which the IBRD and IMF claim some credit, and the assessment of the current and potential constraints on growth, call for a more forthright reappraisal.

The Bank's Report on Pakistan bristles with generalisations. Speaking of the upturn in agricultural output and revival of industrial growth — slower in fiscal 1981 than in 1980 — the Bank says the expansion was made possible by a host of factors. These were: good weather, steady rise in exports and migrants remittances, incentives provided to private sector, general budgetary situation, public and national savings, control of inflationary spiral, rescheduling of external debts and last but not least, moderation of balance-of-payments pressures through an accord with the IMF for an Extended Fund Facility — "the largest granted by the Fund so far." (Page 32).

The "recent achievements" have also been attributed to the stimulus offered by the stewards of the economy to private investment and exports, tougher standards of financial performance, reduced inefficiency in public manufacturing sector, investment in quick yielding agricultural projects and improvement in support services and higher crop prices.

Problems

The Report has however, brought into focus some of the "principal problems which block the economy's surge ahead. these are: "low productivity in agriculture an inefficient public industrial sector, slow growth in large-scale private industry, heavy dependence on imported energy supplies a low level of domestic savings and a high rate of population growth" Such generalisations would hardly impress independent observers of Pakistan's economic landscape.

The fact is that Pakistan is currently in the grip of an economic crisis. It has been accentuated — partly though — by the role of the World Bank and this country's Extended Fund Facility accord with the IMF — "the lender of last resort" to Most Seriously Affected (MSA) countries.

True, Pakistan has managed an annual growth rate of about 5 per cent as the Bank points out. But what it fails to pinpoint is that this growth is more a result of the expansion of service sectors than of agriculture and industry. Notwithstanding near-autarky in wheat, there are structural obstacles to the growth of agriculture. The heavy inputs in the past few years have largely helped the mechanised sub-sector, and not the agrarian economy as a whole.

In industry, the growth is below the target owing mainly to sluggish investment. In contrast to agriculture and industry, the service sectors are buoyant — thanks to the inflow of migrants' remittances, although these too, have lately slowed down and the steady inflow of foreign credits, which in the longrun are going to add to the debt repayment problem.

Then, the monetary scene is quite disturbing because of the unsavoury rise in the inflationary spiral. The annual rate of inflation in fiscal 1981 may touch a new high — 20 per cent — since investment is running ahead of savings and inflated imports are outstripping exports. The operations of black money in the free market mechanism have assumed menacing proportions, as is evident from the recent skyrocketing of the prices of pulses.

Subsidies

Again, the freedom of the managers of economy has been considerably circumscribed by the conclusion the new agreement with the IMF. We have been obliged to cut subsidies, throw open the market to inflation-ridden imports, expose domestic industry to the hazards of foreign competition, freeze the wages and abandon the liberal labour policy. Where will all this lead to? These trends may breed social unrest and economic discontents.

In recent months, the IMF and the World Bank have made an "intensive" study of our mounting economic problems. Their causes have been spotlighted but proper cures have not been prescribd. The suggested recipes if uncritically accepted can only benefit overseas interest groups. And their implementation would hardly leave any scope for harmonising economic and social policies and satisfying popular urges, so essential for developing country.

Pakistan has to depend on its own eminent economists, rather than on foreign analysts, for a thorough and incisive analysis of the present economic malaise and pursuit of correct policies to put the economy on an even keel. Particular attention has to be paid to foreign debt management and development strategy on which the World Bank Report is silent. Meaningful economic policies have to be evolved — and evolved independently — to make use of the regulatory economic instrument of planning, instead of concentrating on expenditure sanctions for projects promoted by diverse interest groups, here and abroad.

There is an imperative need to analyse development problems in the correct national perspective draw up labour-intensive and employment-oriented plans and implement these with short-term and long-term action programmes. In this task, Pakistan could draw upon the experience of the Third World countries who have already reached the threshold of self-reliance. That way alone can we rescue the national economy from its current impasse, arrest its downhill slide in the future and give it a measure of self-generating progress and buoyancy, which cannot be done by placing it on the foreign crutches of IBRD or IMF.

Now as a beneficiary of the World Bank, Pakistan has so far received 900 million dollar in aid out of 68,000 million dollar loaned by the Bank to the developing countries. The International Development Association (IDA) has extended credits worth 1,500 million dollar to Pakistan. This figure is less than one-sixth of what has been advanced to India. The IMF has lent billions of dollars to its members; it has pledged 1.7 billion dollar to Pakistan, on the understanding that we accept its old role as a watchman of the exchange rate management rules and also its new role as an "international financial policeman."

Unfortunately, some of the policies recommended by the IMF and the World Bank as a prerequisite to loaning are questionable. Both are protectors of the global interests of industrialised nations and their pledges carry the usual strings. The conditions attached may help Pakistan overcome short-term problems, but in the long term it may find its economy more and more hitched to the First World — even lying at the mercy of donors.

The IMF, it should be noted has of late come under severe criticism of the Third World because of the new mantles it has assumed. For example, the policies it tries to impose on the recipients of aid are "too free-market oriented": it makes little distinction between "internally and externally generated balance of payments problems": then, it does not hesitate to push its beneficiaries too for into borrowing on any terms."

Spectacular

All this underlines the imperative need to rationalise the policies of the IMF and IBRD. Their 36th annual meeting is scheduled to be held, at Washington, in a few days from now. Some 141 countries, including Pakistan, will participate in what has been described as a "spectacular concourse of global experts."

One should like to hope that Pakistan, in concert with other developing countries, will do some plain speaking at Washington to strike a new balance between the conflicting interests of lenders and borrowers. The objective interests of the world economy can be served only if institutions like the World Bank and the IMF revamp their policies to bridge the widening gap between the capitalist and proletariat nations. The Washington concourse should not turn into "a dialogue of the deaf."

PUBLIC, PRIVATE SECTORS FLOURISH SIDE BY SIDE

Karachi MORNING NEWS in English 26 Sep 81 pp 1, 5

[Text] Federal Minister for Production, Lt-Gen Saeed Qadir, yesterday stressed the need for doubling effort towards training in management at various levels in the country.

Inaugurating the three-day convention on "Management challenges in the 80s" held under the auspices of the Management Association of Pakistan at Hotel Inter-Continental, the Minister stated that the public sector industries in the country were taking a lead in demonstrating the advantage of running the industry on the basis of modern management practices. The public sector management cadre, he remarked, was the single biggest source for feeding the growth of any industry now being set up by the private enterprise. The challenge of brain-drain in the public sector, he suggested, could be met by making greater effort towards training more better people who would fill the managerial ranks in the future.

Severe Blow

The Minister said the growth of a strong management cadre was stunted during the past decade for two fundamental reasons. Firstly, managerial cadres were denied reasonable incentives and secondly, the over centralisation of authority after nationalisation of major industries.

This coupled with brain-drain from among the managerial cadre was a severe blow to the growth of industry in the country.

The consequences of such a massive nationalisation aside, the direct result of the brain-drain on the on-going industries was disastrous, he remarked. The paintaking efforts with which the managerial cadres were progressing in the decade of 60s were washed away in the decade of 70s, he said.

The present Government during the past four years, Gen. Qadir said, had made a gradual effort to rebuild the morale of this cadre to help restore the growth of industry. "The Government has to play a dominant role in expediting rehabilitation programme on management," he added.

Discussing the effect of large scale nationalisation, the Minister said it shattered the confidence of private entrepreneurs. The present Government had demonstrated by its policy and action during the last four years that private and public sectors could flourish side by side without impinging on the growth of either sector. He felt in a country like Pakistan there was socio-economic justification to allow fair amount of growth of both the public and private sectors.

PUBLIC SECTOR

Reviewing the functioning of the public sector industries which are controlled by eight corporations, the Minister said efficiency of these units should not be judged purely on the basis of accounting profits. There are other important factors to be taken into account while assessing the efficiency of any unit.

However, he said, "if these units" abound with inefficiencies, it would certainly reflect in our profitability."

"What I presume is implied by these 'so-called inefficiencies' is that we could make perhaps much larger profits if we adopt some of the practices followed by private enterprise."

PRIVATE SECTOR

Regretting the response of the private sector, the Minister said, it had been hedging over investment in the field of sugar, cement and fertilizer. He said no government could afford to create a vacuum in the uplift of living standard of its people. Under such circumstances, he suggested, gap must be filled by the public sector. Consequently, the Punjab and Sind Governments had to set up eight sugar mills.

He, however, said as the climate for investment appears to be improving the private entrepreneurs were willing to risk their money. The Government had already announced disinvestment plan of these mills.

He said although sanction had been accorded for setting up 13 cement plants in the private sector, the response so far was not very encouraging.

He hoped deliberations of this convention would lead to fruitful results and help bridge the gap between the public and private sectors.

WELCOME ADDRESS

Mr D. M. Qureshi, Managing Director, Bankers Equity called upon the public and private sectors to develop professional managers to relentlessly pursue corporate objectives with sincerity of purpose.

He was presenting his address of welcome as the President of Management Association of Pakistan.

Mr Qureshi dealt at length the economic scenario of the country and emphasised the need of reforming the structure of the public sector. He said that public sector had an important social role to play and a public enterprise should exist purely for strategic or economic reasons. He believed that economic profit was more important than accounting profit.

Mr Qureshi said that translated into monetary terms, the resulting efficiency bonus for the public sector would amount to Rs. 2.5 billion in 1980-81 and would be equal to 1 per cent of our GDP. He further said that if these funds were transferred to the Government, these would provide revenues equivalent to 53 per cent of direct taxes, or 82 per cent of all foreign grants and assistance and would be sufficient to finance increases of 46 per cent in total Government expenditure on education or 49 per cent in direct Federal development expenditure.

He suggested that operational efficiency in the public sector might be achieved by reducing the number of units under its control through a controlled disinvestment policy and by reducing the number of sector corporations.

Mr Qureshi gave a detailed outline for disinvesting public sector projects to the private sector. He advocated that the Government should adopt a phased disinvestment programme for some of the public sector projects in a manner which gave the Government an opportunity to oversee the operations of the project in the initial years.

The convention would continue its deliberations for two days and is being attended by prominent managers from the public and private sectors in the country.

TUT OILFIELD OUTPUT--Islamabad, Sept 19--The Attock Oil Refinery is expected to remain under-utilised for quite some time because the output at the Tut Oilfield, which was supposed to provide the bulk of refinery's requirement, has become static. According to the latest reports, the Tut-11 and Tut-12 have run into difficulty, and the producing wells, Tut-6, Tut-7, Tut-4 and Tut-10A, are giving only about 1,500 barrels per day. The refinery has the total capacity of about 25,000 BPD and is based on light crude. The refinery expansion, undertaken last year, was based on the supposition that Kazian oilwell would provide about 5,000 BPD. This well has been abandoned due to high pressure underground water. Originally, a refinery was programmed to be placed at the end of the pipeline near Multan but later on this was changed. An oil expert said that original decision would have saved the national exchequer about Rs 1,500 million a year. Meanwhile, the second credit of the World Bank for the development of the Tut Oilfield has not yet materialised. [Text] [Islamabad THE MUSLIM in English 20 Sep 81 p 1]

SIND SOLAR ENERGY UNITS--Hyderabad, Sept 23--The Sind Governor, Lt Gen S. M. Abbasi here today directed the Sind Agriculture Minister, to install four solar energy generating units on experimental basis, in the province. He said this, while on a visit to the specially arranged demonstration of solar energy generation, by an experimental unit placed at the local Circuit House, on the occasion of the second Annual Wheat Prize Award ceremony. Lt Gen Abbasi taking keen interest in the demonstration and details provided on it's operation in Pakistan, by the company representative, expressed the hope that the same could prove beneficial in extending much-needed power to the tubewells, run in remote agrarian zones. While dedicated efforts were under way to undertake the planned village-electrification programme, the new technique could be an enormous help. The Sind Governor directed Sardar Ghulam Mohammad Mahar, to plan installation of four solar energy units, to run them on experiment basis, to be extensively adopted later, if found successful and economical. The private company representative briefing the Sind Governor stated the company had tested the operation of it's varied capacity solar energy power units at different places in Pakistan. CONTRABAND GOODS SEIZURE--Karachi, Sept 23--The customs drug enforcement cell unearthed another racket of forged forms 'A' and arrested one person in this connection, official sources said here today. Contraband goods worth Rs 5,28,000 imported against these forms were also seized. These included 12 refrigerators, colour television sets, 9 washing machines, two steel trunks, 9 cartons, one wooden crate, containing contraband goods. The arrested person was named Mohammed Iqbal. NEW TEXTILE MILLS--Karachi, Sept--About 50 new textile mills with a combined installed capacity of over 700,000 spindles and 2,500 looms have been set up during the past four years, it was revealed here yesterday. Besides, it is said, 50,000 spindles and 11,000 looms are under installation. The expansion of the textile industry has been brought about by various measures taken by the present government to stimulate private investment. As a result of the concessions given in customs duty on balancing and modernisation of existing plants, knowledgeable quarters said, by end of June 1981 an investment of Rs 300 million has already been made by the management of the existing units. Similarly, a number of sick units have changed hands and many of them are reported to have improved their performance. In fact some of these units are reported to have even improved the quality of yarn and are competing favourably with the Koreans in price in overseas markets. Thus the number of closed or partially closed spindles is estimated to be over 4 lakh, not accounting for the mills which have been completely closed or scrapped. The country has an installed capacity of some 3.7 million spindles and 20,000 looms and about 2.25 spindles and over 13,000 spindles are now in operation. SMUGGLERS FOILED--The Airport Custom yesterday foiled a bid of currency smuggling and seized Pak Rs 22 lakh from a Dubai-bound passenger. The custom officials had received an information that huge Pakistani currency would be smuggled out of the country, after which a constant vigil was started on the outgoing passengers. During surveillance, the custom officials became suspicious of a passenger Shahid Mahmood who was due to leave for Dubai by the Gulf Air flight 761. After the suspect completed the airlines briefing formalities the custom officials subjected him to intensive interrogation. Later his suitcase was searched which resulted in the recovery of Pak Rs 22 lakh concealed in the inside of the suitcase in a thermosoic packing layers. The officials seized the currency and arrested the passenger. Preliminary inquiries revealed that the accused was engaged in construction business and was holding residential visa of Dubai. Further investigation is in progress and the custom investigators are on the look out of other persons behind the currency smuggling racket. Last year custom officials also foiled two attempts of smuggling out Pakistani currency amounting to Rs 46 lakh.--APP [Text] [Karachi MORNING NEWS in English 28 Sep 81 p 5]

SECOND MAJOR SAUDI CONTRACT--Jeddah, Sept 23--The Airport Development Agency (ADA) of Pakistan has been awarded a dollar 225 million housing project contract with the King Khaled military city at Hafar Al-Batin, the Pakistan embassy reported. This is second major project to be awarded to ADA in the city. With the award of the new contract, the total value of projects the company is participating amounts to more than dollar 500 million. In the Kingdom where it employs nearly 4,000 workers, including 300 engineers and supervisors, the ADA has developed technical facilities worth dollar 120 million at the Dharan base and has participated in civil projects for the dollar 90 million Al-Kharj electrification project. FALSE PROPAGANDA SPREAD--Chitral, Sept 24--The NWFP Governor, Lt.-General Fazle Haq, has said that those elements who are spreading baseless propaganda to create differences between the local population and the Afghan refugees were neither sincere to Pakistan nor Islam. He was addressing a mammoth public meeting in Chitral on Thursday morning. General Fazle Haq in his speech spoke at length regarding external and internal policies of the government. His speech was interrupted frequently with prolonged applause and slogans of Islam Zindabad, Pakistan Zindabad, General Ziaul Haq Zindabad and General Fazle Haq Zindabad. The Governor told his audience that a handful of elements were criticising the presence of refugees in Pakistan to obtain their nefarious designs. He reminded the people that these elements were related to those saboteurs who are sitting now in Kabul for subversive activities. NATION'S EXTERNAL DEBT RISES TO $14-BILLION

Manila PHILIPPINES DAILY EXPRESS in English 14 Sep 81 p 10

[Text]

THE country's external debt amounted to $14.14 billion as of end-June this year, posting an 11-percent increase over the $12.70 billion registered at the close of 1981, according to the Central Bank.

In a report made public over the weekend, the CB also placed the country's debt service ratio – a key element in assessing the nation's ability to repay foreign loans – at 19.2 percent this year.

The CB added, the debt service ratio could rise to 19.4 percent next year.

For the current year, the CB said the debt service burden or the amount of loans the country will have to repay would be $1.74 billion.

THE highlights of the CB report on the country's outstanding external debt follows:

• P10.45 billion or 74 percent of the external debt are fixed-term credits and $9.62 billion or 92 percent are long-term loans. Of the overall long-term credits, $3.35 billion or 35 percent represent official development assistance (ODA) which mature in 15 years or more.

• Revolving credits amounted to $3.70 billion or 26 percent, $702 million or 23-percent more than the end-1980 level of almost $3 billion.

• Outstanding CB loans (these exclude loans from the International Monetary Fund amounting to $1.15 billion) rose to $1.37 billion from the end-1980 figure of $1.18 billion. This was traced to the bank's availment of $99 million new loans under the consolidated foreign borrowing program and $97 million oil loans.

• Foreign loans tapped during the January-June period reached $4.06 billion, while principal and interest payments totalled $3.31 billion. This resulted in a net total inflow (of foreign loans) of $757 million.

• Refinancing loans availed of by the country hit $136 million, all of which were for the private sector.

• Japan, the US, Hongkong and United Kingdom remained the top sources of fixed-term loans for the country. The respective shares of these countries in the Philippine external debt follow: Japan – $2.12 billion; US – $2.02 billion; Hongkong – $974 million and UK – $693 million.

• Foreign loans granted by offshore banking units (OBUs) to private firms and government agencies were $917 million and $722 million, respectively, for a total of $1.64 billion. Of the total, $827 million were revolving credits and the rest fixed-term loans.

MARCOS PICKED UNCLE TO BE CHIEF OF STAFF, BIO DATA

Kuala Lumpur ASIAN DEFENSE JOURNAL in English Oct 81 p 18

[Text]

Philippines President Marcos had recently promoted and appointed his uncle, General Fabian Ver, to become the country's Chief of Staff. In doing so President Marcos had paid deference to a more senior officer and relative — which actually counts a lot in the Philippine style of patron-client party politics. The other contender for the post, a younger officer with very good academic credentials, is Marcos own cousin, Major General Fidel Ramos.

Ramos is well liked just like Ver. Unlike the latter, he is more exposed to academic training and could have done the same job equally well. He is also known to be more pro-America mainly because of his training background. However, he has no reasons to be unhappy about Ver's appointment — simply because he is the next best person for the post. He would not have to wait too long for his turn - if he plays the game well.

Much has been made of the controversy between uncle and cousin - unnecessary comments on both characters. Indeed, it would be argued that the task to select the top man was difficult for President Marcos. Both are relatives, efficient and of good calibre. The only thing against Ramos which many dismissed, was his age. In the Asian society, given everything equal, in such a fix it is normal to pay deference to age.

The Far Eastern Economic Review has depicted Ramos as pro-America. Even though the journal does not say what it means in many words, the implications are well known. We would like to offer a different perspective from the Review. We feel that if it is true that Ramos is pro-America, he would be a good candidate - at the time when Manila is trying to patch things up with Washington.

Ver was appointed because he is more senior and closer to Marcos. Age and his alleged pro-American attitudes had very little to do with Marcos decision not to appoint Ramos, whose intellect is well respected by Marcos.

Knowing Ramos he would not demur at not being selected. He knew he had to wait for his turn. Indeed, the atmosphere would be more difficult if he was appointed in place of Ver - his own senior relative. Given everything equal, Marcos choice of Ver for his Chief of Staff is very appropriate. Of course, it would make many people happy if he were to break away from traditions and give Ramos a four-star rank. That would silence Ramos critics and would enhance his own standing. Properly managed the whole family controversy would have a happy ending. □

KKK: A TOTAL DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

Manila PHILIPPINES DAILY EXPRESS in English 14 Sep 81 pp 4, 5

[Article by Jesus C. Sison]

[Text]

THERE HAS never been a more comprehensive approach to national development than the Kilusang Kabuhayan at Kaunlaran.

In the past, we had the total Economic Mobilization Program of President Quirino and the Emergency Employment Administration of President Macapagal. The Total Economic Mobilization Program was a blueprint for industrialization. It sought to transform a basically agricultural economy into an industrial one. Although it failed to take off due to the defeat of President Quirino in 1953, the program became a basis for future industrialization policies.

The EEA was bound to fail from the start because it was a program for massive employment. It was meant to generate labor without taking into consideration other ramifications. The government became the main source of employment funds. The project became a political tool and thus became as big a flop as it was a big idea.

THE KKK is an entirely different concept. It approaches the problems of development from all aspects, including small-scale industries and agro-business ventures. It is a challenge to the Filipino ingenuity and enterprise.

But like all other projects, the KKK has to contend with problems or pitfalls, as some observers are wont to say. These problems are, as usual, brought about by men of both well-meaning and ill intentions.

Red tape, of course, has always been the scourge of all government projects. The implementors of the KKK must see to it that red tape is eradicated or minimized from the planning board to implementation.

NOT TO BE overlooked is the reluctance of people in the rural areas to accept new ideas. This is due to long-standing traditions and beliefs. The farmers and the fishermen in the far-flung villages of the country would rather continue doing what they and their fathers and grandfathers have been doing the past many years than adopt new and untried ideas and methods.

In the construction of Pantabangan Dam, it took a long time before the residents agreed to be transferred to a new site. They did not want to leave the place where their lives and history had taken roots. They were used to a way of living. When they were transferred to a new townsite in a nearby upland area, they felt dislocated. Up to now, the Pantabangan residents are still finding it difficult to adjust to new ways of livelihood.

Another problem is the dole-out mentality of the people. This may hurt the pride and sensitivity of many, but it is true. A great number of the people think that everything the government gives is a dole-out.

There is also the tendency of many Filipinos to postpone the settlement of loans and other obligations. This is no more evident than in the delayed payment of Masagana loans and the amortization of farms transferred to tenant-farmers under the land transfer program. In Nueva Ecija alone, farmers in 16 out of 29 towns are very much behind in the payment of their amortizations.

MARKETING has always been a problem. Farmers, upon the encouragement of government officials, have gone into massive production of cash crops, mostly perishable goods like vegetables. But how many times did they have bountiful harvests only to see their produce rot because of lack of transportation and storage?

Politicians can also pose a danger to the realization of KKK objectives. It is of common knowledge that relatives and friends of many local executives have established their contracting and construction firms and are cornering local contracts for construction, equipment and supplies.

Even now businessmen are already going around towns and provinces with proposals for business ventures under the KKK program. The only concern of these businessmen is profit.

There are also unscrupulous persons going around rural and urban areas claiming to be influential and close to high government officials. These persons will attempt to take advantage of the KKK as they have taken advantage of several government projects. They swindle the small entrepreneurs of their hard-earned money. They always prey on the misinformed and the uninformed in the provinces and villages.

THE PEOPLE should realize their stakes and the benefits they can derive from the KKK. Conscious of all these, they will know how to safeguard their rights and interests from unscrupulous politicians, businessmen and operators or hustlers.

In the case of politicians, President Marcos gave his assurance that they will have nothing to do with the handling of funds for KKK projects. The government, almost certainly, will disburse the funds in the form of loans or equity through existing banks throughout the country. This way, the money loaned out or invested in KKK projects will earn interest in the process.

It has been pointed out that the KKK can generate some 150,000 job opportunities every year. This means much to the army of unemployed Filipinos who numbered some 797,000 at the end of 1980. Our total labour force, as of the fourth quarter of 1980 was 18,543,000 of which 17,746,000 or 95.7 percent were employed.

The KKK will work. The government will see to it that it does. President Marcos is committed to its success.

There are hundreds of projects throughout the country that can qualify under the KKK program. The people are aware of this. They were hindered in the past by lack of capital and motivation. Now the KKK has the answer.

FOREIGN FIRMS CORNERING GOVERNMENT CONSTRUCTION JOBS

Manila PHILIPPINES DAILY EXPRESS in English 14 Sep 81 p 10

[Text]

FOREIGN contractors continue to outmaneuver the local boys in clinching multi-million-peso construction jobs, most of which are government funded, industry observers indicated yesterday.

They still dominate the construction market, observers pointed out, citing the recent entry of a Taiwanese contractor who won a $310-million contract to build a trade center here and 100,000 housing units.

What is lamentable, they said, is that foreign contractors get the juicy contracts and the Filipinos, the leftovers, all because they offer the lowest bids and tempering terms.

(Foreign contractors, such as Nam Kwang, which has been undertaking large road construction projects by the Ministry of Public Highways for the past years, is subsidized by the South Korean government in terms of operational funds and heavy equipment and spare parts.)

OBSERVERS cited as examples five commercial ports which the Ministry of Public Works had just awarded. The biggest, the Cebu port project worth P251 million, went to the Marubeni of Japan, and the rest, consisting of smaller contracts, spread out to the local builders.

They said that of the total contracts bidded out by agencies like the National Power Corp., National Electrification Authority and the National Irrigation Administration, apart from those of the public works and highways ministry, only about 14.3 percent actually went to Filipino contractors.

The so-called lion's share of some P28.67 billion was gobbled up by foreign contractors that now include Kumho, Hyundai, Nam Kwang and Marubeni, whose proceeds of the contracts have been siphoned out, observers said.

A breakdown showed that in 1979, of the contracts won by local firms, Construction and Development Corp. of the Philippines got only 5.9 percent; Atlantic Gulf and Pacific Co., 2.1 percent; Engineering Equipment, Inc., 2 percent; Hydro Resources Corp., 1.7 percent; Erectors Inc., 1.3 percent; and D.M. Consunji, Inc., 0.6 percent.

These firms, now engaged in overseas construction, can equal their foreign competitors in terms of expertise and equipment. But still they are elbowed out after the biddings by the foreign contractors.

FOUR RIZAL TOWNS TO GET P10.6 MILLION

Manila PHILIPPINES DAILY EXPRESS in English 14 Sep 81 p 13

[Text]

SOME P10.6 million has been programmed by the Laguna de Bay Development Project-Irrigation Component (LLDP-IC) for the improvement of several communal irrigation projects (CIP's) and construction of new ones in the towns of Morong, Baras, Tanay and Pililla in Rizal.

A total of 950 hectares will be irrigated by the irrigation program which is designed to pump water from the Laguna Lake to supplement the present water supply in the area.

This was disclosed by project manager Maximino A. Eclipse in a recent dialogue with he farmers and the municipal officials of Pililla headed by Mayor Nicomedes Patena.

The program of work includes the construction of access roads, intake facilities, canal and service roads, canals, pumping stations and pipe lines.

The project which had already started is due for completion by March 1983, as per original implementation schedule. (OMA-IV)

MEANWHILE, P100,954,210 was earmarked for the implementation of various priority projects throughout the Southern Tagalog under the Ministry of Public Works and Highways infrastructure program.

Regional director Eduardo Lagunilla said the biggest budgetary share of P51,397,810 representing 50.9 percent of the total is alloted for the construction, repair and rehabilitation of school buildings. This include those funded out of the United States Economic Support Fund amounting to P14,203,810.

THE SECOND largest capital outlay amounting to P26,768,000 or 26.5 percent is for the construction, repair and improvement of several priority flood control and drainage projects. This is followed by water supply at P11,232,200; hospital and health units, P5,471,000; portworks P4,925,200; national buildings, P600,000; lighthouses, P360,000, and shore protection, P200,000, Lagunilla added.

He mentioned that the current infrastructure activities of the region includes the completion of some 1153 carry-over projects of various categories valued at a total cost of P34,731,602. (OMA-IV)

FOREIGN MARKET FOR NATION'S WORKERS GOOD

Manila PHILIPPINES DAILY EXPRESS in English 15 Sep 81 p 5

[Article by Michael A. Bengwayan]

[Text]

THE MARKET abroad for Filipino skilled workers has remained strong despite a temporary slack in recruitment for countries experiencing political crisis.

An Overseas Employment Development Board (OEDB) report said numerous specific skills are still in demand in particular Middle East and African countries which constitute immediate markets for Philippine skilled labor.

It cited Saudi Arabia, Nigeria, Kuwait and the Arab Emirates as top potential labor market for Filipinos.

Iran was temporarily ruled out as a destination country for Filipino workers because of the uncertain political conditions in that country.

Before the crisis, 2,360 Filipino skilled workers found employment in Iran, OEDB records show. Today, its total manpower needs stand at 700,000. High on the "help wanted" list are 3,000 medical workers, 16,000 engineers and 42,000 technicians.

BULK OF Filipino skilled workers placed overseas in the last few years are involved in Saudi Arabia's infrastructure and public projects.

In Nigeria, ranked seventh world oil producer, less than 1,000 Filipinos have already been recruited, according to OEDB. A delegation from that country which came here recently indicated interest in recruiting more Filipinos, particularly engineers and technicians.

In the United States and Europe, traditional markets for Filipino labor, foreign employment demand has shown promising signs after a temporary slack, arguing well for Filipinos available for overseas placement. Germany, England, Italy, Belgium and Austria continue to recruit nurses from the Philippines, said OEDB.

Placement opportunities are equally encouraging in Oceania and Asia, according to OEDB. An example is Papua New Guinea whose long term programs will certainly need foreign recruits.

Citing its national health plan for 1974-78 alone, OEDB said it had required 372 health inspectors, 4,675, its demand for medical and health workers has been on the rise.

IN THE entertainment field, Filipino musicians, singers and performing artists continue to be in demand abroad, particularly in Japan, where about 40 percent of foreign entertainers are Filipinos.

The city state of Singapore is perhaps one of the new markets for talented Filipino professionals, said the OEDB. Jobs ranging from administrators, engineers, doctors, teachers, construction workers, dentists, surveyors, writers and computer operators are open to foreigners.

Among the trust territories like Guam, the Philippines continues to be the preferred source of manpower because of the Filipino proficiency in English and acknowledged adaptability.

OEDB admitted that not all of these foreign job placements were working satisfactorily.

SALE OF COCONUT OIL TO INDIA, CHINA EYED

Manila PHILIPPINES DAILY EXPRESS in English 19 Sep 81 p 10

[Article by Samuel V. Senoren]

[Text]

THE Philippines will try to sell coconut oil to India and export some more to China to help improve the depressed condition of the local coconut industry.

According to Prime Minister Cesar A. E. Virata, the two countries are being considered for further market development because traditional importers have either slowed down or completely stopped their coconut oil purchases.

The industry is reported to have a huge inventory of coconut oil which can't be sold in the world market because prices are either too low or buyers are hard to find.

Virata said the government will send a mission to China to brief Chinese officials on the commercial and industrial uses of coconut oil.

Among the applications of coconut oil is its use as a fuel mix to power transportation.

VIRATA also said that an expanded nutrition program would require the use of as much as 100,000 metric tons of cooking oil which comes from coconut oil.

Copra trading has slowed considerably during the past months and prices took a dive soon after the coconut levy was removed.

Virata said however that the levy and the low copra prices should not really be connected because the primary factor for the low copra prices is the depressed condition in the international coconut oil market.

At present, there is an oversupply of fats and oils in the world market and a bumper crop in soya bean production whose oil derivative is being effectively used as a substitute for coconut oil.

IN referring to the beneficiaries of the levy such as insurance for farmers and scholarship programs, the industry may have to do its own assessment instead of doing it through the Philippine Coconut Authority, Virata said.

Before the levy was discontinued, its proceeds were used to finance various programs which gave the industry a sense of direction.

These include the acquisition of a commercial bank, coconut oil milling facilities, hybridization to increase productivity, insurance and scholarship benefits for coconut farmers.

BOI ATTRACTS FOREIGN INVESTMENTS

[Text] More than P8 billion in foreign investments have entered the country since the enactment of the Investment Incentives Law in 1967.

These investment accounted for 40 percent of the P20.64-billion equity which private concerns invested in business ventures set up under the law, according to Edgardo Tordesillas, vice chairman of the Board of Investments (BOI) and deputy industry minister.

He said the share of foreign equity in the investments in priority projects merely reflect the government's policy of encouraging the inflow of foreign capital to the Philippines.

But this posture of "encouraging foreign investments," he stressed, does not mean less regulations (for the entry of foreign investors into the country).

FRG ANTITERRORISM COMMANDOS--Three members of the crack West Germany commando unit which took part in the daring rescue operation in a skyjack drama in Mogadishu three years ago, made a secret visit to Singapore recently. The identities the German police officers, who made international headlines, were not known. It is believed they have been invited here to conduct "clinics" on security matters for both police and army commando units. Sources said the topics raised by the German police experts which included a psychologist, were their experiences in anti-terrorism work, including hostages rescue situations. Observers linked the commando's visit to the forthcoming opening of the Singapore Changi Airport. The multi-million dollar ultra-modern airport became partly operational from July 1. Like the police and army, the West German embassy here was also tight-lipped about the commandos' presence. The police unit left Singapore after a week-long visit. The crack unit's sensational operation involved a raid on a hijacked Lufthansa plane at Somalia's Mogadishu airport in October 1977, rescuing all 85 hostages on board. The two-minute operation left three hijackers dead and one wounded. There were no police casualties. [Text] [Kuala Lumpur ASIAN DEFENSE JOURNAL in English Oct 81 p 13]

BORDER OFFICIALS SAY RELATIONS WITH LAOS ARE GOOD

Bangkok THE NATION REVIEW in English 22 Sep 81 p 4

[Text]

NONG KHAI

LOCAL OFFICIALS say recent trends on both sides of the Mekong River indicate gradual improvement in relations between Thailand and Laos. But most officials are cautiously optimistic. "We are keeping our fingers crossed. So far, so good," one of them says.

Officials at all border provinces on the Mekong have been told to contribute efforts to convincing Laotian authorities and people that Thailand intends to turn the Mekong River into the "River of Peace and Prosperity," despite the flareup of tension along the common border earlier this year.

Gunfire was exchanged for several days over the Mekong River in the latest clash between Thailand and Laos in February, this year, prompting the Thai Government to order a 14-day closure of the border to keep down the degree of confrontation. As of Feb 23, only Tha Sadet and the cargo ferry checkpoints at this border province have been reopened.

A local senior official told The Nation: "Since then, there have been no incidents along the Thai-Lao border. The situation in general could be said to have returned to normal. The trend, we are happy to report, is encouraging..."

Today's scene is a stark contrast to the scene back in February when heavy guns thundered across the river, and Amphoe Ponepisai, only 45 kms from the Nong Khai provincial proper, was hit by Laotian gunfire, with some casualties on both sides.

Since then, cautious local officials, sometimes not too certain about the central government in Bangkok's political policy at a certain time, would only say, in response to questions about relations with Laos, that everything was in accordance with the joint communique signed by the two governments in 1979 during the Kriangsak Chomanan government.

Breach of that joint communique since 1979 is not unheard of, of course, especially with the growing suspicion following the increasing presence of Vietnam in Laos.

The Thai Foreign Ministry, in its broadcasts over Free Radio Asia, has noticeably toned down its direct verbal attacks against Laos. In fact, the thrust of the Thai statements, whenever Laos was involved, has been to cast Vietnam as the main agitator and manipulator of anti-Thai actions taken by the Laotian Government.

"We understand the Laotian Government. We are sympathetic with their position. And we would like to show that by avoiding any souring of relations with Laos," said a senior Thai official.

Meetings between Thai and Laotian senior officials have taken place, although without much publicity. "The meetings have improved mutual understanding of the need for both countries to pursue a peaceful co-existence policy," another senior Thai official said.

Informed sources said that about two months ago, a meeting of senior officials from all provinces border Laos at Nakhon Ratchasima called by the National Security Council served to stress the government policy to cultivate better relations with Laos.

"There was nothing very new in the meeting. The emphasis was to follow strictly the Thai-Lao joint communique so that the implementation would be assured. The meeting also served to get all concerned officials together to follow the same policy so that the everyone-on-his-own trend would be done away with, once and for all," said a Northeastern official who took part in the meeting.

The conference also offered a chance for the local officials to raise problems related to policy-implemention with policy-makers from Bangkok so that a clear picture could be thrashed out.

In Nong Khai here, local officials say they have tried to improve relations with Laos through the local provincial-level joint committee comprising representatives from Nong Khai and Vientiane.

The previous vitriolic verbal attacks on radio broadcasts from both the Laotian radio and the Thai station have come to a halt. The newspapers on both sides have also been stressing the positive side.

"We have held three Thai-Lao sporting events. And the events will continue in the future, with each other alternating as host," local officials said.

A Thai dancing troupe recently visited Vientiane for a friendship show. Vientiane has been invited to send over a dancing troupe to the Thai side. Such cultural and sporting exchanges are beginning to smoothen things over on the Mekong River.

A Thai member of the joint provincial-level committee said: "We don't normally have problems with the Laotian officials. After the meetings which dealt with some serious problems, we even joked and teased one another. Yes, the atmosphere has improved noticeably..."

The Thai side has also responded more positively to Vientiane's requests for more lenient regulations concerning the movement of goods in transit through Thailand destined for Laos. Strategic goods have come under close scrutiny by Thai officials. "But if the commodities are really meant for the Laotian people, we usually process the goods rapidly. We just don't want the foreign elements in Laos to get the benefit from the goods transitted through Thailand," said another Thai official.

Thai officials at the policy-making level are now also trying to "synchronize" the trade and political policies. The border closure and stricter controls on the movements of troops at one time had affected Thai border trade.

Relaxation has also been noticeable in this northeastern province recently, for local people on both sides of the river to cross the river for their daily trading although the total volume of trading has gone down drastically since the February closure of the borders.

The absence of hostile words in itself marks a significant improvement in the Thai-Lao relations. All signs point to a further "return to normalcy" across the Mekong River.

GENERAL SAIYUD SAYS CPT CONTINUES TO GROW

Bangkok THE NATION REVIEW in English 23 Sep 81 p 16

[Article by Gen Saiyud Kerdphol, chief-of-staff of the Armed Forces: "Total Defense Means Total Commitment"]

[Text] Gen Saiyud Kerdphol is Chief-of-Staff of the Armed Forces and the man behind the "Total Defence Concept"--a security-economic package to fight internal and external threats. Here, he outlines in details the plan, with the latest developments taken into consideration.

WHEN WE WERE YOUNGER we could most generally look at our country's problems and expect "they". . . or the leadership to do something about it. We cannot do that any more. We are "they," who can make a very important impact upon the security and well being of this country. This is "where the buck stops."

There are two threats to Thailand – one from without and one from within. The internal threat, insurgency, has been, I think relatively well contained over the past several years. This has resulted from the development of a very perceptive set of government programmes – economic, social and military – which has done much to convince our people in remote areas that Thailand is concerned for their welfare and security and that alignment with the Communist Party of Thailand (CPT) is a dangerous and counter-productive course.

Despite a success story in this area, the insurgency threat is still there. We cannot afford to become complacent. It is a major disease which lingers and we must continue to treat it. At present the CPT growth is controlled to about 7-8 per cent annually – an acceptable level. If the increase ever reached 20-25 per cent, it would represent a very dangerous condition. At this rate of growth, the number of CPT would expand from the present 11,000 to 20,000 by 1986. We cannot allow this to happen. This is doubly important now – since this CPT force could link up with and assist the current external threat which stands on our border. A linkup of these two forces could threaten our freedom and way of life.

Everyone here is aware of the Soviet-backed Vietnamese military forces which faces us along our border with Kampuchea. It consists of 25 Vietnamese divisions and 200,000 men. It also boasts over 200 armoured vehicles. It is a vastly superior enemy in terms of numbers. The western Press puts us at a 3:1 disadvantage. It is an experienced fighting force subsidized by the Soviets at the rate of $3 million per day. The Vietnamese are unpredictable. The events of June 23 of last year prove that they will attack without cause, without warning if they perceive that there is an opportunity to do so and if there is a political or military advantage to be gained.

Once again, the existence of both an external and internal threat and the potential for a linkup of these two, causes us serious concern.

My conclusion is that we must settle in for a long term confrontation of this problem. The Communists calculate success in terms of years. My concern is that we integrate our security and economic efforts so as to gain long term benefits in both sectors. We must also consolidate all our security resources and focus them upon the threat in one centrally coordinated and managed effort. It is these two things – the combining of economic and security development and the consolidation and central management of all security resources that constitute this programme which I am talking about – total defence.

I think we all realize that there are three different groups which play an important role in our national defence. These are:

- Civil defence forces
- Territorial defence forces
- Strategic defence forces

Strategic defence forces consist of our military – army, navy, marines and air force – our conventional force structure. Territorial defence forces include the national police, the border patrol police, volunteer defence called rangers and civil defence includes the civilian volunteer and communities' organisation and all of those other civilian agencies and individuals who can be called upon in an emergency.

Our interest is in creating an overall command and communication structure for these three groups and their many components and to encourage the expansion and exploitation of this latter group – the civilian defence forces.

Let me return now for a moment to the threat. The first area incorporates Loei, Pitsanuloke and Petchabun provinces. It is a vulnerable border area – long a transiting area for CPT's entering our country from Laos. The forested high ground of this region offers a convenient route of advance into central Thailand. Next is area covered by Prachinburi, Nakhon Nayok and Nakhon Ratchasima provinces. This is our vulnerable border area – the defensive area which must block the advance of our most likely external threat. From the enemy's point of view, it is a covered route of advance which they can use to span the 100-kilometre distance from the Kampuchean border to Bangkok.

Under the total defence concept, these two areas – the northern insurgency region (Loei, Pitsanuloke and Petchabun) and the eastern strategic threat region (Prachinburi, Nakhon Nayok and Nakhon Ratchasima) would be developed into long term economic-security areas. Our interest would be twofold. First would be the priority of developing the defence in these areas in depth.

Improving lines of communication, building lateral road systems, constructing obstacles to block the enemy's advance and channelize them into killing zones, developing counterattack plans to eject the enemy, should he successfully breach our initial defences in a surprise attack. These are all a part of that process. To do this, we would utilize the political/social infrastructure which already exists in the area. Villages along the border would become strategic villages – communicating with neighbouring villages and local military forces by radio – recruiting their own security forces and providing their own leadership and chain of command under the village chief. Military forces in the area would be situated so as to provide support – to patrol between strategic villages and act as a counterattack force when any one of the strategic villages came under attack.

On the socio-economic side, the objective would be to build these areas into politically and economically sound entities. Through our solid support and interest, we can develop these areas into solid bastions of national resolve.

Economic and security development, if closely and imaginatively coordinated can be complementary or mutually supporting. Roads, properly positioned, can both support the marketing of local agricultural products or facilitate the movement of a counterattack force or the repositioning of an artillery battery. A fish pond, properly positioned, can both encourage fish breeding or channelize the enemy's advance. Irrigation canals can support rice production in peace time but become formidable tank traps in war. Water storage, dispensaries, and local energy production can improve villagers' living conditions while, at the same time, offer self-reliance and staying power in the event of an attack. In sum, our development proposals are aimed at promoting the welfare of the people in these areas by creating both improved economic opportunities and strategic defence capabilities.

Our current objective is to develop this concept in areas spanning a total of 4,000 villages during the five year period of our 1982-86 development plan.

This, now, is where we come in. National resolve becomes a fact when people demonstrate interest and become involved. Yes – we can throw money at the problem but money alone never seems to do much. I would like to see this Rotary Club sponsor the development of a strategic village on the border area. I would see it becoming the model village for the extension of this programme to the other 3,999 villages. I would like to see other Rotary clubs, other civic organizations, step into assist by sponsoring other villages. I sense that all of us are looking for a useful, significant role to play in support of this country. I can think of none more timely or more vital than the one I have just outlined to you. So this is total defence:

- Self-sufficiency in threatened areas
- Coordination of our economic and security efforts
- Consolidation of all our security resources into one unified responsive system.

Perhaps I should add one more contributing factor to total defence:

That is total involvement.

GENERAL SAIYUD DETAILS DEFENSE PLANS FOR LAO, KAMPUCHEAN BORDER AREAS

Bangkok THE NATION REVIEW in English 18 Sep 81 pp 1, 8

[Text]

ARMED FORCES Chief-of-Staff Gen Saiyud Kerdphol yesterday outlined plans to place the country's two "most sensitive areas" – the Northern Insurgency Region and the Eastern Strategic Threat Region – under the long-term economic-security programmes as part of the "Total Defence Concept."

Gen Saiyud said the first area of primary concern to the government incorporates Loei, Phitsanuloke and Petchabun provinces.

"It is a vulnerable border area – long a transitting area for the Communist insurgents entering our country from Laos. The forested high ground of this region offers a convenient route of advance into Central Thailand," he said.

The second vulnerable area covers Prachinburi, Nakhon Nayok and Nakhon Ratchasima provinces – "the defensive area which must block the advance of our most likely external threat."

Gen Saiyud added: "From the enemy's point of view, it is a covered route of advance which they can use to span the 100-kilometre distance from the Kampuchean border to Bangkok."

Under the "Total Defence Concept," he said, these two areas would be developed into long-term economic-security areas.

Gen Saiyud was speaking on "Total Defence" at the Rotary Club of Bangkok at the Erawan Hotel yesterday.

"Our interest would be twofold. First would be the priority of developing the defence in these areas in-depth. Improving lines of communication, building lateral road systems, constructing obstacles to block the enemy's advance and channelize them into killing zones, developing counter-attack plans to eject the enemy, should be successfully breach our initial defence in a surprise attack. These are all part of that process," Gen Saiyud said.

The senior military officer said that to achieve the goal, "we would utilize the political-social infrastructure which already exists in the area. Village along the border would become strategic villages – communicating with neighbouring villages and local military forces by radio; recruiting their own security forces and providing their own leadership and chain of command under the village chief."

Gen Saiyud said that military forces in the area would be situated so as to provide support – to patrol between strategic villages and act as a counter-attack force when any one of the strategic villages came under attack.

On the socio-economic side, the objective would be to build these areas into politically and economically sound entities.

"Through our solid support and interest, we can develop these areas into solid bastion of national resolve," Gen Saiyud said.

The current objective is to develop this concept in areas spanning a total of 4,000 villages during the five-year period of the 1982-86 development plan.

He pointed out that the existence of both an external and internal threat and the potential for a linkup of these two, causes serious concern to the government.

He said that the government must integrate security and economic efforts to gain long-term benefits in both sectors.

"We must also consolidate all our security resources and focus them upon the threat in one centrally coordinated and managed effort. It is these two things – the combining of economic and security development and the consolidation and central management of all security resources that constitute this programme which I am talking about – total defence," he said.

Gen Saiyud said that his interest was in creating an overall command and communication structure for these three groups and their many components and to encourage the expansion and exploitation of this latter group – the civilian defence forces.

Gen Saiyud called upon the Rotary Club of Bangkok to sponsor the development of a strategic village on the border area. "I would see it becoming the model village for the extension of this programme to the other 3,999 villages."

PROCEDURE FOR PRESIDENTIAL NOMINATIONS TOLD

Dacca THE BANGLADESH TIMES in English 10 Sep 81 p 1

[Text] Nomination papers of the intending candidates for the coming presidential election will be received by the Returning Officer at his office on September 21 between 7:30 a.m. and 2 p.m., an Election Commission press release said on Wednesday, reports BSS.

The Returning Officer will scrutinise the nomination papers on September 22 (Tuesday) while the last date for withdrawal of nomination papers has been fixed on October 14. The presidential polls will be held on November 15.

The Secretary of the Election Commission has been made the Returning Officer and his office is situated at block number 5 and 6 of the Gazetted Officers' Hostel at Sher-e-Bangla Nagar, the press release said.

Giving the required qualifications of the candidate, the press release pointed out that no one would be eligible for contesting the presidential election if his or her age is less than 35 years, if he or she is not qualified to contest the parliamentary election and if one is removed from the presidency under Constitution.

Any voter could be the proposer or seconder of only one candidate but one candidate could submit more than one nomination papers.

An amount of Taka five thousand will have to be deposited to the Returning Officer or he has to show the receipt of such deposit with a bank in the name of Election Commission at the time of filing nomination papers. Other wise, nomination papers will not be received by the Returning Officer.

The candidate or any one on his or her behalf could deposit the said amount with any branch of the Bangladesh Bank or in any government treasury under the head "P-deposits and advance-part-2-deposits not bearing interest-civil-deposits--deposits in connection with election."

The proposers, seconders and one person authorised by a candidate could be present at the time of scrutiny. Any appeal against the cancellation of nomination papers by the Returning Officer could be made before the Election Commission within three days of the cancellation of nomination papers. However, the order of the Election Commission will stand as final. The prescribed nomination forms are available in the office of the Returning Officer and concerned persons could collect them during office hours.

FINANCE MINISTER TALKS TO PRESS ON RETURN FROM PARIS

Dacca THE BANGLADESH TIMES in English 12 Sep 81 p 1

[Text] Finance Minister Saifur Rahman on Friday said the Paris Conference on the LDCs "is sure to bring positive outcomes" with 12 developed countries having already committed to back up the Substantial New Programme of Action (SNPA), reports BSS.

The countries which have already committed to extend full support to the SNPA are France, the Netherlands, Norway, Sweden, Finland, Denmark, Belgium, Luxemburg, Switzerland, Italy, Ireland and Canada.

Mr Saifur Rahman, who led the Bangladesh delegation at the Paris meet told reporters on his return on Friday that some major developed countries like Britain, Federal Republic of Germany and the United States also agreed in principle to support the SNPA but failed to make any immediate commitment, particularly with regard to the target of aid flow to the LDCs.

Although conceptually everybody supported the whole programme. Countries like the United States showed some reservations with regard to aid modalities and follow-up procedures, the Finance Minister observed.

He said the United States was possibly less concerned with the magnitude and urgency of the problems. An attitude, they tried to explain, had resulted from "their own economic problems."

French Govt Lauded

He lauded the role of the new French Government for showing "favourable attitude towards the problems of the LDCs."

Besides, Mr Rahman pointed out, in the context of the existing global issues--which were enormous--it would be easier for the developed countries to agree to satisfy the 31 LDCs, whose problems were comparatively smaller.

He said that although it was agreed that the developed countries should contribute 0.7 percent of their GDP to the developing countries Bangladesh had stressed the need for subtarget arrangements for the poorest of the developing countries.

Bangladesh had suggested that at least 20 per cent of the total Official Development Assistance (ODA) flow should come to the LDCs by the year 1985 and which should be raised by 30 percent by 1990.

He described the Paris conference as "the most important and crucial conference" for Bangladesh and said that his delegation had played a pivotal role in highlighting the plight of the LDCs.

The Finance Minister said that Bangladesh role at the Paris moot was highly appreciated both by the developed and the developing countries.

CHHATRA LEAGUE-KC CRISIS RESULTS IN PARTY SPLIT

Dacca THE BANGLADESH OBSERVER in English 14 Sep 81 pp 1,12

[Text] Despite repeated efforts to cement the crack in the leadership of Bangladesh Chhatra League (Kader-Chunnu), 26 Secretaries and members of the Executive Committee belonging to Jalal-Jahingir faction severed ties with the committee headed by Dr Jalal, says a Press release issued on Sunday.

The Jalal-Jahangir panel was illegal, unconstitutional and irregular, the Press release said and the dissident members pledged their solidarity with the 'legal' Fazlu-Chunnu faction. In the conference of the organisation held on August 29 last Jalal-Jahangir gave their panel illegally in order to divide the organisation and foil the 'BAKSAL' philosophy laid down by Bangabandhu, the Press release added. They condemned the conspiracy to undo the 'BAKSAL' philosophy and split the organisation.

Following are the names of the dissidents and their position in the Jalal-Jahangir panel Bahalul, Majnum Chunnu, Member of the Executive Committee (EC); Golam Mohiuddin, Vice President; Muhibur Rahman Bublu, Vice-President; Jahangir Kabir Nank, Joint Secretary; Mukul Bose, Publicity Secretary; Morshed Alam, Publication Secretary; Motahar Hossain Cultural Secretary; Shahriar Rumi, Treasurer; Kamal Sharif, Assistant Secretary; S.M. AWAMI LEAGUE-H RESOLUTION ON PRISONERS REPORTED

[Text] The adjourned meeting of the Central Executive Committee of Bangladesh Awami League (Hasina) resumed in Dacca on Monday evening at the party office at Bangabandhu Avenue, reports BSS.

Presided over by Sheikh Hasina, Chairman of the party the meeting discussed the government's attitude towards the Awami League's four-point demand and the situation arising out of the Governments announcement with regard to the shifting of the date for presidential election, an Awami League Press release said.

The meeting was adjourned again till 4 p.m. on September 9.

In a resolution the meeting condemned what it said "pleading of a minister against the release of political prisoners for criminal laws at a public meeting on September 6," the Press release said.

The party reiterated its demand for the release of political prisoners including those convicted by the military courts.

City Unit's Rally

ENA adds: Awami League Dacca city unit chief Mohammad Hanif on Monday said his party cannot participate in the forthcoming presidential polls if its four-point election demand is not met.

Addressing a rally in front of the Awami League central office at Bangabandhu Avenue on Monday afternoon Mohammad Hanif warned the Government that his party would launch a vigorous movement so that election could not be held without meeting his party demand.

Awami League's four-point election demand included shifting of election date from October to November third week, lifting of Emergency Rule release of political prisoners and fresh enrolment of electorate. Out of these demand, the election date has already been shifted to November 15.

After the rally, a procession was brought out in support of party's four point election demand. The procession was led by Awami League Presidium member Shajeda Chowdhury, Central Committee members Sheikh Abdul Aziz and Col (Retd) Shawkat Ali MP and Organising Secretary Tofail Ahmed and city unit President Mohammad Hanif. The processionists paraded main thoroughfares of the city and dispersed at the central Shaheed Minar.

AWAMI LEAGUE-H ISSUES STATEMENT ON ELECTIONS

[Text] Bangladesh Awami League (Hasina) on Sunday night said that announcement of shifting the date of Presidential election was inconsistent with the government assurance regarding the fulfillment of three other demands for free and fair election, reports BSS.

The Working Committee of Awami League (H) which met at an emergency meeting with the Party Chief Sheikh Hasina Wazed in the chair described the government announcement as frustrating alleging that it was a clear violation of the government commitment of fulfilling its four-point demand.

The Awami League(H) in a press release said that its leaders in course of their meeting with the Acting President Mr Justice Abdus Sattar on September 3 pressed home to accept the Party's four-point demand for holding free and fair presidential election.

The Awami League(H) expressed its firm determination to continue struggle for realising its four-point demand.

It also called upon the people to build up mass movement for the establishment of people's rights.

The evening session of the meeting was presided over by Mr Abdul Mannan, the meeting was adjourned till Monday evening the press release said.

AWAMI LEAGUE-H MEETING ENDS, REITERATES STAND

Dacca THE BANGLADESH OBSERVER in English 10 Sep 81 pp 1,12

[Text] Bangladesh Awami League (Hasina) on Wednesday announced that there is no question of its participation in the forthcoming presidential elections unless its four-point demand was met, says ENA.

The party stand on the election was announced following a four-day extended meeting of its Working Committee which reviewed the Government announcement on election date vis-a-vis the party's four-point demand, says a party Press release.

The Working Committee which resumed its session in this morning with Presidium-member Korban Ali in the chair also condemned what it said the Government's dilly-dally attitude regarding the four-point demand set to create an atmosphere conducive to free and fair polls, the Press release added.

Hasina Indisposed

Awami League (H) President Sheikh Hasina who has been indisposed since Tuesday is now under treatment of Professor Nurul Islam says a party Press release.

The Awami League President advised complete rest by her physician cancel her visit to Beirut scheduled for Tuesday.

Meanwhile Mr Zillur Rahman, a member of the party Presidium has left for Beirut to represent his party's President at a conference of the Palestine Popular Union.

[Text] Bangladesh Awami League (Hasina) on Friday asked the Government to accept the remaining three of its four preconditions for participating in the presidential polls by September 16.

The party also declared that "it would not be possible for AL to participate in the ensuing presidential election if the demands were not accepted within the stipulated time."

The ultimatum was contained in a resolution adopted at the meeting of the Central Working Committee of the AL(H). The adjourned session of the meeting was held at the residence of party chief Sheikh Hasina Wazed with herself in chair.

The resolution accused the Government of "violating the assurances" given to the AL leaders on September 3 when they met the Acting President Mr Justice Abdus Sattar at Bangabnaban. It claimed that the Government had assured them of acceptance conditions. But so far the Govt. failed to announce any decision except changing the date of election.

By another resolution the party accused the BNP leadership of making "provocative and objectionable remarks" against Awami League leadership. The party said it appeared that the Government was not willing to accept their four-point demands.

The meeting also decided to hold a meeting of the central working committee at 5 p.m. on September 16, a Press conference at 10 a.m. on September 17 and a public meeting at Baitul Mukarram Square at 3 p.m. on September 21.

Meanwhile, according to AL sources the meeting authorised party chief Sheikh Hasina Wazed to form a parliamentary board to take decisions regarding the election matters.

The sources said that party leaders were also awaiting the return of Dr Kamal Hossain from his visit to London to take final decision regarding the election.

According to sources, majority of district-level leaders support AL participation in the election with its own candidate, while a section of leaders call for extending support to General (Retd) M.A.G. Osmany.

The sources pointed to the recent meeting between Sheikh Hasina Wazed and the retired General in this connection.

The situation is likely to be clear when AL(H) General Secretary Mr Abdur Razzak returned from Bombay where he had gone for treatment of his only daughter. Mr Razzak is likely to return on Sunday while Dr Kamal Hossain may return within a day or two.

JOINT-PRC FRIENDSHIP SOCIETY HOLDS DACCA REUNION

Dacca THE BANGLADESH OBSERVER in English 5 Sep 81 p 1

[Text] Speaker Mirza Golan Hafiz on Friday said that China is a tested friend of Bangladesh and she stood like a rock behind us in times of our need. The heroic people of China will also extend their support to the people of Bangladesh in times of need, he added.

Speaking at the Eid reunion function of Bangladesh-China Friendship Society at the Bangladesh Shilpakala Academy on Friday afternoon Mirza Golan Hafiz who is also the President of the society said that the friendly ties with China dates back to over four thousand years. Both the people of China and Bangladesh are closest friends and have similar experiences in the fields of cultural heritage. He said that the people of Bangladesh have a high regard for the people of China who have made a great leap forward in emancipating the lot of 100 crore people from the deep dungeon of poverty.

Narrating his recent tour impression of China, the speaker said that full religious freedom exists in China. He noted that he said his Eid-ul-Fitr prayer in a grand mosque of Shanghai.

The function was also addressed by Mr S.A. Bari A.T. Deputy Prime Minister, Mr Mayeedul Islam, Minister for Post and Telegraph, Dr Fazlul Karim, State Minister for Sports and Cultural Affairs, Kazi Zafar Ahmed, former Minister and the Ambassador of People's Republic of China Mr Li Shu Qing.

Mr S.A. Bari A.T. in his speech said that the bond of friendship between the people of Bangladesh and China will be strengthened more and more with the passing of time.

Mr Mayeedul Islam praised the Government of China for its all round assistance to the development programmes in Bangladesh.

Dr Fazlul Karim said that frequent exchange of delegations in the fields of sports and culture will contribute much to the friendly ties between the two countries.

Kazi Zafar Ahmed, Vice President of the association said that the heroic people of China are standing like a rock in the face of two super-powers in the present world. China, he said, following the policy of Mao Tse-tung is giving moral and material help to all the genuine liberation movements in the world.

Referring to the hegemonistic designs of India against Bangladesh Kazi Zafar said that the people of Bangladesh will fight to the last in defending the independence and sovereignty of the country. He also hoped that China will stand by the side of Bangladesh in time of need.

In his reply the Chinese Ambassador praised the heroic people of Bangladesh for their role in defending their independence and sovereignty in the face of so many odds. Recalling the recent visit of Chinese Premier Zhao Zhi-Yang to Dacca at a time when the country was passing through a great crisis the Ambassador said that it proved that the people and government of China have a deep concern for the people of Bangladesh.

Amidst thunderous cheers from the audience the Ambassador declared that the hundred crore people of China will stand behind the people of Bangladesh in defending their independence and sovereignty in the face of any danger from outside.

The reunion was followed by a neatly arranged cultural function which included classical and folk dances and music. The function was presented by the Performing Arts Academy of Bangladesh.

Mr Nazmul Huq Nannu Joint Secretary of the association conducted the function in the packed house.

OSMANY CALLS ON OPPOSITION PARTIES FOR SUPPORT

Dacca THE BANGLADESH OBSERVER in English 5 Sep 81 pp 1, 12

[Text] Presidential candidate Gen. (Retd) M.A.G. Osmany at a meeting on Friday called upon the Opposition political parties to support him in the forthcoming presidential polls. It is a struggle for the realisation of the rights of the people against what he termed 'one-man dictatorial rule.'

Addressing a public meeting organised by the Citizens National Committee at Baitul Mukarram, Gen. Osmani said that the future of the nation would depend on the success of this "struggle."

Presided over by Dr Ahmed Sharif it was addressed, among others by Lt Col (Retd) Kazi Nuruzzaman Chairman Central Command Council of Muktijodda Sangsad, Mr A.Z.M. Enavetullah Khan, Dr M.R. Khan, Mr Ashraf Ali, Mr Khalequzzaman and Dr Zafarullah Chowdhury.

Gen. Osmani said that if voted to power he would establish parliamentary democracy in the country. He pledged to restore the 1972 Constitution minus the Fourth Amendment.

Reiterating his demands for shifting the date of presidential polls towards the end of November he said that he would not file his nomination paper on September 7 if the election date was not shifted. Exhorting BNP to follow the constitutional way and abide by truth and justice, he said that otherwise the ruling party might face a grave crisis. Gen Osmani said that Allah does not like injustice and untruth.

He said that if voted to power his Government would pursue a strong non-aligned foreign policy aiming at the welfare of 90 per cent of the people and help materialise the just demands of the common people.

He said that they want election but he reiterated his demands for free and fair one and equal opportunity to Opposition candidates for using government transport and publicity media.

Gen Osmani sounding a note of warning said that the ruling party must abide by law if not the people would compel them to do so. He cautioned the Government not to use the government employees or influence them for election purpose.

Gen. Osmani said that if voted to power he would give freedom of the Press, ensure social justice, emancipation of the women, encourage setting up of cottage industries, distribute khas lands to the landless, develop agricultural industry, would not allow banking in the private sector, formulate welfare oriented labour policy, strengthen the Muktijodda Sangsad and Muktijodda Kalyan Trust, try to release the freedom fighters and would complete the list of the name of the freedom fighters.

He cautioned the freedom fighters to remain united and not to be misguided by BNP. He alleged that BNP was trying to create division among the freedom fighters. He also called upon the ulema of the country not to be used by the ruling party. Referring to police, he said that he would try to build up the country's police force as a well equipped modern force to serve the cause of the people.

Regarding his defence policy, he said that he would build up a strong regular army capable of safeguarding the country's independence and sovereignty and would also build up people's army with necessary training and would support the regular army in time of necessity Gen. Osmani said.

Recalling the role of the Opposition political parties following the Chittagong incident on May 30, he said that they had supported the Government to overcome the crisis. He also urged the Army not to be used to remain over alert of the protection of the country's independence and sovereignty.

Criticising the Government economic policy he said that grants and aids were being spent in the unproductive sectors.

Dr Ahmed Sharif said that the people are told of happiness but they have never tasted it. There was no security of life in the past and also today, he alleged.

Lt Col (Retd) Nuruzzaman said that the Muktijodda Sangsad had supported Osmani as its free choice. He said that by supporting Osmani in the presidential polls did not mean that the Sangsad was indulging in politics. The Sangsad is supporting him for protecting the country's independence and sovereignty, he said.

He alleged that BNP was following politics of killing and oppression.

Mr A.Z.M. Enayetullah Khan said that during the one-party Government and one-man rule, the independence and sovereignty of the country had been jeopardised. He said that the people were capable of defending the country's independence and sovereignty effectively.

We do not have economic freedom today which is a precondition of political freedom, Mr Khan said. The people's strength can ensure independence and sovereignty on the one hand and ensure economic freedom on the other, he said. The need of the hour is an able candidate and a well-organised organisation, he said. Praising Gen Osmani's role in the Liberation War and his stand during 1975, he said that he resigned his Parliament membership protesting the one-party one-man rule, Mr Khan said.

PRESS REPORTS POSTPONEMENT OF ELECTION DATE

Text of Press Release

[Text] The Election Commission on Saturday night announced the shifting of date of presidential polls to November 15 next. The election was due to be held on October 15.

A Press release issued by the Election Commission on the day said that the date of presidential election has been shifted in deference to the demand of many political parties. The Election Commission reviewed various aspects of the matter and shifted the date of polls earlier from September 21 to October 15. But most of the political parties were still persisting in their demand for holding the election in the third week of November, the Press release added.

Some political leaders approached the Election Commission and placed their demand for consideration of the shifting of the date.

According to changed schedule, the date for filing of nomination papers to the returning officer has been fixed on September 21 and the last date of withdrawal of candidature is October 14. The date of scrutiny of nomination papers is September 22.

Following is the text of the Election Commission Press release.

"In deference to the demand of many political parties for shifting the date of election to the Office of the President, the Election Commission reviewed the various aspects of the matter and shifted the date of poll from 21st September to 15th October, 1981 with consequential changes in the schedule. But most of the political parties were still persisting in their demand for holding the election in the 3rd week of November, 1981. Some political leaders approached the Election Commission and placed their demand in that behalf for consideration.

"The Commission took all necessary measures to hold the election on the 15th of October 1981. On review, it found that further shifting of the date of poll would create difficulties. It may be mentioned in this connection that the period of 180 days as prescribed in the Constitution within which the Presidential election must be held will expire on the 25th November 1981.

"To consider the matter, the Election Commission met on the 5th of September 1981. Notwithstanding the difficulties the Commission has given due importance to the demand of the political parties and has decided to shift the date of poll from the 15th October 1981 to 15th November 1981 and has accordingly issued a gazette notification today, the 5th of September 1981 specifying the revised schedule as under.

a) Date for filing of nomination papers by the intending candidates to the Returning Officer. September 21 (Monday) 1981.

b) Date of scrutiny of nomination papers by the Returning Officer September 21 (Monday), 1981.

c) Last day for withdrawal of candidature, October 14 (Wednesday) 1981.

d) Date of poll, November 15, (Sunday) 1981.

Awami League-H Informed

Dacca THE BANGLADESH OBSERVER in English 6 Sep 81 p 1

[Text] Civil Aviation Minister K.M. Obaidur Rahman on Saturday called on Awami League President Sheikh Hasina at Sheikh Mujib's Road No 32, Dhanmondi residence to convey on behalf of Acting President, Mr Justice Abdus Sattar the decisions of the Government on the discussion it held with the Awami League regarding the Presidential election an Awami League source said, reports ENA.

The source would not give details of the message, Mr Obaidur Rahman conveyed to Sheikh Hasina.

Awami League Presidium members Korban Ali Abdul Mannan and Zillur Rahman Acting General Secretary Sajeda Chowdhury and Organising Secretary Tofael Ahmed were present during Sheikh Hasina's discussion with Mr Obaid.

It may be recalled that Awami League held discussion with the Acting President at the latter's invitation on its election preconditions on November 3 and the Government was scheduled to convey its decision on the matter to the Awami League on Saturday.

MARXIST-LENINIST PAPER SCORES POLICY ON COUNTRY

Dacca THE BANGLADESH TIMES in English 3 Sep 81 pp 5,6

[Text] The powerful Russian equipped Indian Navy was sent to forcibly establish India's claim over New Moore Island. Gunboat diplomacy marks a new stage in Indira Gandhi's to better Bangladesh into submission. Interfering in Bangladesh's internal affairs is nothing new for the Indira fascist clique which aims to lord it over all of South Asia (of course, under the cover of a Soviet social imperialist unbrella).

Just little while ago was the astounding statement of Hasina Wazed, daughter of Mujibur Rahman and newly-elected President of the Awami League, that she count on New Delhi's help in overthrowing the Ziaur Rahman regime. There is no doubt at all that Hasina like her late father is acting under the direction of New Delhi. Before Hasina's stagemanaged election as Awami League President (that took place while she was still in New Delhi) two top leaders of the Awami League had visited Delhi and had secret meetings with Congress(I) leaders. The two Awami League leaders were up at the SAIL Guest House in Delhi, which is often used by RAW for its activities. It was all this that prompted Khandokar Mushtaque Ahmed to state that Awami League "politics...is being directed from New Delhi." (STATESMAN, April 8, 1981).

Hasina and the Awami League are not alone in their pro-Indian and pro-Soviet activities in Bangladesh. They have been joined by Major Jalil, President of the Jatiya Samajtantrik Dal. After a visit to Afghanistan, the good Major had the audacity to say, "Now people are happy there and only feudal reactionaries are opposed to it (i.e. the Russian occupation)." [from the May-June 1981 issue of FOR A NEW DEMOCRACY, organ of the Provisional Central Committee of the CPI-ML]

Indira Directs Hasina

Indira Gandhi's directing of Awami League politics has not been merely political. It has been murderous and terrorist. Awami League members, armed by India have been threatening members of other political parties in Dacca and elsewhere. It is by now well-known that the marauding bands of Tiger Siddiqui were being directed by RAW from Indian bases. One of the first actions of the Morarji Desai Government was to hand over these armed bands to the Bangladesh Government. The then RAW chief Sankaram Nair however, saved the gang leader Tiger Siddiqui from this fate and he survived to continue to do bidding of the Indian expansionists.

India's interference in Bangladesh's internal affairs has as its aim the setting up of a pliant government in Dacca, one that would do New Delhi's bidding, just as the government of the late unlamented Majibur Rahman used to. The base of such political ambitions is the economic expansionism of the Indian comprador-bureaucrat capitalists who as sub-imperialist under the aegis of Soviet hegemonism which to turn Bangladesh into one of their special areas of exploitation. Only recently the Indian High Commissioner in Dacca, Sri Dubey, said in the manner of an imperialist that "the economies of Bangladesh and India are complementary to each other (STATESMAN, April 8, 1981). It was in order to end East Pakistan's complementarity with West Pakistan and establish such a complementarity with India that the Indian expansionists under took the Bangladesh war in 1971. What is the meaning of such complementarity? That India would provide the manufactured goods for the Bangladesh market (just as the erstwhile West Pakistan used to do) and Bangladesh would provide the agricultural raw materials. This is the classic imperialist division of labour that the Indian expansionists are trying to force on Bangladesh. It is in order to break from this that Bangladesh has developed its own jute textile industry, which has emerged as a formidable competitor to India on the world jute markets.

Farakka Barrage

In attempting to browbeat and control Bangladesh the biggest weapon in India's hands is the Farakka Barrage. Ostensibly meant to assure sufficient water during the summer months to flush out Calcutta Port and thus prevent it from silting up, the Farakka Barrage has had grave consequences for the Bangladesh economy.

The record of the Indian Government (except for the period of Morarji Desai's Janata Party Government) is a sordid one of international piracy and contravening all established norms of international behaviour in matters concerning rivers that flow through more than one country.

To begin at the beginning from about 1952 talks were held between the Indian and Pakistani Governments to discuss the sharing of the Ganga waters. Notwithstanding the fact that no agreement had been reached the Indian Government went ahead with the construction of the Farakka Barrage and in 1973 it was presented to Bangladesh as a fait accompli.

In 1974 the Prime Ministers of India and Bangladesh met to discuss sharing of Ganga waters and even while the discussions were going on, the Indian side requested that the "feeder canal" be run for a limited period (21 April to 3 May, 1975). This was meant as a trial run. Indira Gandhi had committed in the talks with Majibur Rahman that the Farakka Barrage would be commissioned only after a mutually acceptable allocation of the waters had been arrived at. But the Indira Government broke this solemn commitment and turned the trial run into a full-fledged operation. Bangladesh protested against and was forced to take the matter to the United Nations' General Assembly. The General Assembly urged the two countries to resolve the issue by bilateral negotiations in a spirit of cooperation.

While the defeat of the Indira Gandhi Government in 1977, the Morarji Desai Government was much more willing to reach amicable settlements with the neighbours.

The 1977 Agreement had a gu on the minimum water that would be available during the dry period for Bangladesh. This minimum was to be maintained even at the cost of giving Bangladesh upto 80 per cent of the flow at Farakka.

The agreement was denounced by Indira Gandhi as a betrayal of India's interests. The CPI(M) played its own role in supporting Indian chauvanism and expansionism by denouncing the agreement as a sell-out of Calcutta Port.

The justification given for the Farakka Barrage is that in the dry months it is necessary to divert water down the Hooghly in order to flush out Calcutta Port and thus prevent the silting-up of the port. Well-known experts like K. Bhattacharya, who is an internationally renowned expert on water management and Dr. Ippen have shown that the diversion of Ganga waters at Farakka cannot solve the problems of Calcutta port. Observations over the last few years have shown that the diversion of waters through the Farakka Barrage, has in fact, not made any difference to Calcutta Port. It is then only natural to suspect, as Bangladesh rightly does, that the purpose of the Farakka Barrage is not so much to save Calcutta Port (which it cannot do) but to make Bangladesh pay the costs of India's development in the UP-Bihar areas and to gain a stranglehold on the Bangladesh economy which is so heavily dependent on the Ganga waters. In the 1977 Agreement Bangladesh had made a great sacrifice by agreeing to accept a flow which was only 40 percent of what it was historically used to.

The root of the problem of Calcutta Port was pointed out in an editorial in the STATESMAN of 15 July, 1981: "Farakka is starved because of the centre's greater concern for irrigation, drinking water and industrial requirements in Uttar Pradesh and Bihar. It is patently unfair to continue to turn a blind eye to these increasingly lavish drawings and then invoke Calcutta's plight to persuade Bangladesh to make do with a much smaller quantity of water."

The decline of Calcutta Port started with the implementation of the Damodar Valley Project. Now there are more than a dozen major and a hundred minor irrigation projects alone in the upper and middle reaches of the Ganga, i.e. in UP and Bihar. So the problem is not the water Bangladesh gets from Farakka. Rather it is reduced flow reaching Farakka itself which is much reduced because of legal and illegal drawings of water in Bihar and UP Farakka is only an attempt to make Bangladesh pay the entire price of these drawings in UP and Bihar.

The 1980 dry season flow at Farakka was abnormally low. Even the 80 per cent guarantee did not safeguard Bangladesh's interests. This had disastrous effects on Bangladesh's agriculture, ecology and economy as a whole. The veteran journalist Ajit Bhattacharya recently visited Bangladesh and wrote a report in INDIA TODAY (May 1-15, 1981) on the disastrous effects Farakka had on Bangladesh.

"People were seriously concerned with the impact that the drying up of water from the Ganga was having on the eastern part of the country which is watered by the river. Officials claimed that irrigation projects were being crippled, fresh water was disappearing, the Ganga estuary was silting up and industries and power projects dependent on fresh water were coming to a halt throughout the area. The process had begun after Farakka was commissioned in April 1975, but the situation had deteriorated rapidly in the last dry season and was critical already though the dry season would go on up to June.

"Indeed, a visit to the Kushna area shows that their fears have basis. The Gorai river, the main channel taking off from the Ganga near Kushtia, is a sluggish trickle at the place where it separates from the main river. Fishing nets are stretched across it, but few fish are caught. According to official readings, the flow of Gorai at this point is 300 cusecs as compared to 2,500 cusecs at the same time last year. Yet there are no obvious signs of crisis. In the light of the setting sun the water at the confluence seems plentiful. From a boat, however, the shallowness of the water is obvious with shifting shoals of silt just under the surface.

"The intake of the big irrigation project at Bheramara, near the Hardinge rail bridge, is being deepened constantly by dredgers to keep the pumps going. Even so, the water is flowing very slowly into the pumps. The water level is three feet or more below the lowest marking on the pumphouse gauge.

"The threat facing Khulna port and the area upstream is increasing salinity and rapid silting. One of the biggest industries in the area is the Khulna Newsprint Mills (KNM) which exports half of its product to Calcutta. Its motor launch, the Keora is being used as a tug to haul one or two ungainly water-carrying barges upriver to search and bringing back the fresh water needed to keep the mill going--one of the two units has already closed down. The people of Khulna are depending on deep tube-wells, but even tube-well water is too brackish for the delicate newsprint and powerhouse machinery. The barge that fetches fresh water has to travel about 35 miles upstream before water with a low enough chloride content... is found."

The last monsoon was a good monsoon. Yet the situation in 1981 is worse than it was in 1980, as Ajit Bhattacharya's report brings out. The reduced flow is then due not so much to drought as to the increased drawings in the upper and middle reaches of the Ganges. Bangladesh's agriculture and economy are in a serious plight because of it.

The question of augmenting the dry season flow of the Gange's thus an urgent one, particularly for Bangladesh one third of whose agriculture depends on Ganga waters. Two proposals have been put forward. The Indian Government has proposed that the waters of the Brahmaputra should be diverted into the Ganga above Farakka by means of a canal running through Bangladesh. Bangladesh, on the other hand has proposed storage dams in the upper reaches in India and Nepal to conserve the monsoon waters now being wasted.

At first glance it would seem that the choice between the two proposals is merely a technical one made difficult by the suspicions between New Delhi and Dacca. But, as Ajit Bhattacharya writes in the same report, "...on closer examination, it is clearly Mrs Gandhi's Government that seems to be guilty of callously aggravating and exploiting the difficulties of a weak ecologically dependent neighbour to force it to accept New Delhi's diktat. International conventions governing the use of river waters and previous bilateral commitments are being misrepresented for this purpose."

SATTAR SPEAKS AT CONFERENCE OF COUNCIL CHIEFS

Dacca THE BANGLADESH TIMES in English 7 Sep 81 pp 1, 8

[Text] Khulna, Sept 6--Acting President Justice Abdus Sattar said here today that the Swanirvar Gram Sarkers and Union Parishads would be provided with more power and responsibility in future in light with the government policy of decentralisation of power.

Addressing a conference of Chiefs of Gram Sarkers and Union Parishads and representatives of different cooperative societies of Khulna, Jessore and Kushtia districts at the local cinema hall this morning, the Acting President declared that the date of election of the Union Parishads which was scheduled to be held in March 1982 would now be shifted to by six months.

The conference which was attended by about 2500 leaders of different local bodies was addressed among others by Mr Abdul Halim Chowdhury, Local Government Minister, Lt Col (Rtd) Mustafizur Rahman, Home Minister, Mrs Quamrunnahar Zafar, State Minister for Local Government, Advocate Enyaet Ali, a former M.P. and Chairman of Khulna Municipality and Mrs Ferdaus Ali, Secretary of Bangladesh Samabaya Union.

The meeting was also addressed by Mafizul Huq, Fayequzzaman Khan, Nurul Islam Chairmen of Union Parishads, Liaquat Hussain, Abdur Rahman, and Enamul Huq of Gram Sarkar Prodhans, Musharraf Hussain and Hamidul Islam, cooperators.

More Power

Acting President exhorted the leaders of Gram Sarkars and Union Parishads to carry out their respective responsibilites and tasks towards the people with devotion so that more power could be given to them in future. He said the country was bound to march ahead with the united efforts of the people.

Justice Sattar reminded the Gram Sarker chiefs of their responsibility towards increasing the foodgrain output, removing the curse of illiteracy and checking the population boom. "If we can successfully complete this three tasks, the country is sure to prosper," he added.

He said the country's deficit in foodgrains had come down and will come down further with increased foodgrain output due to canal digging programme.

The Acting President asked the members of the Village Defence Parties to ensure law and order in their respective locality and take measures to check dacoities and other criminal activities.

Justice Sattar suggested that litigation should be shunned in the case of small disputes as it meant suffering and miscries of the people in the long run. The small disputes should be settled through conciliation and necessary powers have been given to the local bodies in this connection.

Paying rich tributes to the Late President, Justice Sattar said the prestige of the country was enhanced in the international arena due to different policies of the Late President.

President Zia fully devoted himself to the reconstruction of the country on assumption of power and his contribution to the Liberation War "was very important." He wanted to build a self-reliant prosperous, happy and strong Bangladesh. "A leader like him will not be born in the next hundred years," he said.

"With our determination we will be able to realise this dream and complete the unfinished task of late President.

Capt. (Retd) Abdul Halim Chowdhury said that "there has been no deterioration in law and order situation of the country following the death of President Zia. Credit for this goes to Acting President," he said.

He said that there were calculated efforts by some interested quarters to defame the institution of Swanirvar Gram Sarkar and asked the leaders of local bodies to remain vigilant about them. The workers of BNP are inspired with the spirit and ideal of late President. "A dead Zia is more powerful than a living Zia," he said.

Home Minister Mr Mustafizur Rahman said that the implementation of 19-point programme would usher in progress and prosperity of the country. President Zia had chalked out this programme to improve the lot of the rural people who earlier remain neglected. He said maintenance of law and order was prerequisite to the development of the country. He asked the village leaders to remain alert to thwart any attempt at disruption in the society. We will have to resist for the uninterrupted progress of the country, he added.

All representatives of different local bodies who addressed the conference on behalf of their respective organisation expressed their determination to implement the 19-point programme of late leader and pledged total and unstinted support for the BNP nominee Mr Justice Abdus Sattar in the forthcoming presidential polls.

SATTAR: AWAMI, BAKSALITES MAY TRY TO DISRUPT POLLS

Dacca THE BANGLADESH TIMES in English 12 Sep 81 p 1

[Text] Acting President Mr Justice Abdus Sattar has called upon the people, particularly the workers of the Bangladesh Nationalist Party and its front organisations, to thwart any attempt to foil the forthcoming presidential election.

Addressing a reception arranged in his honour by the Bangladesh Jatiyatabadi Chhatra Dal, the student wing of the BNP, at Rarona Green on Friday, the Acting President said: "People want election to express their desired will. They will not allow anybody to obstruct democracy in the country."

Presided over by Mr Habibullah Habib, President, city unit of the organisation, the meeting was also addressed among others, by Prime Minister Shah Azizur Rahman, Dr Khandker Mosharraf Hossain, Secretary, students affairs, BNP, Mr Osman Ghani and Mr Jamal Shareef Hiru, Vice-President and General Secretary respectively of the city unit of the Chhatra Dal.

The Acting President said that while the nation was going to hold presidential polls on November 15, some Opposition parties had been mobilising themselves to frustrate it. He expressed the hope that the members of the Jatiyatabadi Jubo Dal and Jatiyatabadi Chhatra Dal would successfully foil such designs.

He said that except General (Retd) Osmany, no Opposition party had so far announced the names of their candidates for the presidential election. He said that he felt that the Awami-BKSALites would not place any candidate. On the contrary, they might try to disrupt election by calling hartal on election day, throwing grenades, damaging buses, looting shops and destroying national property. "This cannot be allowed," he said and urged the people to face the situation with courage and fortitude.

Recalling the contribution of late President Ziaur Rahman, Mr Justice Abdus Sattar said that although President Zia was no longer physically present, he had left behind his revolutionary programmes. He called upon the students to work for the implementation of President Zia's programme as extra-curricular activities.

The Acting President said that it was through successful implementation of the 19-point programmes of President Zia that the country could reach its cherished goal. He hoped that BJCD would emerge as an ideal organisation.

Shah Aziz

Speaking on the occasion, Prime Minister Shah Azizur Rahman said that the BNP must implement the 19-point programmes of President Zia through peaceful revolution. He urged the Chhatra Dal workers not to confine themselves within the towns but spread all over the country and reach the message of the late President to every doorstep.

The Prime Minister said that the members of the front organisations of the BNP had a great role to play in sustaining democracy in the country. He said "we want to give you the responsibility of maintaining law and order in the polling booths."

Urging the students to be more united and strong, he declared that no conspiracy would be successful against the BNP.

Dr Khandker Mosharraf Hossain said that the Chhatra Dal workers would stand solidly behind the Acting President and help implement the programmes of Late President Ziaur Rahman.

A minute's silence was also observed as a mark of respect for the late president. Munajat was also [word illegible] for the salvation of the departed soul.

The reception was also attended by members of the Council of Ministers, Parliament Members and senior leaders of the Bangladesh Nationalist Party.

DETAILS OF BANGLADESH-FRG COOPERATION PACTS GIVEN

Dacca THE BANGLADESH OBSERVER in English 9 Sep 81 pp 1, 12

[Text] The Federal Republic of Germany (FRG) and Bangladesh signed in Dacca on Tuesday a formal agreement under which Bangladesh has received 25,000 metric tons of soft wheat worth Taka 84 lakh as grant for 1980-81, reports BSS.

Mr Shaful Maro, Additional Secretary External Resources Division and Mr Boron Von Marschall, the FRG Ambassador to Bangladesh signed the agreement on behalf of the respective sides.

As in the previous year a quantity of 5,000 tons of the total amount will be distributed within the framework of 'Food for Work' Programmes. The rest 20,000 tons would be used through rationing system.

The wheat has already arrived in June this year. This shipment is the continuation of the previous wheat supplies which come to a total of 3,59,000 metric tons.

The two countries also on Tuesday exchanged notes regarding the German assistance in the field of food assistance and security. This arrangement is in pursuance of the agreement signed between the two countries on July 15, 1972 which is worth Taka 245 lakh.

Under this agreement the German side will extend the assignment of three German experts already working with this project. The German side will also draw up a report on stores protection, send two short-term experts for this programme and supply photoxin and other materials for this project.

Later talking to newsmen, the FRG Ambassador said "we owe certain assistance to you" and the FRG also received aids after the Second World War. He said his government was happy to provide Bangladesh aids and assistance.

Mr Von Marschall paid rich tributes to the late President Ziaur Rahman and said the friendly relations between the two countries were further deepened during his visit to FRG three weeks before his assassination. The aid to Bangladesh was a sign of confidence in Bangladesh effort for national uplift, the Ambassador observed.

FINANCE MINISTER RAHMAN HOLDS PARIS NEWS CONFERENCE

Dacca THE BANGLADESH OBSERVER in English 8 Sep 81 pp 1, 12

[Text] Paris, Sept 7--United Nations member countries now have the choice of leaving the world's 280 million poorest people in abject poverty or giving them the means to start living, says Bangladesh Finance Minister Saifur Rahman reports AFP.

Behind "all the soulless statistics and data presented last week during the first half of the 14-day U.N. Conference on the 31 Least Developed Countries (LDC), are the human beings who are in a desperate position," Mr Rahman said at a news conference this weekend.

"These people are at the moment just existing not even living," Mr Rahman said. "They are being denied the dignity of human beings."

But for the first time ever, all 31 of those countries ranging from Afghanistan to Tanzania--have drawn up comprehensive development programmes aimed at "bringing their people to the level of living at least," he said.

The proposal presented to the Conference by the Group of 77 developing countries calls for a 400 per cent increase in aid to the world's poorest nations or a total of 240,000 million dollars by the end of the decade.

For Bangladesh, whose 90 million people represent almost one-third of all human beings living in the LDCs, the extra aid money would allow the country to carry out an integrated development package that has been approved by the World Bank and is being stymied only for a lack of funds Mr Rahman said.

At present some 80 per cent of Bangladeshis live under the country's poverty line of 120 U.S. dollars a year, about 30 per cent of the labour force is unemployed some 21 per cent of the people can read and write, and they live on an average for 47 years. Almost 45 per cent of the country's population is under the age of 15.

But under the development programme Bangladesh intends to lift 100 per cent of its people from below the poverty line by the end of the century, become self-sufficient in cereal grains within the next few years eliminate illiteracy, reduce fertility diversify exports and provide minimal amenities such as health care clean drinking water and electricity, especially in rural areas.

All that is needed now is more money Mr Rahman said Bangladesh at present gets some 1,300 million dollars in aid and is calling for 37,000 million dollars more over the next 10 years.

The country had to curtail its development programme last year because of a shortage of funds, and the future of its agricultural plan heralded as a great success by the U.S. is in jeopardy because of the lack of money, Mr Rahman said.

The U.S. has said that some LDCs would not know how to efficiently use extra aid money.

But World Bank approval of Bangladesh's development plans shows that the U.S. comment just did not apply to his country, Mr Rahman said.

Mr Rahman also rejected as "ungenerous" a comment made by a delegate from a developed country, which he did not identify, that the LDCs could solve their own problems if their people just worked harder.

The LDCs and other countries in the developing world, whose economies are often based on only one items have been hard-hit by wild fluctuations in world prices of certain commodities during the last several years, he said.

A major Bangladesh export is jute, Mr Rahman said. While worldwide inflation has made the cost of such essential imports as food and energy skyrocket, jute prices have fallen he said.

"It is these inequities in terms of trade and other international institutions which are perpetually working against the people who labour from sunrise to sunset and yet cannot earn a living" Mr Rahman said.

"These inequities are denying them their fruits of their labour," he said "and most of them do not even know the reason why."

BANK GOVERNOR STRESSES NEED TO SLOW CREDITS

Dacca THE BANGLADESH TIMES in English 13 Sep 81 pp 1, 12

[Text] The Governor of Bangladesh Bank, Mr M. Nurul Islam, has stressed the need for "slowing down" the bank credits and money supply, reports BSS.

The Governor was discussing various measures taken by the Bangladesh Bank to restrict expansion of bank credit at a meeting on Monday last with the representatives of the Federation of Chambers of Commerce and Industry.

The Governor pointed out that a substantial expansion of credit in recent months to both the private and public sectors partly due to irregular accounts and non-recovery of overdue loans, among other things, had led to sharp rise in money supply which might put further pressure on prices.

On the other side, the Governor said, a slow growth of exports and availability of commodity aid coupled with sharp rise in the Import Bill for petroleum and other importables had put pressures on the balance of payment position.

Restriction on bank credits, he said, would help check growth of money supply and credits without physically restricting import or raising customs duty on imports and to ease the balance of payment position.

Twin Measures

The twin measures of reducing the cash credit limits and imposing higher Letter of Credit (LC) margin for imports therefore, he said, were essential to deal with the situation caused by the sharp rise in credit and money supply.

He said that a five per cent general reduction in the cash credit limit "is nominal and is expected to ensure better and economical use of bank loan."

Care has been taken, the Governor said, to ensure that a minimum burden was imposed on importers of industrial raw materials and other essential consumer goods.

The federation representatives while indicating their understanding of the need and rationale of the measures taken pointed out the advisability of holding discussions with representatives of trade and industry on a regular basis.

Because, they said, while some of the measures would be temporary subject to adjustment later some might have to be continued for a longer time.

The Federation representing also pointed out the need for preparing a list of essential goods which would qualify for preferential treatment in regard to LC (Letter of Credit) margin.

Margin Restriction

The federation representatives that the margin restrictions would affect the small importers, but agreed to study the matter further in the light of actual situation.

They strongly urged for equal treatment to both public and private sectors in the matter of LC margin.

It was pointed out to the federation representatives that several public sector units do not compete with the private sector at all fall in a different category deserving differential treatment.

Moreover, all public sector units are required to turn over their surplus to the Government without being able to retain much for working funds the federation representatives were told.

TEXT OF BANGLADESH-INDIAN JOINT STATEMENT

Dacca THE BANGLADESH TIMES in English 14 Sep 81 pp 1, 8

[Text] New Delhi, Sept 13--Bangladesh and India, in a significant move, today decided to reverse the unhappy trend in bilateral ties by pledging to resolve all disputes through discussions in a friendly spirit, reports BSS.

Agreeing that unresolved issues act as a source of irritation, two countries committed to "peaceful and speedy," resolution of the problems like the South Talpatty and the sharing of Ganges waters, a joint Press statement said.

Both sides agreed to strengthen ties on the basis of 'mutual respect, trust and goodwill,' and further develop the good neighbourliness, according to the statement, issued at the end of Foreign Minister Prof. Muhammad Shamsul Huq's two-days' talks with Indian External Affairs Minister Narasimha Rao.

The two Foreign Ministers, resuming their talks held in the Bangladesh capital last year, agreed that both sides would constantly endeavour to settle any outstanding problem peacefully in a spirit of mutual understanding. About the south Talpatty issue, a major irritant, early talks were proposed at Foreign Secretaries level to examine all available data for report to Foreign Ministers with a view to an "early and peaceful" resolution.

Steps To Defuse Tension

The two Foreign Ministers reviewed implementation of steps to defuse tension over the issue and agreed to take further steps to remove "remaining causes of tension" and to resolve the island problem, the statement said.

They agreed to meet at "an early date," to settle the question of sharing the water of the Ganges between the two countries.

The two countries agreed to intensify efforts to find a solution to the long-term problem to augment the dry season flows of the river to their "mutual satisfaction."

About the lease—in perpetuity of the Tin Bigha corridor to Bangladesh as provided by the Indo-Bangladesh agreement of 1974, talks would be held at Foreign Secretaries level next month to finalise the terms and condition of the lease and resolve all outstanding problems about the land boundary.

Pending finalisation of the terms of lease conditions would be created to ensure necessary facilities of access as provided in the past, the statement said.

The two sides decided to resolve the question of delimitation of maritime boundary and expressed satisfaction at the signing of new trade agreement last year and the news telecommunications agreement reached early this year.

As regards to the establishment of railway link between the two countries both sides agreed to take further positive steps to advance progress on the basis of talks held in October last year.

On the South Asian regional cooperation mooted by Late President Ziaur Rahman, two sides would work in concert with other neighbouring nations for the progress and implementation of the proposal.

Text

The following is the Joint Press statement on Indo-Bangladesh talks signed by the Foreign Secretary of Bangladesh and Secretary, External Affairs of India, today on the conclusion of visit of Foreign Minister Prof. Md Shamsul Huq to New Delhi.

At the invitation of Shri P.V. Narasimha Rao, Minister of External Affairs of India, Prof Muhammad Shamsul Huq, Foreign Minister of Bangladesh paid a visit to India from September 11-13, 1981.

During his stay, the Foreign Minister of Bangladesh called on Shri Neelam Sanjiva Reddy, the President, Shri M. Hidayatullah, the Vice-President and Shrimati Indira Gandhi, the Prime Minister of India. He also called on Shri P.V. Narasimha Rao, Minister of External Affairs.

The two Foreign Ministers assisted by their respective aides held several rounds of talks in resumption of their earlier talks held during the visit of the External Affairs Minister of India to Bangladesh in August 1980. These talks were held in a cordial and friendly atmosphere. During the talks, the two sides reviewed bilateral relations and also discussed regional and international matters of mutual interest.

The two Ministers recognised that friendly and good neighbourly relations between Bangladesh and India were clearly in the larger interest of the peoples of the two countries and also of peace and stability in the region.

The two Ministers also expressed their firm belief that the foundation for building good neighbourly relations lay in mutual respect, trust and good will. The two Ministers agreed that some of the unresolved problems between Bangladesh and India were acting as a source of irritation and strain on the relations between them and that an early and peaceful resolution of their problem was clearly dictated by the larger interests of the peoples of the two countries. They, therefore, agreed that both sides would constantly endeavour to resolve any outstanding problems between them peacefully in a spirit of mutual understanding and good neighbourliness.

Land Boundary

Both sides agreed to intensify efforts for completion of steps already agreed upon at the Indo-Bangladesh Secretary level talks at New Delhi in October, 1980 towards early implementation of the 1974 Land Boundary Agreement. The two sides confirmed their respective Government's acceptance of the delineation on map, by their survey officials, of the territory to be leased at Tin Bigha. It was agreed that a meeting at the level of Foreign Secretaries would be held in October 1981 to resolve all outstanding problems related to the land boundary, including finalisation of the terms and conditions of the lease-in-perpetuity of the Tin Bigha corridor. Pending finalisation of the terms of lease, conditions would be created to ensure that necessary facilities of access which have been provided in the past would continue to remain available.

Maritime Boundary

The two Foreign Ministers reviewed the progress achieved in the resumed talks on the delimitation of the maritime boundary between Bangladesh and India in Dacca from December 2-5 1980 held in pursuance of the decision taken at their meeting in August 1980. They reiterated that the question of delimitation of the maritime boundary should be resolved by mutual agreement in a spirit of understanding and good neighbourliness and that another meeting be convened at a mutually convenient and early date.

Ganges Waters

The two Foreign Ministers took note of the understanding reached between them at their meeting in August 1980 and of the report of the first government review meeting under the Farakka Agreement concluded in April 1981. They agreed that efforts should be intensified to find a solution to the long-term problem of augmenting the dry season flows of the Ganges to the mutual satisfaction of both the countries. The two Foreign Minister agreed to discuss at an early date further measures to be taken in this connection.

The two sides, reaffirmed that efforts should be made to ensure that peace and tranquality are maintained on the border. It was agreed that each side would take effective measures to insure that their respective territories were not used for hostile activities directed against the other.

Both sides re-emphasised the need to stop illegal movement of people across the border and to strengthen existing arrangements and cooperation in this regard.

South Talpatty

A free and frank discussion was held on the question of the newly emerged New Moore-South Talpatty Island at the estuary of the border river Hariabhanga. The two Foreign Ministers reviewed implementation of steps in defusing the tension over this problem. They reiterated their agreement to take further necessary steps to remove the remaining causes of tension and to resolve the issue. For this purpose the two sides agreed to early talks at the level of Foreign Secretaries to examine all available data and report to the Foreign Ministers for further necessary steps to be taken with a view to an early and peaceful resolution of this problem.

Trade Railways

The two sides reiterated their willingness to pursue positively all efforts for increasing cooperation in various fields of mutual interest. They noted with satisfaction the signing of the new trade agreement in October 1980 the protocol on cultural and academic exchanges in December 1980 and the new telecommunications agreement in May 1981. As regards the establishment of railway links between the two countries, both sides agreed to take further positive steps to advance progress on the basis of the talks that have been held between the two railways in October 1980.

The two sides also agreed that the momentum of progress in the implementation of the proposal for regional cooperation among the South Asian countries should be maintained and all necessary steps for this purpose should be undertaken in concert with other neighbouring countries in the South Asian Region.

The two countries noted with satisfaction the similarity in their views on many of the international issues and agreed to cooperate closely in the various international forums in upholding the principles of the UN Charter, and the Non-aligned Movement.

The Foreign Minister of Bangladesh expressed his warm appreciation to the Minister of External Affairs of India for the generous hospitality extended to him and to the members of his delegation. He extended an invitation to him to pay an official visit to Bangladesh which the Indian External Affairs Minister accepted with pleasure.

IMPROVEMENT OF FARM CREDIT PROCEDURES URGED

Dacca THE BANGLADESH TIMES in English 14 Sep 81 p 5

[Article by Mir Obaidur Rahman]

[Text] Management is a broad concept. It encompasses areas of diverse nature. Management agricultural credit essentially covers the area of procedural methodology of loan disbursement and its recovery, fixation of interest rate which pays dividends both to the institutions and the debtor and determination of areas where the use of loan is most effective.

Agriculture is the mainstay of our economy. The agriculture sector contribute 53 per cent of gross domestic product to the national economy and employ more than 80 per cent of labour force. The importance and necessity of agricultural credit deserve special consideration for the overall development of the country since attainment of growth rate of more than 6 per cent is only possible when agricultural output shows substantial improvement. Credit is the lifeblood for agricultural operation since most of the peasants are on the subsistance level and operate their farm activities with inadequate finance or finance from dubious sources with exorbitant interest rate. The fragmentation of land holdings and increasing landlessness in rural area manifest the importance of proper management of credit in agriculture and agriculture allied activities such as pisciculture, poultry and horticulture.

At present, institutional sources meet only 15 per cent of total agricultural credit in rural Bangladesh and the rest by money lender, relatives and friends. The rate of interest in the latter case is quite high which tell heavily on the farmer's already precarious economic condition. The different institutions entrusted with the financing of agricultural activities are Bangladesh Krishi Bank, six nationalised commercial banks, the Bangladesh Samabaya Bank and the IRDP. The financial institutions finances' agricultural activities under two programmes; the Special Agricultural Credit Programme (SACP) launched in February 1977 and the Normal Programme. The IRDP mainly finances the activities in cooperative structure through the formation of KSSs and the credit is advanced mainly on programme basis. This type of financing may be conceived as input financing; the financing is specially meant for production activities. It is safe to say that programme oriented input financing is most effective for increased production and farmers cooperatives can repay the loan without much difficulty.

Very often the repayment loan suffers due to the nonutilisation of credit in the productive activities. Landless farmers generally consume 26 percent of credit is generally advanced without any valuable collateral, the recovery suffers from uncertainty.

Table (in Crore Taka)

Disbursement	1976-77	1977-78	1978-79	1979-80	Total
SACP	23.00	73.65	41.27	36.17	174.09
NP	71.96	135.49	125.97	100.33	403.75
Recovery
SACP	--	28.11	34.24	12.16	74.51
NP	58.50	78.60	82.50	45.66	265.26

Note: Figures up to December, 1979 for SACP and figures up to February, 1980 for NP

The table shows the disbursement and recovery position under SACP and Normal Programme of agricultural financing by BKB, nationalised commercial banks and Bangladesh Samabaya Bank Ltd.

The table asserts that recovery of loan under SACP was 42 per cent and under normal programme was about 65 per cent. Although disbursement and recovery figures during a period might not have a direct correspondence, the cumulative disbursement and recovery figure depict a disappointing picture.

The uncertain nature of recovery severely restrict the credit operation and retards the agricultural activities. The cumulative effect does not bring any good for the economy as a whole. It is imperative to ascertain the cause of default for better management of agricultural credit.

There are many reasons for the default. The most outstanding cause of default are due to the lack of trained and technical staff who failed to appraise the various investment proposals in depth. Determination of economic viability of a project which is subjected to the vagaries of nature is seldom accurate because risk element predominate the entire agricultural production. The untimeliness of credit availability is another reason for poor recovery. This result in diversion of credit to nonproductive activities. On the other hands, availability of credit in time facilitates the farmer to carry the activities according to plan schedule.

The recovery of loan may be ensured by its proper utilization. Thus supervision of credit use by the loaning agency may be a vital step for total recovery of outstanding and part credit. The supervised credit system will ease the administrative compliancy and also free the farmers on security such as title of land and other documents. The coverage of loan operation may be increased substantially and more landless and marginal farmers may claim access to credit facility either independently or through cooperatives. This is a pragmatic approach which will cost little for the economy as commercial banks have already opened a good number of branches in rural areas and also a division in the head office for proper execution. Supervision of credit by persons qualified in various technical field no doubt, ensure the proper utilization of credit and thus recovery will be an easy task.

Economy in the credit supervision may be attained either through area approach or Group approach procedure of loan disbursement. "Experience shows that a compact and contiguous area comprising a cluster of villages, if selected for financing various rural projects and extending need based credit to all the viable borrowers, gives much better result from the viewpoint of utilization of money and its recovery than financing a few isolated individuals and sporadic items of investment." Supervision oriented credit programme ensure productive utilization and disbursement may be regulated by installments payments and past performance with credit. Group lending programme has several advantages. The element of risk can be minimized and landless and marginal farmers may be encouraged to form group for mini projects on agricultural activities. This group lending approach will ease the supervision and generate employment opportunities for marginal and landness farmers. "This system helps to ensure proper end use of the credit and fixes part of the responsibility for the follow up on the group members themselves."

The recovery performance sometimes suffer due to some side conditions which deteriorate the economic situation of the debtor. Since agricultural operation involves times and risk elements pervade both in the production and marketing area, the real income phenomenon of the producer cannot be wiped out. A reasonable price of the product only ensure profit and recovery propensity may be enhanced by the pursuance of a realistic price policy. The price of the product should be fixed up with proper consideration of the cost of the production and, if necessary artificial fixation of the floor price by the government in contravention of the determination of price by the market law of supply and demand may be desired. The recovery performance is also constrained by environmental apathy of the farmers towards non-repayment who took it for granted that repayment is voluntary and failure of repayment will not pose any problem for the credit institutions. They fail to appreciate that chain effect of non-repayment seriously jeopardise the expansion of financial facilities. In fact, the defaults has resulted in the reduction of loan operation by the financial institutions and enforce more strictness in granting loan for agricultural activities. Thus establishment of a separate unit to motivate debtor for timely repayment may expedite the recovery.

The existing coverage of 12 per cent of rural mass in the credit operation can only be extended by fair recovery of the outstanding and past debt. Poor recovery of the credit, not only restricts the expansion of credit to the landless and marginal farmers but also severely raises the administrative cost of credit management, the ultimate effect of which brings rescheduling of interest rate to cover the inflated administrative cost. Repayment capacity is entirely a function of the productive utilization of credit and motivation can play an effective role to infuse the idea that timely repayment augur the credit worthiness. The deteriorating economic condition of the landless and marginal farmers can be averted by a well coordinated credit programme. Since most of the landless and marginal farmers cannot advance any security for credit worthiness, these groups may be extensively covered by production oriented programme with strict supervision by the credit institutions. It is the supervision oriented credit programme rather than security oriented credit programme which can profit both the financial institutions and the debtor.

AGRICULTURE MINISTER RETURNS FROM PYONGYANG MEETING

Dacca THE BANGLADESH OBSERVER in English 7 Sep 81 p 1

[Text] Mr Amirul Islam Kalam, State Minister for Agriculture and Forests, returned to Dacca on Sunday after attending a symposium on increasing food and agricultural production in the Non-aligned and developing countries held at the North Korean capital Pyongyang.

Mr Kalam who led a three-member Bangladesh delegation to the symposium described it as a great success in discussing agricultural and food production problems of the developing countries.

He told BSS on arrival that there were valuable deliberations at the symposium which stressed the urgent need for increasing food production and agricultural cooperation among the Non-aligned countries 'utilising their own resources.'

Mr Kalam said emphasis was also given on increasing cooperation in the field of agricultural technology and mechanisation.

At the symposium, one minute's silence was observed to show respect to the late President Ziaur Rahman.

During his stay in Pyongyang the Bangladesh Minister also called on the great leader of the Democratic Peoples Republic of Korea (DPRK), President Kim Il Sung and conveyed the felicitations from Acting President Justice Abdus Sattar.

The symposium was participated by representatives from nearly 80 countries and 14 international agencies concerned with food production and agricultural development.

The Minister said that during his visit to North Korea, he also met with other North Korean leaders including the Vice-Premier and discussed bilateral cooperation in the field of agricultural development.

Earlier on his way to Pyongyang the Minister had a stop over in Peking where he met with the Chinese Vice-Premier Wang Li and other leaders and discussed bilateral cooperation.

The Bangladesh delegation to the symposium included the Agriculture Secretary, Mr A.Z.M. Obaidullah Khan.

FOREIGN OFFICE SPOKESMAN COMMENTS ON DELHI TALKS

Dacca THE BANGLADESH TIMES in English 15 Sep 81 p 1

[Text] The just concluded Foreign Minister-level Indo-Bangladesh talks "proved to be a significant step" towards resolution of the various outstanding problems between the two countries, a Foreign Office spokesman said on Monday.

He said "as regards the South Talpatty island there was a reconfirmation of the commitment to defuse completely the situation by removing the remaining causes of tension. Such steps would include withdrawal of India's presence from the island and return to the status quo ante as of August 1980" when Foreign Ministers of the two countries agreed to a peaceful settlement of the problem in their meeting in Dacca.

The spokesman said that Foreign Secretaries of the two countries had been charged with the responsibility of examining all available data and to report to the Foreign Ministers for further steps to be taken with a view to an early and peaceful resolution of problem relating to South Talpatty.

He said that the visit of Bangladesh Foreign Minister Prof Shamsul Huq to New Delhi at the invitation of Indian External Affairs Minister, Mr Narasimha Rao for resumption of talks on various outstanding problems between the two countries provided an opportunity for exchange of views in light of the latest position. The talks were held in an atmosphere of amity, cordiality and objectivity. The talks reviewed the overall bilateral relations and also covered regional and international matters, he said.

The Foreign Office spokesman said that in view of the urgency for early implementation of the land boundary agreement it was agreed that the draft terms for lease in perpetunity of Tin Bigha corridor would be finalised in October, 1981. The Foreign Secretaries were to meet in October to resolve all outstanding problems related to the land boundary including finalisation of lease terms. Pending the finalisation conditions would be created to ensure that all facilities provided in the past would continue to be available.

With regard to the Ganges Water dispute, the spokesman said, decision of April 4, 1981 of the first review of the Farakka Agreement might be referred to it said "both sides reiterated the great importance they attach to finding an urgent solution to the problems of the augmentation of the flow of the Ganges. Both sides noted that appropriate and adequate measures for the purpose would have to be decided upon by the two governments at a high political level.

The two Foreign Ministers also agreed that they would meet again to discuss at an early date further measures to be taken with a view to finding a solution to the long term problem of augmenting the dry season flows of the Ganges to the mutual satisfaction of both countries, the spokesman said.

The foreign office spokesman further said that on the maritime boundary the two Foreign Ministers reviewed progress achieved since last meeting on maritime boundary held in December 1980 and reiterated that the question be resolved by mutual agreement in a spirit of understanding and good neighbourliness. They agreed that another meeting be convened at an early date.

CHHATRA LEAGUE-JJ LEADERS ISSUE JOINT STATEMENT

Dacca THE BANGLADESH OBSERVER in English 15 Sep 81 pp 1, 12

[Text] Bangladesh Chhatra League (Jalal-Jahangir) group expelled on Monday Messrs. Fazlur Rahman and Bahalul Majnun Chunnu from the organisation, says a Press release.

Meanwhile 17 leaders of the BCL (Jalal-Jahangir) in a joint statement issued on Monday alleged that the "Fazlu-Chunnu clique" were engaged in anti-organisational activities and the clique had been making "pretentious claims" of their loyalty to the programmes of the second revolution of Banglbandhu Sheikh Mujibur Rahman.

Bangladesh Chhatra League (Jalal-Jahangir) group enjoys the blessings of Sheikh Hasina Wazed President of Bangladesh Awami League.

It may be noted that 26 secretaries and members including Bahalul Majnun Chunnu of the Executive Committee belonging to Jalal-Jahangir faction severed ties with the committee headed by Dr Jalal.

On Sunday the rebel group in a Press release termed Jalal-Jahangir panel as unconstitutional and irregular. The members pledged their solidarity with the legal Fazlu-Chunnu faction.

Both the factions separately announced the election of two sets of office-bearers at the end of BCL conference held last month.

TEXT OF 14 SEPTEMBER PRESS NOTE BY INDUSTRIES MINISTRY

Dacca THE BANGLADESH TIMES in English 15 Sep 81 pp 1, 8

[Text] The Government in a Press Note on Monday warned a small section of the delinquent employees of the sector corporations for preventing a vast majority of the officers and staffs from attending their respective offices at Industrial Bhavan. It said under no circumstances acts of indiscipline would be tolerated and no pains would be spared to ensure maintenance of congenial working atmosphere in the offices.

Following is the text of the Press Note issued by the Ministry of Industries on Monday.

The Government has noticed with satisfaction that there has been a very perceptible improvement in the overall attendance in Sector Corporations.

The officers have all reported for duty with the exception of a few; while considerable improvement has been noticed in the attendance of the staff.

It has however been observed with concern that a small section of the delinquent employees have persisted with acts of intimidation and obstruction.

To prevent the vast majority of the officers and staff from doing their duties, this section of employees have resorted to nefarious acts like tampering with locks and damage to public property, including Government vehicles.

Action under criminal law is being taken against those responsible for crimes of this nature. Also disciplinary proceedings have already been initiated against those officers who have still been absenting themselves from duty.

Elaborate security arrangement has been made to ensure maintenance of peaceful atmosphere in the offices. In this connection, the Government would like to make it clear that under no circumstances will acts of indiscipline be tolerated and no pain would be spared to ensure maintenance of congenial working atmosphere in the offices.

It is reiterated that the Government is fully aware of the necessity for fulfillment of all the legitimate demands of the employees but in no case will resort to illegal strike and violence be tolerated.

PEOPLE URGED TO BE ALERT AGAINST BORDER INFILTRATORS

Dacca THE BANGLADESH TIMES in English 10 Sep 81 pp 1, 12

[Text] Deputy Home Minister Prof Abdus Salam has called upon the people in the bordering districts to remain alert against possible infiltration by anti-state elements from across the border for carrying out subversive activities in the country.

Addressing a rally of cross section of people at Nakla High School field in Jamalpur district recently, Prof Salam said that those elements who left the country after August 1975 political changeover, might try to return to create law and order situation. He urged the people to watch the movements of "new faces." "If you find their movements suspicious, apprehend them and hand over to the local law enforcing agencies," he said.

Presided over by Mr Firozuddin Ahmed, President, Naklathana unit of the Bangladesh Nationalist Party (BNP), the meeting was also addressed by the State Minister for Petroleum and Mineral Resources Subil Gupta, Joint Secretary of the BNP Zulmat Ali Khan, a member of the party's Central Committee Suboth Mitra Khandher Mujibur Rahman, Vice-President, Sherpur district BNP and Mr Abdur Razzak Ashish, President, Sherpur district Jatiyatabadi Jubo Dal.

Stressing the need for maintaining a peaceful atmosphere in the country, Prof Abdus Salam said that only an ideal and law and order situation could ensure free and fair presidential election. The present government was determined to weed out anti-state and anti-social elements for the greater interest of the nation.

He urged the members of the law enforcing agencies to be impartial in their attitude and serve the people with dedication.

Mr Supil Gupta said that the present government would implement all the programmes of late President Ziaur Rahman and would fulfill all his commitments.

He said that various programmes of the late President, particularly the canal digging one, had begun yielding fruits. He urged the people to participate in canal digging programmes in future.

Mr Zulmat Ali Khan appealed to the people to rally round the BNP and vote for Mr Justice Abdus Sattar in the forthcoming presidential election to maintain political stability and ensure unhindered economic growth.

As the successor of President Ziaur Rahman, the Acting President had already proved his worth as a man of the hour to lead the destiny of the nation.

Mr Subodh Mitra said that with the shifting of the election date, all the Opposition parties should now take part in the election.

FOREIGN MINISTER TALKS TO PRESS ON LEAVING FOR DELHI

Dacca THE BANGLADESH TIMES in English 12 Sep 81 pp 1, 8

[Text] Foreign Minister Prof M. Shamsul Huq said in Dacca on Friday that he would discuss the entire gamut of bilateral relations with India with the Indian leaders for peaceful settlement of the outstanding problems between the two countries, reports BSS.

The Foreign Minister was addressing a Press conference at Zia International Airport before departure for New Delhi on a three-day visit for the talks at the invitation of his Indian counterpart, Mr Narasimha Rao.

Describing the present climate of Bangladesh-India relations to be characterised by "understanding and amity" Prof Huq said that the talks would be held with an open mind.

The results of the New Delhi talks, he hoped, would pave the way for enduring friendship and increasing cooperation between two countries.

He said that at his meeting with the Indian External Affairs Minister "we will pick up the outstanding issues from where we had left in our last meeting held in Dacca in August last."

Land, Maritime Boundary

The four outstanding issues, he said, are the South Talpatty question, implementation of the 1974 Bangladesh-India land boundary agreement, the long-term plan for augmentation of the Ganges waters and the delineation of the maritime boundary.

He said he was carrying a message from Acting President Mr Justice Abdus Sattar to Prime Minister Mrs Indira Gandhi. The Foreign Minister will call on Indian President Mr Nilam Sanjiva Reddy, Vice-President, Mr Hedayetullah and Prime Minister, Mrs Indira Gandhi.

Prof Huq replying to questions said that both the countries were committed to peaceful settlement of the outstanding problems.

He expressed the hope that the talks would produce positive results restoring "mutual trust, understanding and amity" between the "two close neighbours."

He told a questioner that all but one navy ship of India had been withdrawn from South Talpatty.

The process of defusion of the problem, he said, had already started. This, he hoped will be completed resulting in full Indian withdrawal from the island and a peaceful solution to it.

Prof Huq told a questioner that no effort would be left for protection of Bangladesh's national interests on all the outstanding issues and problems.

"It's Not Sudden"

Asked the reason for sudden change in Indian position for peaceful solution of problems through talks, Prof Huq said, "it's not sudden." In Cancun (Mexico) and New York I had discussions with Mr Narasimha Rao on all outstanding issues including South Talpatty for a peaceful settlement to which both the countries are committed."

Asked about the prospect of a just solution of the problems Prof Huq said, "some forward movement has already been made" and expressed optimism for a positive outcome in the larger intest of the two peoples as well as for peace in the region.

The Foreign Minister hoped that the talks would be held in an atmosphere of amity, objectivity, mutual trust and, understanding and result in concrete measures for an early and peaceful solution of the problems.

The results of the talks Prof Huq hoped would pave the way for enduring friendship and increasing cooperation as expected between the two close neighbours.

He said that his present journey for three important missions would also take him to 36th UN General Assembly session and the Commonwealth summit conference in Melbourne.

Prof Huq leaves New Delhi for United Nations on Septmeber 13.

He will return to Dacca on October 9 after attending the Commonwealth conference.

FREEDOM FIGHTERS URGED TO UPHOLD NATIONAL UNITY

Dacca THE BANGLADESH OBSERVER in English 3 Sep 81 p 1

[Text] Mr Abdul Halim Chowdhury, Minister for Local Government, Rural Development and Cooperatives, on Wednesday called upon the freedom fighters to forge a strong unity for fighting out the enemies of country's sovereignty and independence, reports BSS.

Addressing the Eid-reunion function organised by the freedom fighters residing in Dacca city at Shilpakala Academy, Mr Chowdhury who was a Commander of Sector Number 2 in the Liberation War said that the War of Liberation would continue till the enemies of the independence were eliminated.

Presided over by Mr Mudassir Hossain Modu a crippled freedom fighter who arrived at the Academy in a wheel chair the reunion was also addressed among others by Mr Azizul Haque Chashi and Khondkher Shafiqul Alam.

Mr Abdul Halim Chowdhury declared that none would be allowed to grab a single inch of soil of Bangladesh territory.

Regarding the territorial issues of South Talpatty Dahagram and Angarpota he said efforts were being made for peaceful solution of the disputes.

He said if the diplomatic negotiations fail the freedom fighters would not sit idle. "I in my sixties would fight in the forefront against the independence were now working hard shoulder to shoulder with the freedom fighters for building the country.

Abdul Halim Chowdhury recalled that the late President Ziaur Rahman, whom he (Halim) termed as the greatest of all freedom fighters had wanted to rehabilitate the freedom fighters in their rightful place with dignity and honour.

He said that everybody including the persons in the Government must have regards for the freedom fighters.

Commenting on the debate whether the freedom fighters would do politics or not the Cooperative Minister made it clear that the very basis of the War of Liberation in 1971 was political for economic emancipation.

He said freedom fighters must involve themselves in national politics for upholding the national independence and sovereignty.

He said that the freedom fighters should shun their petty differences and spread themselves in each and every part of the country with the message of national unity for upholding democracy and stability in the country.

He said that the freedom fighters should also play a pioneering role in educating and inspiring the younger generation so that they could equip themselves with adequate knowledge and spirit to bring economic emancipation of the country.

FINANCE MINISTER'S REMARKS TO PARIS MEET REPORTED

Dacca THE BANGLADESH OBSERVER in English 3 Sep 81 p 1

[Text] Paris, Sept 2: Finance Minister Saifur Rahman urged the Group of 77 to adopt the substantial new programme of action prepared by the senior officials of the least developed countries (LDCs) reports ENA.

Making an intervention in the final preparatory meeting of the Group of 77 here on Monday night the Minister put up a strong plea for unity and cohesion among the developing countries.

Mr Saifur Rahman suggested "instead of frittering away our precious time and energy in negotiating among ourselves, we should put in our full weight behind the programme and negotiate unitedly with the developed countries for their back-up assistance for the programme."

He said the developing countries should concentrate more on negotiation with the developed countries than on whipping up unwarranted controversies on certain details of the programme to create impediment in the negotiation with the developed countries.

The Minister's appeal elicited favourable response from the members state of the Group of 77 who later adopted the programme without any reservation.

It may be noted the implementation of the substantial new programme of action in the 31 LDCs will involve an estimated expenditure of 220 billion dollars throughout the decade of 80s. Of this amount 100 billion dollars will be mobilised by the LDCs from their domestic resources and the rest 120 billion dollars are expected to be committed by the developed countries through their Official Development Assistance (ODA).

Commenting on the inaugural address of President Mitterrand yesterday, Mr Saifur Rahman told ENA it articulates the sentiments and expectations of the LDCs. His address is also indicative of the French Government's favourable response to the programme. He hoped it would serve as the peace-setter for the conference.

Earlier, Mr Saifur Rahman had separate talks with the Chinese Vice-Minister of Economic Relations with the Foreign Countries. During the talks the Chinese Vice-Minister assured his Government's full support for the programme.

CHHATRA LEAGUE CRISIS RESULTS IN PARTY SPLIT

Dacca THE BANGLADESH TIMES in English 2 Sep 81 pp 1, 8

[Text] The crisis over the leadership of Bangladesh Chhatra League (Kader-Chunnu), student wing of the Awami League (Hasina), resulted in a vertical division in the organisation with the announcement of two separate central committees on Tuesday.

After bickering for four days over the leadership the rival factions of the BCL elected their own committees in separate meetings.

The out-going President of BCL, Mr Obaidul Kader declared at a meeting of the workers at Madhu's canteen of the Dacca University, the names of 59-member central committee with Dr Mostafa Jalal Mohiuddin, Mr K.M. Jahangir and Mr Hemayetuddin alias Auronga as President, General Secretary and Organising Secretary, respectively.

On the other hand, a press release issued by Mr Bahalul Majnun Chunnu on Tuesday night said that the Subjects Committee of BCL Conference in a meeting held at the auditorium of the Jagannath Hall of the Dacca University had elected a 59-member central committee with Messrs Fazlur Rahman, Bahalaul Majnun Chunnu and Jahangir Kabir Nanak as President, General Secretary and Organising Secretary respectively.

After the meeting of the subjects committee the names of the new central committee were announced at "Battala" of the Arts Faculty by Mr Shahpewaz Zaman Azad Choudhury, the press release said.

Mr Obaidul Kader while speaking at the meeting of the BCL said a Compromise Committee with five members each from two faction replacing the subjects committee elected at the council session on Saturday had elected the new leaders.

The Compromise Committee he said had voted 6-4 in favour of the new committee.

The Compromise Committee met several times at the Dhanmondi residence of Awami League (Hasina) chief Sheikh Hasina Wazed.

The subject committee was reportedly dissolved after its members fled in panic when threatened by gunmen loyal to a certain person.

The Press release issued by Mr Chunnu claimed that the subject committee meeting at Jagannath Hall was attended by Presidents and General Secretaries of 60 organisational district committees of the BCL. It has 70 district committees.

Meanwhile, the supporters of Mr Chunnu further claimed that the so-called compromise committee had no right to elect leadership of the BCL at the instances of Awami League (Hasina) high ups. They further said that they were opposed to the terror unleashed by one group which supported the candidature of a fugitive wanted in at least a dozen murder cases including that of a member of the intelligence service. They said that he had been staying with Kader Siddiky in India.

The faction headed by Mr Obaidul Kader had been enjoying the support of Mr Tofael Ahmed, the Organising Secretary of AL while the group led by Mr Bahalaul Majnun Channu had the blessings of Mr Abdur Razzak, General Secretary of the party. It is also reported that AL chief Sheikh Hasina had her blessings for the panel submitted by Mr Obaidul Kader.

EDITORIAL HAILS SATTAR REMARKS ON MINORITIES

[Editorial: "No Minorities"]

[Text] Mr Justice Abdus Sattar, the Acting President, has said that there are, conceptually, no minorities in this country. This not to deny the existence of any group or section distinct from others, nor to say that all are the same in every respect. Obviously, they are not and they cannot be. What the Acting President has emphasised is the fact that here in this country no distinction is made between one man and another or between one group or another on any ethnic, cultural, economic or social grounds. It is more than saying that all are equal in the eyes of law. That they surely are; but they are equal in all other ways too--socially and culturally, as citizens of the country and as agents of development. The statement of the Acting President is significant and deep-rooted. It reflects the attitude of the people and of the government. Recalling the ideals of late President Ziaur Rahman, the Acting President said that he was a real friend and a great patron of the people of this country irrespective of caste, creed and colour.

The occasion on which the Acting President has spoken is important too. He was the chief guest at the national convention of the aboriginal and the tribal people of the country. The convention was the first of its kind. It was participated by representatives of many a tribe and many an area, and the participants had brought into focus the problems they were faced with and the ways in which they could contribute to the process of national development. The convention dismisses the mistaken impression, if there be any, that the tribal and the aboriginal are forgotten people. They surely are not. The developmental efforts that have been mounted in tribal areas--in the Chittagong Hill Tracts, for example--are by themselves a pointer to the government's sincerity of purpose. It was nonetheless necessary to hold a convention of this kind, for it has drawn attention to the tribal and the aboriginal and to their problems, and has reminded all of the link that exists between them and the rest of the people.

The tribal and the aboriginal represent a distinct stream in culture. The values they have preserved and the social norms they have kept unaltered are not of the ordinary kind. And yet these are neither outside the factors which, taken together, constitute the culture of the land, nor are these basically different from those. There is no conflict between culture in general and the specialized streams that are to be found within its well-defined limits. In this basic sense too, there are no minorities in this land. It would be important to preserve and safeguard these special traits and to enrich them if possible. It is through a proper understanding of the way of life of the tribal and the aboriginal that their talents can be made best use of and their full potential realized.

Responsibilities that the citizens of this country bear are the same for all. It is a common will, a common aspiration, a common determination that is at work behind all that is being done. The Acting President has called upon the special groups to actively participate in the main stream of development, and this is what it should be. Since they are no different from the others, their interest lies in promoting and strengthening forces that are being made use of for securing total, overall and uncompromising welfare of all the people. The tribal and the aboriginal realize this as much as others do. It is only logical therefore to expect that all would work together and in cooperation with one another for attaining goals that this nation as a whole must try to attain soon. It would be important, however, also to extend to the tribal and the aboriginal facilities they specially need and deserve, for the disadvantage they might have suffered from in the past must be done away with as quickly as possible.

MEET NAMES PROJECTS FOR AGRICULTURAL COOPERATION

[Text] The first meeting of the study group (agriculture) of seven Asian nations ended in Dacca on Wednesday identifying 14 specific projects for consideration of cooperation among them in agricultural sector reports ENA.

The projects are soil seeds, water energy fertilizer and fertility, livestock fisheries pests and diseases, tools and machinery post-harvest technology, nutrition, forestry, consultancy and training.

Experts and representatives from Nepal, Bhutan, Sri Lanka, India, Pakistan, Maldives and Bangladesh took part in the two-day deliberations of the meeting held at a local hotel.

As an arrangement for monitoring and implementing various projects the meeting proposed for evolving a three-tier "contact mechanism" at ministerial secretarial and scientist levels of the regional countries.

Briefing newsmen on the outcome of the meeting, Dr Kazi M. Badroddoza Country Coordinator for Bangladesh said the contact mechanism being the key to the success of all programmes was strongly recommended to be examined at the secretarial level meeting and approved at the ministerial level.

The meeting also recommended the necessity of economic cooperation among the regional countries in the field of processing and marketing agricultural commodities and initiating an action programme on the issue, Dr Badruddoza said.

The meeting laid strong emphasis for inter-country cooperation in those fields where the countries have acquired indigenous capabilities and experience that is unique to their problems and conditions and where there are mutual advantage and complimentaries in cooperating among themselves.

It also recommended that lasting cooperative arrangements at the substantive and technical levels should be systematically promoted by linking appropriate institutions, facilities and programmes in various fields in the countries willing to commit themselves to serve as partners in technical cooperation.

Dr Kazi Badruddoza said the meeting also recognised as an urgent need to improve the system of information on needs capacities and opportunities so as to ensure an efficient flow of information to governments and institutions of the countries in the region.

The meeting resolved that the governments of the countries in the South Asian region should endeavor to establish or strengthen suitable arrangements to encourage and maintain closer technical collaboration in the fields of agricultural research, extension and development.

Recommending for creation of a not work of complimentary training programme the meeting felt that the governments should keep in view the training facilities available in the region and make best use of such facilities to build up human resource in the region.

PEOPLE'S LEAGUE CANDIDATE BEGINS CAMPAIGN

Dacca THE BANGLADESH OBSERVER in English 10 Sep 81 pp 1, 12

[Text] People's League presidential candidate Mr Alim-Al-Razee on Wednesday said his party is committed to establishing "people's democracy" in the country which will ensure total control of Parliament over the executive, reports ENA.

Addressing his maiden public meeting after announcing his candidature for Presidential election the People's League Chairman said that his party wants to introduce a democratic system which will put an end to the prospect of coup once for all. "We want people control the guns and guns never the people," he added.

The meeting held at the Baitul Mukarram square was also addressed, among others, by party leaders Dr Ahmed Hussain, Amjad Hussain, Fazlul Huq; Yaqub Ali; Hamida Rahman and Kazi Nurul Islam.

Dr Razee ridiculed the BNP claim that its candidate Justice Sattar was a veteran politician. He said "Who had been in politics during the last 30 years, but who had seen Justice Sattar on the street supporting a cause of the people," he posed a question.

Dr Razee said Justice Sattar as held the office of Vice-President as "a mere appointee." He said Justice Sattar was a judge in the erstwhile Pakistan and "since then always served as government servant."

He said after the death of President Ziaur Rahman, he was declared a Presidential candiate of the BNP in violation of the constitution.

He said this is a clear pointer to the fact that BNP has no love for democracy or respect to even the presidential system of democracy which he said "is an extravagant luxury for a poor country like Bangladesh.

DACCA MEETING HELD ON MAO DEATH ANNIVERSARY

Dacca THE BANGLADESH OBSERVER in English 10 Sep 81 pp 1, 12

[Text] Bangladesh Sammayabadi Dal on Wednesday observed the fifth anniversary of death of Mao Tse-tung, reports ENA.

On this occasion the party held a discussion meeting at Dacca District Sports Association auditorium in Dacca on Wednesday afternoon.

Chairman of Sammayabadi Dal Mohammad Toaha MP was the main speaker at the discussion meeting while it was presided over by Kandakar Ali Abbas Assistant Secretary of "the party."

Speaking on the occasion Mr Toaha paid glowing tributes to the memory of Chairman Mao Tse-tung and suggested the left political parties to learn the basic ideals of Marxism and Leninism.

He admitted that the left political and progressive organisations proved to be failures on different occasions in the past because of their disunity and lack of proper knowledge of progressive movement.

Mohammad Toaha put up a strong plea for unity among the leftist and progressive political forces and observed that there is no way for achieving emancipation of the people without making the country "self-reliant."

The discussion meeting was participated among others by Mr Santi Sen, Advocate Luthfey Alam, Mr Alauddin Ahmed, Mr Amanullah Kabir and Mr Dilip Barua.

MINISTER OPENS DACCA AGRICULTURAL MEETING

Dacca THE BANGLADESH OBSERVER in English 9 Sep 81 p 1

[Text] The agricultural study group of seven South Asian nations began its first meeting in Dacca on Tuesday for identifying the areas of mutual cooperation in the agricultural sector.

Inaugurating the meeting, Mr Amirul Islam Kalam, Minister of State for Agriculture and Forests called upon the members of the group to formulate a joint course of action on effective collaborative lines for agricultural research and uplift in the concerned countries. He felt that regional cooperation among the developing nations had become an important instrument in the present-day world for promoting sound development programmes.

The meeting is being participated by experts and representatives from Bangladesh, Sri Lanka, Pakistan, India, Nepal, Bhutan and Maldives. It is a follow-up action of the decision of the Foreign Secretary level meeting of South Asian nations, held in Colombo in April last.

In his inaugural speech the Bangladesh State Minister recalled that the proposed regional cooperation forum among the South Asian countries was first put forward by late President Ziaur Rahman. "It is our proud privilege to give a concrete shape to his ideas and carry forward the movement of regional and global cooperation," he observed.

He was quite optimistic that much could be achieved in bridging the food gap in the countries of the region through a cooperative effort in Agricultural field. He noted that increasing collaboration and effective cooperation for utilising the material and human resources of the region would help establish and strengthen a more efficient agricultural production system.

Mr Amirul Islam Kalam said that the difficulties encountered by the Third World countries made it all the more imperative that the countries of South Asia evolve strategies on collective self-reliance through mutual cooperation.

He stressed the need for a systematic approach on the basis of careful study and adequate preparations and added that regional cooperation in agricultural field should be complimentary to the existing bilateral and multilateral cooperations and should be viewed as "substitutes for the same."

The State Minister pointed out that the goals of agricultural development had to be realised within the shortest possible time in view of "our very pressing problems."

He observed that there was information gap even with regard to our respective scientific capabilities in the region. He said that the related scientific capabilities developed over centuries and most suited to the socio-economic conditions of the region, should be profitably harnessed for collective regional advantage.

The State Minister was very hopeful that the deliberations at the meeting would materially contribute towards the achievement of "tangible results" and help the regional countries in realising the goal of self-reliance.

BUSINESSMEN FEAR EFFECTS OF CREDIT RESTRICTION

Dacca THE BANGLADESH OBSERVER in English 6 Sep 81 pp 1, 12

[Text] Dacca Chamber of Commerce and Industry on Saturday expressed the apprehension that credit restriction would create great problems in utilising licences and adversely affect the implementation of the Import Policy, reports BSS.

In a memorandum submitted to the Chief Controller of Imports and Export (CCIE) the Chamber pointed out that public sector had been allowed to open letter of credit (L/C) against five per cent margin while there existed differential treatment between the public and private sectors.

The Chamber also pointed out the bottlenecks in the way of implementation of the Import Policy and suggested expeditious disposal of revalidation of L/C authorisation, continuation of duty benefit for imports under Wage Earners Scheme and increasing import entitlement of any industry to not less than 100 per cent.

A Press release of the Chamber said that out of the total import allocation of Taka 2950 crore for the current fiscal commercial and industrial imports under private sector accounted for only eleven percent and 26 percent respectively. The Chamber also demanded increase in the private sector's share considerably.

However the Chief Controller of Imports and Exports explained the financial constraints and said that credit restriction was a temporary phase while efforts were being made to mobilise funds to tide over the situation according to the Chamber Press release.

TRAINING SCHOOL FOR GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATORS OPENS

Dacca THE BANGLADESH OBSERVER in English 6 Sep 81 p 12

[Text] A new training academy designed to improve planning and development capabilities of the personnel engaged in administrative machinery was inaugurated in Dacca Thursday by the Establishment Minister Mr Majedul Haq, reports BSS. Speaking on the occasion the Establishment Minister said that more such training academies would be opened to impart proper training to persons associated with administrative jobs in the Government.

He said that training should be conducted in such a way that our own shortfalls could be detected. Training from a very highly developed country would not serve our purpose, he added.

Planning Minister Dr Fasihuddin Mahtab, who presided over the function stressed the need for planning capabilities of the officials and said the development efforts would be thwarted if the planning cell did not function properly. He said the recent evaluation had revealed that our implementing capabilities had increased.

Mr J. Abedin, Vice-Principal of the Academy and Group Captain (Retd) Syed Ahmed also spoke on the occasion.

The Academy will offer basic courses for foundation training of new recruits, refresher courses and seminars and workshops for the in-service personnel on a regular basis. The basic courses will be designed to impart training in development economics, business information systems, statistics, planning techniques and allied subjects.

The academy when fully developed will have an annual capacity for training 260 officers.

A four-week training course on project management, the first programme being run by the academy, was also inaugurated on the same day.

A batch of 20 officers drawn from different ministries and agencies concerned are participating in the programme.

POWER DEVELOPMENT BOARD PLANS NEW GIANT PLANTS

Dacca THE BANGLADESH OBSERVER in English 11 Sep 81 pp 1, 12

[Text] The Power Development Board would install a number of giant power generating units under long and short-term programmes to generate additional power for ensuring systematic reliability in the power system of the country, reports BSS.

An additional 210 megawatt turbine, the single largest generating unit in the country, at Ghorasal, two more units at Ashuganj--150 megawatt capacity each--and the 50 megawatt third unit at Karnafully Hydel Project are four of the several other generating units to be installed in the next few years for additional generation of power.

A Power Board source said that the work of the Karnafully third unit had almost been completed to put it into commission by the first week of next month. Feasibility study for the fourth and the fifth units at Kaptai having fifty megawatt capacity. Each had also been done and civil engineering works had been progressing to complete the project by 1986. Negotiations for fund for the project had been going on with Japan, the source said.

In an interview with the BSS the Chairman of the Power Development Board, Brigadier M.A. Munim said that the installed capacity of the generation system would roughly be doubled by 1985 and eleven hundred and fifty megawatt power would be available for transmission. The demands for power in the country would then roughly be nine hundred and forty three megawatt, he added.

One 60 megawatt steam station at Sikalbaha in Chittagong and one 110 megawatt steam station at Khulna are being built under Czechoslovak aid. These stations would be completed in the next two years.

The Ashuganj units of the projects are being financed by the World Bank, the Federal Republic of Germany and the Organisation of Oil Exporting Countries (OPEC). These units would come into operation in 1985 and 1986.

The Ghorasal unit is being financed by the Soviet Union and it would come into operation in 1984.

The Chairman of the Power Development Board said that constant efforts were being made to develop cheapest but abundant electricity preferably by careful exploitation of the natural resources of the country. This is being done to cater to the existing and potential demands of the people.

He said that simultaneous efforts were being made to balance the transmission and distribution system with the generation of the power in the country.

In reply to a question, the Chairman of the Power Board attributed the cause of power breakdown mainly to mechanical faults due to aging machinery and equipment. "Because of many constraints, we can not go for routine overhauling of the equipment. We have to run the machine more than eight thousand hours at a stretch overstripping the overhauling date," he said.

Brigadier Munim said that the Board had done some overhauling work on some equipment despite inconveniences caused to the consumers. These overhauling works would improve the generation capacity of the units, he added.

The Chairman of the Power Board said that the cost of the production of electricity was dependent on imported oil, gas and hydraulic system. We cannot reduce the generation cost of power when the price of oil goes up, he said and added that the per unit fuel cost for generation of power in the western zone is Taka 1.80 which is more than 22 times the cost in the eastern zone.

He said during the last financial year the total cost of fuel for generation of power was Taka one hundred thirty six crore and seventeen lakh of which Taka one hundred twenty one crore and five lakh were spent for the western zone, where generation is based on oil only.

GOVERNMENT PLAN FOR RUBBER CULTIVATION REPORTED

[Text] Chittagong, Sept 10--The government has drawn up an elaborate programme to bring about 70,000 acres of land under rubber cultivation within 1990 in the country.

Of this land 40,000 acres will be set aside for rubber cultivation under government management and 30,000 acres under private ownership.

The Asian Development Bank is committed to provide 20 million dollars for materialising the programme.

According to the official sources, the programme is aimed at achieving self-sufficiency in rubber. The present requirement of rubber in the country is about 10 million pounds, but the production of current year was only 1.2 million pounds.

The programme was prepared on the basis of a feasibility report of the Food and Agricultural Organisation (FAO). The Asian Development Bank financed FAO for undertaking this feasibility study.

The work under this programme will be completed in two phases. The first phase envisages the production of high yielding varieties of rubber over an area of 25 068 acres by 1937 [as published]. The remaining 15,000 acres will be brought under rubber cultivation during the second phase. Presently 2,598 acres come under rubber cultivation in Chittagong, Chittagong Hill Tracts and Sylhet districts.

The government will soon set up a rubber board to facilitate the implementation of rubber cultivation programme. The proposed board will be responsible for the rubber plantation in both public and private sectors in place of Bangladesh Forest Industries Development Corporation.

The programme also envisages the construction of central latex concentration factory development of infrastructure for rubber estate and establishment of rubber development centre.

VISITING UN TEAMS TO EXAMINE OIL, WATER PROJECTS

Dacca THE BANGLADESH OBSERVER in English 8 Sep 81 pp 1, 12

[Text] A number of United Nations expert teams as well as some foreign consulting firms are expected to visit Bangladesh soon to examine projects in the petroleum and water resources sectors, Kazi Anwarul Huq, Minister for Flood Control Water Resources and Power, said in Dacca on Monday, reports BSS.

The Minister who returned Dacca on Monday, after a visit to the United States and Britain told reporters at the airport that he had useful talks with the executives of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and some foreign oil companies who had expressed interests to participate in the country's oil and gas exploration and development of the energy.

He said the UNDP would send an expert team to examine whether mini-hydroelectric projects were feasible in Bangladesh. The team will also study whether the Teesta Flood Control and Irrigation Project can be converted into a multi-purpose project that can also generate hydel-power.

The Minister said another UNDP team was expected to look into the possibility of replacing of diesel by compressed natural gas in the transport sector.

Kazi Anwarul Huq said that during his visit to the United States, he had fruitful discussions with the American geological survey which is expected to help upgrading the Bangladesh geological survey.

Besides, some American private firms had shown keen interest to provide consultancy services to the country's oil and gas exploration and development sector during the interim period till the Bangladesh Petroleum Institute goes into full operation.

On his way back, the Minister had talks in London with British Petroleum (BP) who had shown interest in the exploration activities through a production-sharing contract.

But he said that the British Petroleum was particularly interested in the Surma basin area where Petro-Bangla had already been working. However, the Minister said that company might also be interested in other zones and was expected to send a team to discuss in this regard.

BETTER TERMS FOR MULTINATIONAL OIL FIRMS URGED

Dacca THE BANGLADESH TIMES in English 3 Sep 81 p 5

[Article by K.M. Manmudur Rahman]

[Text] The extractive sector of all economics are the most technology and capital intensive, Oil exploration, drilling and production are at the zenith of all such activities. The complexity and sophistication of its technology is unmatched by any other mining sector. The progressive growth in oil-exploration technology has been phenomenal over the last decade. This is manifest in the move to commercially extract oil from the sea-beds of the world, often many miles from the coastline. This technology, like most others, is the monopoly of a few developed countries, or more precisely of some multinational corporations of these industrialised economics. Virtually all developing countries have to relay on these corporations of these industrialised economics. Virtually all developing countries have to relay on these corporations for oil exploration and production within their own territories. This dependence is an unpalatable economic fact.

While most areas of the developing world remain unexplored and unexploited with regard to its oil-potential, the exact opposite is true for industrialised countries. Thus the opportunity to tap these virgin sources, is no doubt an attractive proposition for multinational corporation. At the same time, these Corporation are fully aware of the dependence of less developed economics on their technology. Thus a classic bilateral bargaining situation is involved. In the past most oil corporations owned extremely attractive concessions in developing countries--the later obtaining only one-tenth of the revenue obtained from their oil. The rest of the benefit went to rich developed countries in terms of low price of oil, and to oil corporations in the form of phenomenal profits. This state of affairs encouraged oil companies to invest ever-increasing amounts of capital into developing countries for exploration and production.

In 1973, this state of the distribution of gains from oil exploration was changed drastically by a four-fold increase in earnings of some developing countries producing oil (i.e. OPEC). Even prior to this even, strict production-sharing contracts had begun to come into force in Iraq, Indonesia and few other developing countries. This new-found assertiveness on the part of developing countries. However, it is worth mentioning that since then, over the last 5 years, new investments in oil exploration in all developing countries by multinational corporations have been on the decline both absolutely & relatively.

Bangladesh overtook her oil-exploration activities with new vigour since her independence. Many foreign oil companies were invited to negotiate the terms. Only seven finally agreed and paid signature bonuses to take out options which was an extremely low number in view of the virginity of Bangladesh's soil what is even more surprising is that only three companies actually carried out any substantial exploratory work. These two aspects of Bangladesh's experience with multinationals in oil exploration is clearly explicable by two factors. First, the terms and conditions of the Agreement were perhaps too harsh to permit an attractive return on their high risk capital. Second, despite the unattractiveness of the terms, these companies decided to come in merely on the basis of a defensive oligopolitic strategy i.e. hold concessions in order to prevent other companies from finding oil but not to use the concessions.

There is no doubt that profit-making is the basic goal of any multinational corporation. Their investments in various areas of the world are dictated by considerations of global profit maximisation over the long run. Any investment of high-risk capital in Bangladesh would have to be part of that objective. Therefore the terms of the production sharing contracts offered by Bangladesh would be treated as generous or harsh on the basis of existing investment opportunities, existing rates of return at other places and of course the existing general financial environment of the world. An examination of these facts of the problem will reveal the present policy option available to the Bangladesh Government.

It is widely agreed that virtually all probable land areas for oil exploration in developed countries, had been fully exploited. In other words by 1972 it was an established fact that any increases in world reserves of commercially exploitable oil would have to come from finding oil in the developing areas of the world. This was a healthy position for the less-developed countries. The assertiveness of the developing world was partly hastened by this situation. However, the four-fold increase in price imposed by the OPEC countries changed the state of affairs previously uncommercial oil reserves in developed countries suddenly became profitable. Off shore oil exploration became an economically viable idea. Alternative energy sources suddenly became very promising options. Multinational oil Corporations began to invest huge amounts in these areas within the advances economics. The dependence of oil Companies on less developed countries as sources of energy decline drastically.

In addition, the general financial environment within which these companies operated, deteriorated significantly. Inflation became world-wide and rapid the US Government withdrew its tax rebate on multinationals.

In the context of the above developments, investment opportunities in Bangladesh became less significant for these oil corporations. Due to the absence of detailed geological information and inadequate knowledge of the potential for oil, high risk capital would be involved. This needs very high returns to encourage its flow. It is true that foreign oil corporations in Indonesia are working under production sharing contracts of the type offered by Bangladesh. The same is true in Iraq. However, one should not forget that these stricter terms were imposed only after oil had been discovered and produced in many areas of Indonesia and Iraq. The oil companies were aware of the high probability of striking oil in both these countries. This is certainly not true in the case of Bangladesh. It is quite possible that no oil may be found or if found, the quantity may be small. Thus, more generous terms and conditions should be offered at this stage of our oil exploration. Once the oil Corporations have invested funds and have discovered and produced oil, the government could then impose a stricter production sharing agreements in view of her increased bargaining power, vis-a-vis the Corporations.

There seems to be a feeling within the Government, that in view of the past experience with foreign companies, Bangladesh should undertake exploration and drilling on her own, by hiring foreign expertise. There are three aspects of this approach which merit serious consideration:

1. Monitoring & controlling the operation of foreign exports.
2. Financing the project.
3. Marketing the oil if discovered.

The first two aspects pose serious problems of this approach as opposed to direct exploration by foreign oil companies.

It is virtually an axiom that to monitor a highly technical, sophisticated and technology-intensive operation like oil exploration there is need of experienced and extremely well-trained indigenous manpower at the highest levels of decision making (like Indonesia), Bangladesh cannot master such skills. Thus it would be impossible to even monitor the work of foreign experts. Exercise of control by the Government on the operation of foreign experts would be totally absent. Thus these foreign technical teams would be endowed with all the freedom to explore and drill for oil without any corresponding responsibility for accountable action. This would certainly be an unacceptable state of affairs. If a multinational was operating instead at least all technical manpower employed, would be controlled and channelised in the right direction, in view of its need to obtain a return on their investment. Bangladesh would serve the spin-offs from their Agreement control and their need to find oil, if it exists.

Secondly, if Bangladesh undertakes exploration she would have to find external finance. This would be very difficult. Development-aid funds would not be forthcoming for this sector. Commercial funds, if available, would carry high interest rates and short maturity periods. If oil is not discovered in adequate quantity, the country would be laid-up with a heavy debt-servicing burden with no corresponding returns to finance the debt. On the other hand multinational corporations would bring in high risk capital which would not lead to any debt servicing burden if oil is not found.

Moreover, if despite the above adverse factors and the riskiness of the venture, oil is found, Bangladesh government would have all the attendent problems of international oil marketing. Oil has an extremely oligopolic market set-up internationally. This entry into this international market by a nascent marketing company of Bangladesh would entail high costs. In the end, the situation might dictate collaboration with an international oil company with all the problems of bargaining for gains.

A better and sounder option for Bangladesh is to relax the restrictive aspects of the present production sharing contract and increase the possibilities of greater gain to oil companies if oil is discovered. As and when it is discovered, Bangladesh will be well situated to impose better terms for herself both in new agreements and in renewal of old contracts. Without this approach the possibilities of oil production may be lost forever.

STEEL, ENGINEERING PRODUCTS FACE MARKETING PROBLEMS

[Text] Local steel and engineering products have been facing serious marketing problem due to uneven competition from large-scale imports and imposition of heavy duty and tax on the imported raw materials.

This observation was made by the speakers at the inaugural session of the two-day annual conference of Bangladesh Steel and Engineering Corporation (BSEC). The conference that began at a local hotel on Friday would evaluate the performance of the UNITs under BSEC.

The unfavourable market situation has resulted in stockpiling of finished goods at various units of the Corporation. According to the Director of Finance BSEC, finished goods worth over Taka 68 crore were stockpiled at various units of the corporation by the end of last fiscal year (1980-81).

The Corporation, however, earned a profit of Taka 23.73 crore during 1980-81 which is the highest amount of profit earned by the Corporation during past four years.

The Director of Finance referred to the gradual increase in production and sales proceed during this period. Barring the inflation, the Corporation had been showing gradual improvement in its performance over the previous years, he said.

He said that during the last fiscal year, the Corporation had not been able to export any of its products except 15 diesel engines. This is for the first time country had exported 15 diesel engines worth Taka 1,70,000 to Australia, he said.

Dr Nazrul Islam, Chairman of BSEC, inaugurating the conference said that the management being the main factor in production should be efficient so that the responsibility that had been entrusted with the Corporation could be carried out.

According to a report, the Federal Government will soon take important policy decisions to increase the per acre crop yield, particularly of wheat which is the country's staple food. Low farm productivity is one of the most obstinate problems plaguing Pakistan agriculture during the last 30 years. The situation is receiving fresh attention from the Government in the light of the 200-page report submitted by a group of agricultural scientists who investigated the problem for two years. The report says that in Pakistan farm output is generally low, even in those areas where modern technology has been applied. It points out that compared with the standards of achievable output set by international farm research and the production levels attained in a number of developing countries, the average per acre yield in Pakistan is much too low. The meagre return from farm investment is a stark fact of Pakistan agriculture, with the overall situation only marginally improving after years of massive injection of funds into the sector. Our productivity is low not only in comparison with the high levels of developed agriculture but is also disappointing when set against the yield per acre in some developing countries. One example is Egypt where average farm productivity is three times that in Pakistan.

The reasons for this state of affairs are many and varied. An important one is that the Green Revolution brought changes only on big farms, while the small ones by and large remained out of its purview. The improved inputs, subsidies and credit for the most part went to the rich landowners. It must also be noted here that the taking of average is a deceptive device which balances the high yields on large farms against extremely low production on subsistence ones. Another significant factor is the failure to put the new technology to optimum use. Productivity in barani areas presents a particularly dismal picture; it is only half of the national average. Clearly, any remedial measure to be effective will have to take all these aspects into account. While, on the one hand, the search for new improved varieties should be stepped up on the other, extension services should be strengthened to train agriculturists in the use of fertilisers and pesticides. There is a special need to meet the challenge of barani agriculture which, if properly exploited, can turn Pakistan into a grain-exporting country. It is to be hoped the Government will expeditiously complete its study of the findings of the experts committee so that they can be given concrete shape before the next Rabi season.

ARTIFICIALLY GROWN BARLEY FODDER BEING TESTED

Islamabad THE MUSLIM 29 Sep 81 p 8

[Text]

ISLAMABAD, Sept. 28: A special species of barley plant grown artifically in a closed truck is being tested in Islamabad and Faisalabad to determine its suitability as fodder for the cattle in Pakistan it was learnt here.

Each truck yields one ton of the eight inch green plant. An enterpreneur from Karachi who already has one such truck in Landhi and has been growing the plant successfully has disclosed that this special fodder was more nutritious and richer than the oridinary grass. He said it would cost only one-twentieth of what is opent on the normal fodder given to the cattle in the country.

The artificial conditions of temperature, humidity and rain created within the truck make the grass grow round the year. The grass much liked by the cattle remains green and fresh for at least a week.

A livestock source said a ton of this grass was sufficient for 40 heads of cattle. It also increases milk. He said when it is commercialised the persistent scarcity of fodder would disappear once for all. The artificial barley plant is already being grown and used as fodder in many countries of the Middle East including Saudi Arabia, Libya, Emirates and Morocco, and other countries with deserts.

The truck, which costs 7,8000 dollars, can be purchased and operated by big enterpreneurs and large farm holders. The one at Karachi, which has now been placed in Landhi, is selling grass to the cattle owners to see in how much time the cost could be met. The owner intends to import more trucks once their cost and suitability of the plant in local conditions are established officially.

According to the detail spelt out by a source of the ADBP the plant is gorwn in six trays with a chemical mixed water. After every minute the plants are sprayed automatically. The plant sprouts in water and its roots are also eaten by the cattle. It is said the agricultural loaning agencies and other associated organisations are watching the new experiment with great interest. According to a report they are willing to offer loans to the importers of the trucks.

FERTILIZER STOCK ADEQUATE--There will be no import of fertiliser for the forthcoming Rabi crop in the country in view of the indigenous production and the sufficient stock kept in reserve. The quantity of nitrogenous and other varieties of fertiliser required for the crop is estimated to be around 15 lakh metric tonnes. Last year, about 13 lakh tonnes were utilised. The Government organisations connected with agricultural supplies are motivating the cultivators to undertake balanced use of fertiliser throughout the Rabi season, i.e., from October to March. Accordingly, the target of fertiliser consumption has been increased by 15 per cent. The Federal Government is subsidising the cost of fertiliser by 50 per cent for the benefit of farmers. In 1980-81, the total subsidy amounted to Rs. 200 crore. Seven factories are, at present, producing urea (nitrogenous) and phosphatic fertiliser. Five belong to the public sector and two to the private sector. Another factory in the public sector is being installed at Rahimyar Khan and is expected to start the production of urea within this year. Fertiliser is to be applied according to the requirement of the crop and the soil. The Soil Fertility Department provides facilities for soil testing but a majority of the growers do not approach it. The local producer of fertiliser are also maintaining adequate arrangements for soil analysis. [Text] [Lahore THE PAKISTAN TIMES 29 Sep 81 p 3]

TRAINING PROGRAMME FOR REFUGEES--The Government of Pakistan, with the financial assistance of United Nations High Commissioner for refugees, is implementing a skill-training and income-generating programme for the Afghan Refugees. The programme is aimed at imparting training to Afghan Refugees boys along with locals in the art of carpet weaving/other vocations. Each trainee will be given a stipend of Rs. 100 per month during training. Under the programme 14 carpet weaving trainee-cum-production centres (8 in NWFP and 6 in Baluchistan) have already been set up. A total of 107 looms has been installed in these centres and 269 boys are being imparted training in these centres. One vocational training centre has also been established at Killa Abdullah in Baluchistan. Besides the existing carpet vocational centres, 12 more carpet weaving centres, one vocational centre, one blanket-making centre, two garment-making, two handicraft and two embroidery centre's for ladies will be set up. It may be recalled that an expenditure of Rs. 4.97 million was incurred on the implementation of the programme. [Text] [Islamabad THE MUSLIM 28 Sep 81 p 3]

RAIDS ON ANANDA MARGA COMMUNES FIND CHOGM DOCUMENTS

Hotel Floor Plans

Canberra THE AUSTRALIAN in English 25 Sep 81 p 1

[Article by Paul Lynch]

[Excerpt] Photographs and floor plans of the hotel where the Commonwealth heads of state will stay during their conference next week were discovered in dawn swoops on Ananda Marga sect communes yesterday.

Police and security chiefs are studying the documents--which include itineries of the CHOGM meetings in Melbourne and passports and diaries of the Indian sect's members. The Indian Prime Minister, Mrs Indira Gandhi, will attend the conference.

Sect Legal Action

Melbourne THE AGE in English 25 Sep 81 pp 1, 4

[Article by Roy Eccleston and Simon Clarke]

[Excerpts] The Ananda Marga movement is considering legal action after raids early yesterday by more than 100 police on the houses of sect members in Sydney and Melbourne.

The raids, by armed police associated with CHOGM security, led to the arrest of three people and the seizure of a large quantity of documents.

In Sydney, a male member of the sect was arrested over an unpaid parking fine and a woman, who was not a member of the sect, was later fined $100 for possessing Indian hemp. In Melbourne, a man was detained and questioned for five hours before being released by a Justice of the Peace.

Police said Australian Security Intelligence Organisation agents were last night examining documents taken in the raids.

Police with dogs and search warrants for firearms raided four Melbourne residences and seven homes in Sydney and said that the operation was "successful," although no guns were found.

Asked why police were happy with the raids despite finding no guns or explosives, a police source said: "It depends what you are looking for." Police refused to say what they found or why they made the raids.

One man was arrested during the Melbourne raids. The man, about 33, was taken from the Greville Street flat and questioned at Russell Street police headquarters for about five hours.

Photograph

A spokesman for the Ananda Marga said the man was questioned about papers police seized at the flat and a photograph the man had taken of Collins Place in Collins Street. The Wentworth Hotel, where some CHOGM delegates will stay, is in Collins Place. The man was not charged and was taken before a Justice of the Peace and released at about 11 a.m.

The director of the sect's Fitzroy women's refuge, Didi Ananda Bratatii denied yesterday that members were planning any political activities during CHOGM. She said the sect was non-violent and had no quarrel with the Indian Prime Minister, Mrs. Gandhi, who will attend the meeting.

Ananda Marga officials in Sydney said their solicitors were considering possible legal action for the violation of search warrants during the raids.

Leaders of the movement also challenged police to produce the evidence which led them to raid the houses.

The spiritual director of the movement in Sydney, Mr Acharya Japasiddhanada, said the Special Branch and CIB detectives who raided the houses at dawn yesterday did not have warrants which allowed them to seize such material as the movement's magazines, meditation handbook and members' private address books.

A labor member of the New South Wales Parliament, Mr Petersen, last night claimed the raids and allegations against the Ananda Marga in Sydney and Melbourne were "an absolute frame-up."

NATION CANNOT BE OBLIVIOUS TO PAKISTAN ARMING

Bombay THE TIMES OF INDIA in English 18 Sep 81 p 4

[Editorial: "F-16s And All That"]

[Text] After a charade lasting several months the $3.2-billion U.S. package of economic aid and military supplies to Pakistan has been tied up. The U.S. under-secretary of state for security assistance, Mr. James Buckley, and President Zia-ul-Haq have also agreed that even before the agreement becomes operational in October 1982, the U.S. will supply Pakistan, against cash payment, six or seven F-16s which are the most advanced and sophisticated warplanes in existence today. In recent months, General Zia had said repeatedly that speedy deliveries of F-16s would be the "real test" of American "sincerity." The Reagan administration has evidently bent over backwards to meet this test. To give Pakistan at least half a dozen F-16s within a matter of months, it has persuaded Belgium and Netherlands to forgo their prior claims. The U.S. commitment to bolster Pakistan militarily, regardless of its consequences, is thus clear. On the objective of the renewed U.S.-Pakistan military relationship the two sides are, however, still talking in different voices. While according to Mr. Buckley, Pakistan is being rearmed to enable it to cope with the threat arising from the presence of the Soviet troops in Afghanistan, Pakistan's foreign minister, Mr. Agha Shahi, has been proclaiming from the housetops that it is a slander to talk of a Soviet threat to Pakistan. This leaves only this country as the only possible source of threat to Pakistan.

In the circumstances, New Delhi cannot be oblivious of the proposed addition to the Pakistani armoury, especially to the new level of technology in aerial warfare being introduced into the sub-continent by the F-16s. To argue, as the Pakistani ambassador to this country did on Sunday, that the Jaguar, the MiG-21, the MiG-23 or even the reconnaissance version of the MiG-25 that India has can match the F-16 is to be both specious and disingenuous. This does not mean, however, that the F-16 presents a challenge which India cannot cope with. But this will necessarily mean an additional defence burden, indeed an arms race, which India would have liked to avoid. It is entirely typical of Gen. Zia that while clinching the arms deal with the U.S., he has offered this country talks on "non-aggression and non-use of force." All efforts to improve Indo-Pakistan relations must be welcome at all times. But can the present offer be divorced from its context which is one of deliberate heightening of tensions by importing into the sub-continent superpower rivalries? It is no mere coincidence that the offer of a dialogue has come precisely at a time when the U.S.-Pakistan arms deal is being taken up for approval by the U.S. Congress where there is considerable opposition to it, especially in the democrat-dominated house of representatives. No wonder Mrs. Gandhi advised parliament only the other day to look at all Pakistani proposals sympathetically, but to avoid being caught in a trap.

GANDHI SPEAKS IN LOK SABHA CONFIDENCE DEBATE

Bombay THE TIMES OF INDIA in English 18 Sep 81 pp 1, 5

[Excerpt]

NEW DELHI, Sept. 17.

THE Prime Minister declared in the Lok Sabha today that in all spheres her government was working with clarity. The people the world over knew that in India there was now a government and not a desperate group — obviously referring to the Janata.

Mrs. Gandhi, in an emotionally-charged voice, stoutly refuted the opposition allegation of non-performance by her government.

Raising her voice, she said: "If this is a government that does not work, then how are we making all this progress?" In support of her assertion she quoted several figures to show the progress achieved in different economic fields since she took over as Prime Minister.

The no-confidence motion was rejected by the house by 294 votes to 83. Loud applause by the treasury benches greeted the announcement of the voting result.

In the debate on the non-confidence motion lasting till late in the evening, in which as many as 18 members participated, the main thrust of the opposition attack on the government was the conduct of the Maharashtra chief minister, Mr. A. R. Antulay, in creating the controversial trust, including the Indira Gandhi Pratibha Pratishthan.

It provided the content of the speeches of the main opposition leaders like Mr. George Fernandes (Lok Dal), Mr. Madhu Dandavate (Janata) and Mr. Ram Jethmalani (BJP). Other members also referred to this issue. It led the Prime Minister to remark that the debate could be properly called the "Antulay debate" and not a no-confidence debate.

The reference to the issue repeatedly led to emotional outbursts in the house with members trading accusations against one another. The treasury bench members raised several points of order on the ground that allegations could not be made against a person who could not be present in the house to defend himself. The opposition members were quite often restrained by the chair.

Mrs. Gandhi in her reply was quite categorical in denying that she had given her consent to her name being used with the name of the Pratibha Pratishthan.

She said she was asked about it only when she visited Bhubaneswar. She had replied that she told Mr. Antulay that it was a good idea (the setting up of the trust). "In that sense I gave my blessings. But when he asked whether my name could be used, I advised him against it because I do not normally allow my name to be used for such purposes."

She said she was not asked any more questions at Bhubaneswar. If more questions were asked, she would have replied to them.

Earlier, Mr. Inderjit Gupta (CPI) had alleged that the Prime Minister had unnecessarily allowed the house to remain in a "turmoil" for several days. The matter could be cleared up by her making a statement in the house, but she failed to fulfil her obligations as the leader of the house.

Mr. Gupta said he was not so much concerned about the Antulay affair as with the erosion of principles, conventions and traditions of Parliament. He alleged that the Prime Minister, by keeping away from the house, was showing scant regard for parliamentary democracy, and reminded Mrs. Gandhi the great value attached by Mr. Jawaharlal Nehru to parliamentary traditions.

The Prime Minister bitterly attacked the role of the two communist parties. She said that these two parties were doing everything to weaken her government and strengthen the rightist forces. She charged the CPM with voting against the no-confidence motion against the Janata government in 1979.

When Mr. Samar Mukherjee, leader of the CPM group, protested against the remark, Mrs. Gandhi added that whatever might have been the case, the Marxists had broadly supported the Janata government's policies. "By your action, you had brought the rightists (into the government) before. You are now strengthening them again."

Mrs. Gandhi said that the manner in which the opposition members had brought up the Antulay affair in the debate on the no-confidence motion raised doubts whether they were at all seriously concerned about the other problems affecting the country. They seemed to have nothing new to say on the various problems. Very important developments were taking place in the world and in the neighbourhood. But the opposition members were least interested in them.

However, it was acknowledged the world over that the danger in the Indian Ocean region had increased. The danger had increased with the immediate neighbour acquiring sophisticated arms. But India was being charged with military build-up. This was unwarranted. "We can assure all that we are working with the Simla spirit."

She said that the newspapers had reported that a final decision had been taken to accelerate the supply of F-16s to Pakistan. However, it was not a question whether a particular country should have more weapons or not. It was a question of the whole attitude behind it and the tension that it was bound to create.

"INFLATION DOWN"

"It enjoins upon us to be more careful so that the tranquallity of the area, now disturbed, is restored."

Mrs. Gandhi alleged that wh/ the international situation continue to be serious and delicate, the opposition was creating an atmosphere of despair and frustration. "This is the most weakening thing that can happen to any community. We have tried to give them (the people) hope. It is this you are trying to take away from them."

Referring to the allegation by Mr. Jagjivan Ram that the government seemed to have lost confidence in the workers because it had to adoot a strike ban measure, the Prime Minister said: "We have no doubt about the patriotism of the workers. But there are many people who mislead the workers with political motives."

UNI adds:

Lashing out at the opposition, Mrs. Gandhi asserted that her government had taken steps to put the country's economy back on the rails and had brought down the rate of inflation. She, however, admitted that unless the prices of essential commodities were brought down, the common man could feel little relief.

Mrs. Gandhi felt that a fall in the rate of inflation would lead to a fall in prices.

Mrs. Gandhi said production in the key sector like railways, power and coal was picking up.

When she referred to the railways, an opposition member asked, "what about accidents?"

Mrs. Gandhi retorted: "who started the sabotage? How could one expect the railways to work properly when the workers, dismissed, for good reasons, were taken back by the previous government."

She said there was an increase of 16 per cent in the freight traffic in the first quarter of the current financial year as compared to the same period in the previous year. The power generation also went up by 17 per cent during the same period.

Defending the maintenance of essential services bill, Mrs. Gandhi said her government had all the sympathy for industrial workers.

Even though industrial production was on the increase, "there are people to mislead them for political purposes," Mr. Gandhi said.

Mrs. Gandhi assured that the government was tightening up the public sector and efforts were being made to professionalise the management.

Listing the various achievements of her government, Mrs. Gandhi said oil import bill had been brought down by Rs. 1,000 crores. "This is not a small achievement."

Referring to the functioning of Indian Airlines and Air-India, Mrs Gandhi said during 1980-81, I A had made a profit of Rs. 2.48 crores and Air-India had not only covered the loss but also made a profit of Rs. 1.98 crores in the first three months.

She declared that the government had every reason to be proud of its achievements.

GRAIN IMPORT

Even in agriculture, Mrs. Gandhi said in spite of uncertainties of the monsoon, the government hoped to have a comfortable year. It was as an insurance against these uncertainties that the government had thought it better to import some grains.

The public distribution system, she said had been completely disrupted when her government took over. Now the situation had improved although she would be the first to agree that it was stil not satisfactory.

On unemployment, Mrs. Gandhi said the problem could not be wished away. The government was trying to tackle the problem first by improving the infrastructure for increasing production. Once it improved, some dent would be made on the unemployment problem.

Mrs. Gandhi said she was surprised at the arguments advanced by some members at the government move to secure a loan from the IMF. They should realise that in the world today, there should be inter-dependence, without sacrificing independence. There was absolutely no question whatsoever of giving in to any conditions which could be against India's declared policies. This had been very definitely told to the IMF and others.

She said much of the criticism against this decision was ill-informed. At no time India was in such a good bargaining position as it was today, she asserted. All the countries in the world knew that "my government is not the one which can be pressurised or pushed around economically or militarily," she declared.

Talking about the domestic scene, Mrs. Gandhi said the government was not at all complacent. The main danger the country faced today was from communalists of all hues and denominations. A new phenomenon she had noticed when she went to Biharsharif was that the trouble there "was politically motivated." This had been told to her by many people who did not belong to her party.

When referring to the Jamshedpur riots Mrs. Gandhi mentioned the name of the Jana Sangh, an opposition member pointed out that it was no longer Jana Sangh but BJP. Mrs. Gandhi shot back: "It is Jana Sangh to me always. They can change their name a million times, but it is only Jana Sangh."

The BJP leader, Mr. Vajpayee, protested when Mrs. Gandhi made fun of the Jana Sangh claiming to believe in Gandhian ideology. Nothing could be more insulting to Mahatma Gandhi, the Prime Minister said. When Mr. Vajpayee asked what was wrong in it, Mrs. Gandhi said she knew what Jana Sangh leaders had been talking about Mahatma Gandhi. It was not nice for her to say that anybody in this country should feel that way about the Father of the Nation but the Jana Sangh did feel that way.

Mrs. Gandhi gave one instance of how she was harassed by the opposition parties when they were in power. She had to go all the way to Manipur on a non-bailable warrant on a charge that she had abetted a person in stealing two chickens and six eggs. This was the highest esteem in which the opposition parties were looking after people those days.

The Prime Minister claimed perceptible improvement in the law and order situation saying that the number of robberies, murders and other anti-social activities had declined during the last one year. The government faced difficulties because the Janata party had released all the anti-social elements like smugglers when they came to power. It would not be easy to nag them all again.

She mentioned in this connection the Galdhari brothers who were mentioned by some members and said it was in 1977 that the names of these persons were removed from the list of suspects.

Mrs. Gandhi took strong exception to the opposition interruptions. People who threw stones at others should not be surprised when they get them back, she remarked.

Referring to the foreign policy, Mrs. Gandhi said the situation was full of difficulties. She, however, did not find much enthusiasm among the opposition parties to discuss the matter.

Mrs. Gandhi said that as alleged by Mr. Vajpayee, she was not trying to take up foreign issue to hide things here. There was no doubt that the danger to peace was increasing and this had been recognised by all world leaders.

The danger was more pronounced in the immediate neighbourhood and the country had to be prepared. Only this morning reports came from abroad that a final decision had been taken on an accelerated supply of F-16 aircraft to Pakistan.

Earlier, moving the no-confidence motion against the council of ministers, Mr. Samar Mukherjee (CPM) warned that the country was heading towards another emergency. He called for united action by the people to prevent such an eventuality.

Mr. Mukherjee expressed deep concern over the emerging "linkages" between ministers, the administrative machinery and anti-social elements. This was a dangerous portent. The Antulay affair was one such instance of degeneration of political morality, which was ominous, he added.

In a hard-hitting 45-minute speech, Mr. Mukherjee accused the government of pursuing a policy which made the poorer sections more poor and the rich richer. As a result of this policy, the government had not only to succumb to the pressures of monopolists and rich traders at home but was even being dictated terms by foreign agencies like the International Monetary Fund.

Mr. Mukherjee said the opposition had been forced to bring forward the no-confidence motion because other avenues of raising in Parliament issues agitating the people had been closed.

He said prices were rising so fast that a nationwide action by all sections against inflation had become an absolute necessity.

Mr. Mukherjee charged the government with surrendering to the IMF, which had insisted on devaluation as one of the conditions for giving loan to India. He said the rupee had been devalued by 14 per cent since the talks with the IMF started.

Mr. Mukherjee said since the government was afraid of the growing discontent among the people, it had brought forth several draconian measures like the National Security Act to crush popular agitations.

He also charged the government with trying to subvert parliamentary democracy and introducing a presidential form of government. He said the Maharashtra chief minister, Mr. Antulay, was one of the determined champions of this change.

Several Congress (I) members raised protest when Mr. Mukherjee referred to the Antulay affair. The speaker, Mr. Jakhar, asked the member not to bring in personalities. Mr. Mukherjee said he was not raising anything personal, but was only pointing out the growing linkage between ministers, administrative machinery and anti-social elements.

GANDHI 18 SEPTEMBER SPEECH TO CONGRESS-I MP'S REPORTED

[Text] New Delhi, Sept 18. Mrs Gandhi said today that she was dissatisfied with the functioning of some State party units. The performances of these units had not come up to expectations of the Central party, she added.

Addressing members of the Congress(I) party in Parliament, Mrs Gandhi said they should display a greater sense of unity. Members of Parliament had particularly an overall responsibility in tackling the present difficult situation. Therefore, she said, they should show the utmost sense of discipline.

According to Mr K. Lakkappa, secretary, who briefed the Press, Mrs Gandhi advised her party men to express their grievances regarding intra-party matters within party forums. They should not ventilate these in public.

Mrs Gandhi asked the members to go round the country to see what steps were being taken to implement the 20-point economic programme and help accelerate the pace of its progress.

Members of Parliament should associate MLAs in the implementation of the programme in their respective constituencies.

Stressing the importance of cooperative movement and the need for its strengthening, she expressed herself against the cooperatives being captured by a few "powerful elements." All the people should be involved in the development of cooperatives.

Mrs Gandhi called for the toning p of the distribution system through cooperatives. [as published]

The Prime Minister said the consumers' movement should get a fillip to fight the black marketers and hoarders and similar unscrupulous persons. She spoke of the plight of Harijans and asked members to look into their problems. Members of Parliament, she said, should also try to dispel certain wrong impressions being created against the Harijans by certain "interested elements."

PTI adds: On the prevalent corruption in the country, Mrs Gandhi said the names of those who spoke strongly about corruption were often mentioned in connexion with corrupt deals.

Without mentioning any names she regretted that currently there was almost a perpetual talk about corruption, but recalled that there was much more corruption during the Janata Party regime.

The Prime Minister said corruption was a world-wide phenomenon and India could not escape from this menace. She said efforts were made to remove corruption during the Emergency and tangible results were achieved to some extent.

GANDHI, PATIL REPLY ON AIRCRAFT PURCHASE PLANS

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 11 Sep 81 p 5

[Excerpt] Prime Minister Indira Gandhi told the Rajya Sabha on Thursday that it was possible that Pakistan was trying to procure the F-15 fighter aircraft from the United States apart from the F-16 jets.

In a written reply to Mr V. Venka and Mr V. Gopalsamy, the Prime Minister said no authentic information was available.

Minister of State for Defence Shivraj Patil in separate answers denied that an Indian military team which visited France in June negotiated for the purchase of Mirage aircraft and other arms.

He told Mr K.L.N. Prasad that some officers visited France to appreciate the various aspects of the weapons system displayed during the Paris airshow.

He told Mr N.P.C. Naidu that the Hindustan Aeronautics Limited was going ahead with the assembling of the Jaguar supersonic strike aircraft as per the contractual obligations.

He said there have been no circumstances warranting discontinuance of the binding part of the Jaguar agreement.

Mr Patil also disclosed that the Indian Air Force had not evaluated the Tornado multi-role combat aircraft and therefore it was not possible to know the relative capabilities of the Tornado, Mirage and Jaguar aircrafts.

GANDHI SCORES FOREIGN MEDIA REPORTING ON NATION

Calcutta THE STATESMAN in English 19 Sep 81 p 12

[Text]

NEW DELHI, Sept. 18.—Mrs Gandhi has deprecated the "bias" of the foreign media in reporting India and the propagation of a "gloomy view" of the country by a large number of "our own newspapers", reports PTI.

Mrs Gandhi, in a message to the first issue of the international weekly of National Herald, said foreign media had their own criteria for reporting Indian events. For the most part, they followed the dictum "bad news is good news, good news is no news."

India's achievements were ignored with a "perverse consistency", while its shortcomings were presented with "exaggerated glee", she said. The same countries and newspapers which unabashedly supported dictatorships lectured to India on democracy and humaneness. "The reason for this chronic bias against us and for the double standards is that we insist on independence and self-reliance. We make our own choices and policies."

Mrs Gandhi said: "Unfortunately, a large number of our own newspapers also propagate a gloomy view of the country, unquestioningly adopting foreign yardsticks of newsworthiness and their attitudes in foreign policy."

Referring to the large number of Indians working abroad, Mrs Gandhi said it was not easy for these numerous groups of people to get accurate news about India. She hoped the international edition of the National Herald newspaper, founded by her father during the days of the freedom struggle, would give Indians as well as friends of India abroad a "balanced picture of events and of our efforts to fulfil our social and economic objectives."

The President, Mr Sanjiva Reddy, in a message hoped that the weekly edition would depict events correctly and help to enhance the country's image abroad.

GANDHI INTERVIEW WITH MELBOURNE 'AGE' REPORTED

Calcutta THE SUNDAY STATESMAN in English 20 Sep 81 pp 1, 9

[Text] New Delhi, Sept 19--Mrs Gandhi has said India will carry out the Pokharan-type peaceful nuclear tests, if necessary, but will not manufacture the atom bomb, report UNI and PTI. She has laid emphasis on the fact that India is developing nuclear energy solely for agricultural and other developmental purposes.

The Prime Minister, however, has added India's transition from peaceful to military use of nuclear power depends on "what the real danger is" to its national security interests.

Mrs Gandhi was asked in an interview by a correspondent of the AGE of Australia how India would respond if Pakistan developed and exploded a nuclear weapon.

"Well, if you think just because Pakistan has done something we are going to rush in to something, no," she replied.

Q: "India does have a sophisticated nuclear industry for peaceful purposes."

A: "We think we need it specially for power and electricity in agriculture."

Q: "But if it were necessary in what you consider to be your national security interests, would it take long for you to take the step from peaceful to military uses in nuclear power?"

A: "Well, that is a question for scientists to answer how long it will take because things are getting more and more sophisticated all the time. But we have to see what the real danger is, whether it will be that type of danger or it will be a more conventional type."

Asked whether India had any evidence that Pakistan was developing the nuclear capacity and would soon explode a device, Mrs Gandhi said she only knew what the rest of the world knew.

The BBC had shown a film on this, as also the Soviet Union.

"And these are documentaries, not fiction," the Prime Minister emphasized. "They show how they got information and things from various countries, even from Canada."

Mrs Gandhi was asked about Pakistan's recent offer of immediate talks, with India on mutual nonaggression and nonuse of force.

She emphasized that India had been making the offer of a "no war agreement" for long years. "My father made it. Mr Shastri made it. I made it."

Mrs Gandhi doubted if any other country had a parallel for the unilateral cease-fire she had declared after the 1971 war with Pakistan. She took the initiative for the Simla talks soon after.

"India is not interested in having a weak and unstable neighbour," she said adding "In fact, I feel that it is one of the biggest dangers that any country can have. That is what leaves the place wide open for all kinds of influences, interferences and other troubles."

But, Mrs Gandhi regretted, "Pakistan has not seen that. I thought Mr Bhutto had seen that way. Otherwise he would not have signed the Simla Agreement. But then soon afterwards he was not there any more and we heard very little about the Simla Agreement for a long time. Now we are still, in spite of everything, trying to create a better atmosphere."

Q: "Are you saying in effect that it is very hard for India to have a good working relationship with a military Government, military dictatorship in Pakistan?"

A: "Now obviously we would prefer a democratic Government. There is no doubt about that. But we don't believe in interfering in the internal affairs of any country, that is for the people there to do what they want to about it. But what we are saying is that when that dictatorship's public posture is against us, it is a little difficult."

F-16 Supply

Questioned about the U.S. supply of F-16 aircraft and other military equipment to Pakistan, Mrs Gandhi said: "That is what they are getting from the USA. It is probable that they will get from other places, other countries also."

"These, as they were before, have been used only against India, not once but several times."

Q: "Do you feel that in fact this deal is going to trigger off an arms race?"

A: "It has."

Mrs Gandhi doubted if Pakistan wanted the Afghanistan conflict settled at all. "I think they are taking the maximum advantage of the Soviet Union being there and they would like them to remain there so that they keep on taking this advantage."

Q: "Are you any more hopeful about withdrawal of Soviet forces from Afghanistan conflict than you were a year ago?"

A: No.

Q: Despite initiatives taken by India and other countries?

A: Well, when the main people involved, I mean to say Pakistan as I said before. I don't think they want the solution. The Soviets say unless they (Pakistan) stop sending people there, they cannot withdraw. Unless the outside interference stops from other quarters."

She saw no parallel between events in Kampuchea and Afghanistan. "I would not call it Vietnam's occupation of Kampuchea by any means," she commented elsewhere in the interview.

Asked if a Commonwealth consensus could do something to influence and "soften" Reagan Administration's attitude to North-South problems and Namibia, Mrs Gandhi said it was awfully difficult to prophesy.

/Mrs Gandhi was today quoted as having denied Australian reports that India was ready to accept Pakistan's readmission to the Commonwealth under certain conditions./ [in boldface]

She said in an interview with the Sydney MORNING HERALD that she believed there had been a misunderstanding in recent talks she had with the Australian Prime Minister, Mr Malcolm Fraser.

Asked whether India objected to Pakistan's re-entry, she said: "This time or any other time our experience is that Pakistan uses all such international forums to raise bilateral issues that go against the very spirit of the Commonwealth."

She said some member-countries including Australia, were taking a "deep interest" in Pakistan's readmission, but she did not know whether Canberra still felt the same way.

Earlier this month, Australian officials said that Commonwealth heads of Government, who meet in Melbourne on September 30, were expected to indicate to Pakistan that it would be welcome if it applied for readmission. Pakistan pulled out in 1972 after the other members recognised Bangladesh.

A Foreign Ministry spokesman said today that India may have reacted to Press reports which incorrectly made it appear that Australia thought Pakistan's readmission was a foregone conclusion. "India may have interpreted this as Australia going too far." He said that if Mrs Gandhi's views had been accurately reflected in the interview, it was unlikely Pakistan would be told it could expect to be readmitted.

Meanwhile, the Pakistan Foreign Minister, Mr Agha Shahi, has expressed "surprise and disappointment" that India should have chosen to question Pakistan's bonafides on the Afghan problem, Radio Pakistan reported tonight.

Mr Shahi claimed that Pakistan was "committed" to a peaceful settlement of the Afghan problem.

GANDHI TROUBLES WITH ANTULAY, CHIEF MINISTERS TOLD

Madras THE HINDU in English 10 Sep 81 p 1

[Article by G. K. Reddy: "She Sought and Got the Letter"]

[Text] NEW DELHI, Sept. 9.

The Prime Minister, Mrs. Gandhi, asked for and received the letter of resignation from the Chief Minister of Maharashtra, Mr. A. R. Antulay. The letter is with Mrs. Gandhi and she is expected to act on it as soon as she makes up her mind about a successor to head the Ministry in the State.

Mrs. Gandhi today took some of her senior colleagues into confidence that she had already obtained Mr. Antulay's resignation, although she did not indicate how exactly she proposed to deal with it.

As Prime Minister, she can forward it to the Governor of Maharashtra since the letter is actually addressed to him. It is open to her as president of the Congress (I) to place the letter before the central parliamentary board of the party and direct Mr. Antulay to submit his resignation directly to the Governor for acceptance.

Almost all her senior colleagues at the Centre had told Mrs. Gandhi that she should ask Mr. Antulay to resign before more harm was done to the ruling party's reputation. She has also been informed by the party whips that the great majority of Congress (I) MPs were equally concerned about the fall-out of the odious controversy raging over his indiscriminate fund collections.

Rajiv's stand: The Prime Minister had tacitly accepted the advice of her party colleagues, although she was reluctant to call for Mr. Antulay's resignation while the Maharashtra Assembly was still in session. But what clinched the issue was the stand taken by her son, Mr. Rajiv Gandhi, who felt that there was no justification at all for any further vacillation.

The imminent exit of Mr. Antulay will bring to an abrupt end the inglorious activities of a highly controversial Chief Minister, who has over-reached himself in an ambitious bid to establish a firm political base of his own. He has run the risk of being unceremoniously jettisoned by Mrs. Gandhi for becoming a major embarrassment to her through the ill-advised fund-raising done in her name.

The remorseless logic of Mr. Antulay's downfall will compel Mrs. Gandhi to take similar action against some other Chief Ministers who are no less culpable of misusing their powers for equally questionable purposes.

More CMs may quit: It would not be surprising if a few more heads roll in the next few weeks in the course of a wider cleansing operation.

The proposed changes in the States are inter-linked with the long over-due Cabinet reshuffle at the Centre in the sense that the two steps cannot be taken compartmentally, without some internalisation. The Antulay episode has served a useful purpose in at least making the central leadership of the Congress (I) painfully aware of the ruling party's growing alienation in this permissive atmosphere.

The Prime Minister tried to shield Mr. Antulay up to a point, feeling that any action taken against him while he was still under fire, would only encourage the Opposition parties to play for higher stakes by intensifying their campaign against the Central Government.

But she realised that he could not be saved when she found that her own party was becoming increasingly restive over the disquieting exposure of his actions.

Nemesis again: The exit of Mr. Antulay would focus attention once again on the dubious methods adopted by the central leadership in selecting party nominees to head State Governments. It remains to be seen whether the same questionable procedures would be followed for foisting another nominated Chief Minister on Maharashtra with no worthwhile political base of his own in the State.

Timing: Though Mr. Antulay did not have many sympathisers among Congress (I) seniors, opinion was divided on the timing of the action against him, reports Our Special Correspondent.

Some favoured immediate action on the ground that Mr. Antulay had become a political liability. The coverage of the Antulay affair in the Marathi press was cited as an index of the anti-Congress (I) sentiments generated by it.

Others wanted the action to be delayed so that it was not interpreted as a surrender in the face of Opposition pressure. Any action against Mr. Antulay now, according to this viewpoint, would be construed as a victory by the Opposition which would start gunning for other Congress (I) Chief Ministers.

Issues like the choice of Mr. Antulay's successor, too, needed to be examined carefully, the section of the party said.

The pace of activity in the Congress (I) camp slackened today because of the debate in the Maharashtra legislature in Bombay.

The Congress (I) Parliamentary Board, which met in the afternoon — for the second time in two days — was mainly concerned with the selection of party candidates for two vacancies in the Rajya Sabha from U.P. Even if it discussed the Antulay episode, nothing was made known officially by party spokesman.

Document shown: The Opposition meanwhile, made it clear that it would not relent in its efforts to pursue the Antulay case in Parliament. The Janata party leader, Mr. Madhu Dandavate, showed to correspondents a document which, according to him, belied the assertion that Mrs. Gandhi had only given her blessings in October last year to the trust floated by Mr. Antulay and had not agreed to lend her name to it.

The document was a letter dated Aug. 4 last, purported to have been sent to the Deccan Sugar Factories Association by the Indira Gandhi Prabhe Pratishan, asking its members to contribute liberally to the fund as done by cooperative sugar factories.

According to the Opposition, Mrs. Gandhi now sought to wriggle out of the situation by saying she had not permitted her name to be used. No Chief Minister would have the guts to use her name without her consent, they said.

WRITER HOPES GANDHI WILL LEARN FROM ANTULAY AFFAIR

[Article by G. K. Reddy]

[Text]

THE one achievement of the Janata party during its ill-fated rule was that it succeeded in at least banishing fear from the minds of the people. After the bitter experiences of the Emergency, the parody of Janata politics and the eccentricities of its leaders like Morarji Desai, Charan Singh and Raj Narain brought all authority into ridicule. The result is that even after the change of government, nobody is afraid of anybody these days — not even of Mrs. Indira Gandhi with all her power and ability to punish her detractors, whether in the ruling party or the Opposition.

Only the cringing sycophants totally dependent on her patronage are scared of her displeasure. Her opponents are no longer frightened of her wrath because they know the limitations of her power in the present-day situation.

The free-booting politicians and other parasitic elements that continue to flourish in the permissive atmosphere know very well that she can't go in for another emergency, without running the risk of endangering the entire system.

Mrs. Gandhi will have to contend, before taking the plunge, with the ugly reality of another and perhaps more detestable and less scrupulous breed of men in politics and services catapulting themselves into pivotal positions, by simply forswearing their loyalty and promoting insidiously a narrow cult of personal allegiance.

A fatalistic acceptance of the growing degradations in public life is a familiar aspect of the Indian tradition. What infuriates the average citizen is not so much the misuse of political power as the arrogance and conceit of the ignorant and indolent who exercise this power in the name of the people.

The absence of any widespread sense of outrage over the infractions of those in high places does not mean that the public is unaware of what goes on in the corridors of power or acquiesces in it. It only implies that the margin of tolerance in India is much bigger than in comparable societies elsewhere, plagued with similar transgressions.

Mrs. Gandhi's failing

A major failing of Mrs. Gandhi in the last 20 months since her dramatic return to power has been her inability or reluctance to wield the big stick or the big broom. The people are prepared to put up with the misconduct of the minions so long as they feel reasonably reassured that the leader is making a determined bid to enforce some degree of rectitude. They get disillusioned and indignant, as they did with cataclysmic consequences in the last two general elections, when they feel that the presiding deities also have started failing them.

A big majority by itself does not provide for stability, since the last two governments at the Centre ran into trouble despite their two-thirds majorities in Parliament. It is not easy to recover the lost faith or rekindle the old Gandhian spirit without a conscious effort to purify public life with an uncompromising crusade against corrupt practices.

It calls for total disengagement from the politics of manipulation, the tendency to resort to double standards of morality when one can get away with it. The sad part of this erosion of values is the absence of any compelling urge to initiate corrective action, until those in power realise that they are being overtaken by events.

Corrupt structure

It is difficult to draw a dividing line for affixing responsibility between the politicians in power and those in opposition at a given moment, since both are equally culpable for the continuing dilution of public values and the conduct of the individuals actively involved in the spoils system. If the Congress fared no better than the Janata in its earlier days of power, the Janata did not crown itself with any glory during its brief spell of office.

The expectations that the present ruling party has returned to power in a chastened mood have been belied by the bizarre behaviour of those who managed to jump onto Mrs. Gandhi's bandwagon. The old spark is missing in her because she has to function with a corrupt and corroded power structure that is bereft of talent. The badly divided opposition parties are unable to fare any better since they are also victims of the very same evils putrefying public life.

No ruling party feels secure enough that it would be able to complete its full term. This feeling of uncertainty in a country that is becoming increasingly ungovernable makes the less scrupulous in positions of power indulge in malpractices while the going is good.

This happened in the Janata time and is happening much more blatantly under the present Congress rule. The basic hypothesis during the Janata regime was that the conglomerate would not be able to complete its term and that it would fall apart before going to the polls again.

The prognosis in the case of Mrs. Gandhi's Congress is that the growing public disillusionment with its rule will compel her to opt for another snap election at an opportune moment during the second half of its term, before it becomes too late to retrieve its waning influence.

False values

The Prime Minister's obsessive sense of an unfulfilled mission will only sharpen her dilemma with the passage of time, unless she is prepared to act decisively with determination to recapture the old faith by shedding the ugly legacies of the past.

The average Indian voter imbued with his own horse sense is not unaware of the fact that, in the last three decades since Independence, men of no great means or consequence whether it is in the village or the big cities, have amassed wealth well beyond proportion by misusing their political connections.

The new political generation flaunting its ill-gotten wealth and peddling its influence has fouled the atmosphere by creating false values and perverting the whole system. The talk of increasing corruption in high places cannot be dismissed as motivated propaganda to malign those in power, since it has come to be widely accepted as an indisputable fact of present-day life.

The Antulay episode represents a new phenomenon in Indian politics, not merely the aberration of an individual misusing the powers of a Chief Minister for personal promotion through an espousal of public welfare. The fact that he had employed questionable methods for his fund-raising spree bordering on open extortion does not make him any better or worse than some of the other Chief Ministers who have been indulging in similar collections with a little more discretion. His brash behaviour provides an interesting case study of how the Congress (I) bigwigs tend to place themselves above the normal run of political probity and personal accountability for their actions.

Is resignation enough?

But then what is the bewildered public to make of the stout defence of Mr. Antulay's conduct by the Finance Minister, Mr. R. Venkataraman, in Parliament and the Prime Minister's call for his resignation a week later? A resignation is enough when it is only a case of dereliction of duty or misuse of patronage for questionable causes not involving pecuniary gain.

A Chief Minister or ordinary Minister cannot go scot free by simply quitting office without facing the consequences of gross improprieties and blatant transgressions. In the old days, the ruling hierarchy at least went through the motions of judicial inquiries before letting off the offending party stalwarts faced with corruption charges.

These days a mere resignation is considered sufficient punishment for such infractions with no further questions asked about what has been done with the vast sums of money collected by them.

The origins of this malaise can be traced to the first Congress split when all norms of political propriety and individual accountability were thrown to the winds in the heat of controversy and confrontation. The discards and drop-outs who normally would not have made the grade got a golden opportunity to make themselves indispensable by casting themselves in the role of hatchet men.

The second Congress split enabled those who chose to remain with Mrs. Gandhi in the hour of her isolation to worm their way into pivotal positions and emerge as influential personalities after the party's landslide victory in the last elections. The permissive atmosphere in which they functioned gave them the feeling that they could get away with anything and that they need not consider themselves accountable for their actions.

After the trauma of Watergate, Mr. Jimmy Carter won the presidential election in the U.S. with the promise of an era of honest, compassionate and responsive government. In India Mrs. Gandhi came back to power with the slogan of a government that works after the paralysis of the Janata-Lok Dal interregnum.

It is quite legitimate for the public to question whether a Prime Minister even with a two-thirds majority in Parliament has the right to foist on the country palpably incompetent party colleagues in exercise of her constitutional prerogatives and political patronage for rewarding those who have made a profession of their loyalty to her. The mandate given by the people is to provide a good government, not load it with dubious characters at the cost of public welfare.

The Antulay affair can prove to be a turning point for the better, if the ruling party is prepared to draw the right lessons from it. The Prime Minister should realise that, in questioning the propriety of her choice of some of her colleagues, the critics are not challenging the legitimacy of her own position. The purpose of the whole debate is to focus attention on the need for greater discretion in the formation of Cabinets whether at the Centre or in the States.

If the Opposition parties which behaved no better during their brief spell of power hold no monopoly for virtue in Indian politics, the Congress (I) also cannot afford to pretend that it is endowed with any moral superiority for running the country as it likes with men and women of its choice irrespective of their integrity and experience.

The critics are not clamouring for retributive justice, but only cautioning the ruling hierarchy that the country will be swept by another wind of change, if the powers that be do not pull back in time.

It may be too late by next year when the present government crosses the half-way point of its tenure to go through a catharsis for purifying its body and soul and proving itself worthy of another mandate when it goes to the people again. And this in brief is the real moral of the Antulay episode.

MEMORANDUM TO GANDHI ON ANTULAY SUMMARIZED

Calcutta THE STATESMAN in English 9 Sep 81 p 9

[Text]

BOMBAY, Sept. 8.—Long before the cement deal scandal in Maharashtra was raised in Parliament, a group of 14 M.P. from the State had submitted a memorandum to the Prime Minister against the Chief Minister, Mr A. R. Antulay, in which more severe allegations were made, it is learnt.

The ruling party members of Parliament, who had submitted the memorandum, refrained from making its contents public to save the image of the party and the Government and not allow the Opposition to use it as a weapon, it is stated. It was this memorandum which set off the process of devaluation of Mr Antulay with the party leadership.

If the issue had not blown up in public, the Central leadership was certain to remove Mr Antulay from his office in due course, party sources say. But capital being made out of it by the Opposition had made it imperative for leaders to fight the Opposition and defend Mr Antulay at least for the time being, it is stated.

The memorandum makes a number of startling allegations, it is learnt. Besides criticising Mr Antulay's style of functioning over a number of decisions concerning raising of funds, the memorandum alleged that the Chief Minister had manoeuvred the allocation of alcohol and molasses quotas in such a way to extract funds in crores of rupees.

Far more serious is the allegation that Mr Antulay tried to concentrate all power in his hands and projected himself as a powerful leader in the country next only to Mrs Gandhi. In this context, the memorandum quoted the statement made by Mr Bal Thackeray, the Shiv Sena chief, that Mr Antulay should be made Deputy Prime Minister.

While he spent nearly a crore of rupees on projecting his image, he created artificial shortage of essential commodities, freeze decisions on issuing no objection certificates on land deals and took over the distribution of cement and alcohol just to make money, the memorandum reportedly stated.

Freezing of no-objection certificates for new constructions led to a meteoric rise in the price of flats in Bombay and within a year prominent builders made crores of rupees as profit, it is stated. The Chief Minister took this decision on the advice of a syndicate of builders who had dubious connections and in the process nearly rupees one crore changed hands, the memorandum alleges.

In this context, the memorandum reportedly noted that many known smugglers in the city had entered the estate business and were constructing skyscrapers. Among the handful of big companies who were issued no-objection certificates for building construction is one connected with Mr Yusuf Patel, the memorandum says. This company is now engaged in building a 44-storey skyscraper at a prized plot at Worli, it is alleged.

Maharashtra produces alcohol in abundance. The memorandum reportedly stated that Mr Antulay controlled allocation of alcohol to various parties. Sugar factories were allowed to increase their alcohol production for some consideration. While a public sector factory was starved of alcohol, the State Government allotted 20 lakhs litres of alcohol to a liquor factory

GANDHI OPPOSES PAKISTAN'S RETURN TO COMMONWEALTH

Calcutta THE STATESMAN in English 18 Sep 81 p 1

[Text]

NEW DELHI, Sept. 17.—Mrs Gandhi has opposed Pakistan's entry into the Commonwealth and indicated that there should be criteria for membership of the organization and certain objective considerations governing any country wishing to re-enter it after having left it on its own as Pakistan had done.

According to an official spokesman, the Prime Minister told an Australian reporter that entry into the Commonwealth should be on the basis of unanimity. She pointed out that membership of the Commonwealth was based on expression of public opinion in a country. There was no such forum in Pakistan through which the people could express themselves.

It had been India's experience, Mrs Gandhi said, that Pakistan usually made use of such international forums repeatedly to raise bilateral issues.

In India's assessment, Mrs Gandhi said, no new development had taken place since Pakistan opted out of the Commonwealth which could be the basis for that country's re-entry into the organisation.

Meanwhile, members of Parliament's Consultative Committee for the External Affairs Ministry were told today by Mr P. V. Narasimha Rao that Pakistan's move for talks on an agreement for non-aggression was still being studied. The proposal was made in a certain context and would be examined in that light.

The Minister reiterated that the Government was alert to the critical developments in India's neighbourhood as mentioned by the committee's members. The country's foreign policy was geared to meet these developments and challenges.

India had consistently favoured a policy of peace and good neighbourliness towards Bangladesh and other countries, Mr Narasimha Rao said.

The Minister was hopeful of the coming North-South summit in Mexico and said India had participated in the preparatory process at different levels to create a purposeful atmosphere.

According to an official spokesman, members of the committee were unanimous in expressing their concern over the announcement by the USA of an arms aid package for Pakistan. Some mentioned, in particular, the use of electronic equipment in Pakistan and that country's willingness to supply military facilities and bases to the USA.

Some members felt that the USA was adopting "antagonistic" policies towards developing countries. There was an element of opposition to non-alignment. However, certain allies of the USA such as France had a different approach.

LABOR MINISTERS OF SEVEN STATES MEET IN DELHI

[Excerpt] New Delhi, September 12. The tendency of some entrepreneurs to shift their units to low-wage states, particularly in the southern and western parts of the country is causing concern.

The issue came up for review at a meeting of labour ministers of seven states who agreed that the wage differences among the states should be minimal, not exceeding a rupee, and that the minimum wage in the states should be fixed between Rs 7 and Rs 8. This will be enforced by January 1.

The ministers belonged to Gujarat, Maharashtra, Madhya Pradesh, Andhra Pradesh, Karnataka, Kerala and Tamil Nadu.

The Union minister for industry and labour, Mr N.D. Tewari, who presided over the meeting, reminded the states representatives that in some cases a revision of wages was overdue. At present, the minimum wages among these states ranged between Rs 4.50 and Rs 13.50 a day. He pointed out that some states had provided for guaranteed payment of minimum wages, while others had not.

In his view, even if the wages could not be made uniform, minimum wages should be revised and enforced.

He agreed that there could be difficulties in making the wages uniform throughout the country. But the criteria for fixing wages could be applied on a national scale. A committee of officials was examining the question.

The Union minister recalled the recommendation of the last conference of labour ministers for linking minimum wages with consumer price index numbers. A subcommittee of the labour ministers had earlier proposed that each state should consider introducing a variable DA formula as a distinct element in determining minimum wages. According to Mr Tewari, this formula would facilitate revision of wages.

The seven ministers at yesterday's meeting also recommended that each state should guarantee minimum wages, not less than 50 per cent of the average daily payment, to prevent exploitation of labour on the plea of nonavailability of raw material or rejection of their finished goods. They also endorsed the suggestion of the Union minister on the DA formula. They felt the minimum wages could be revised periodically on the rise of five points. In any event, there should be revision at least once a year.

BIHAR, OTHER STATE MINISTERS CHARGED WITH CORRUPTION

Calcutta THE SUNDAY STATESMAN in English 13 Sep 81 p 7

[Text] Patna, Sept 12--Political and official circles here were yesterday rocked by the publication in a section of the Press of the Union Home Minister, Mr Zail Singh's written reply in the Rajya Sabha that memoranda against the Chief Ministers and Ministers of Bihar, Haryana, Karnataka and Madhya Pradesh addressed to the Prime Minister had been processed or were being processed. This was according to the procedure under the code of conduct for Ministers and the circumstances of each case.

It is significant that a fierce controversy had been raging in Patna since September 3 following the publication of a report in a leading local English daily that a detailed inquiry conducted by various wings of the Central intelligence agency had found prima facie cases of corrupt practices against many Bihar Ministers and ruling party politicians.

The report was denied by the State Chief Minister, Mr Jagannath Mishra, next day. But the controversy did not come to an end. When Mr Zail Singh's statement was published yesterday morning, the Chief Minister's denial of the report was being looked at in political circles as an object of ridicule.

In its issue of September 3 the local English daily had said: "A detailed inquiry conducted by the various wings of the Central intelligence agency is understood to have found prima facie cases of corrupt practices and favouritism leading to the amassing of wealth disproportionate to their known sources of income against many Bihar Ministers and ruling party politicians." The probe by the Central intelligence and its allied organizations had been ordered by the Union Home Ministry, the paper said, and added that the probe report had been submitted to the Ministry on August 10. On the party front, the inquiring agencies had found connexions of some MPs and MLAs with irregularities and bungling in the State's Cooperative Department and other semi-Government institutions, the paper said.

The report is understood to have confirmed the link of some of the Ministers with foreign banks and has said that a large amount amassed by them by dubious means has been deposited in a neighbouring country.

The Chief Minister, who has been charged with ignoring the activities of his colleagues, either conceded or found himself too weak to stop their activities the report is understood to have said.

Next day the Chief Minister's strongly-worded denial was published on the front page by the same newspapers. Advising reporters, to maintain a code of conduct and decency, he described the report as misleading and baseless. "This morning I had a talk with the Union Home Minister who repudiated the report that any such probe had either been conducted or ordered, the Chief Minister said.

Opposition parties, particularly the BJP are now examining whether they can move a privilege motion against the Bihar Chief Minister in Parliament.

STATES TOLD TO REVAMP INTELLIGENCE ORGANIZATIONS

Madras THE HINDU in English 14 Sep 81 p 9

[Text]

NEW DELHI, Sept 13

The Centre has sent detailed instructions to the State Governments on revamping their intelligence set-up to prevent communal trouble.

On the basis of special studies of communal incidents in the past, the Centre had concluded that the trouble, in good many cases, could have been avoided, had the intelligence system not been found wanting. Hence the stress on steps to remove its weakness and fill the gaps.

The Centre would like the States to proceed along the following lines:

Special units: The adequacy, focus and effectiveness of the communal intelligence at the State-level and in sensitive areas should be reviewed on a priority basis for appropriate corrective action.

Special intelligence units should be established at the headquarters. These units should be headed by a senior police officer and composed of persons who have aptitude for the kind of work, and are impartial in their outlook.

Simultaneously, cells should be set up in communally sensitive districts and taluks. Specialised channels for collecting and disseminating intelligence should be created down to the station house (thana) level.

The staff of the district special branch should be distributed in various station houses for collecting intelligence. The information collected by the intelligence agencies should be passed on to the station house officers simultaneously while being communicated to the Superintendent of Police and higher authorities.

Feed-back of intelligence from the State headquarters to the districts should also be ensured.

Gaps in intelligence because of the breakdown of the older mechanism of communication between village authorities and the police station need a systematic reappraisal.

Effective means should be devised to remain in contact with intelligence at the village level.

Communal intelligence organisations in the districts should collect information regarding disputes over land, between members of the two major communities and religious processions, and make specific assessment of the situation on the eve of major festivals.

They should also watch the activities of organised communal groups and study communal propaganda and publications.

List of dts: The Centre has drawn a list of districts prone to communal incidents for the guidance of the State Governments. The names of the districts of the southern States are:

Andhra Pradesh: Medak, Karimnagar, Nizamabad, Rangareddy, Adilabad, Kurnool and Nalgonda and Hyderabad city.

Kerala: Mallapuram, Cannanore, Trivandrum and Trichur.

Karnataka: Bangalore, Bidar, Gulbarga, Dharwar, Mysore, South Kanara and Kolar.

Tamil Nadu: Tiruchi, South Arcot, Madurai, Ramanathapuram, Tirunelveli, North Arcot, Dharmapuri and Coimbatore.

DELHI EXAMINING PAKISTAN NONAGGRESSION PROPOSAL

Madras THE HINDU in English 17 Sep 81 p 1

NEW DELHI, Sept. 16.

The new Pakistan proposal for "mutual guarantees of non-aggression and non-use of force", which is a follow up of its earlier suggestion for a balanced reduction of forces by both sides is being examined by the Government in all its aspects.

An official spokesman today declined to answer any questions on the merits of the Pakistani offer, pending a careful assessment of its implications.

The text of the Pakistan statement, calling for a no-war pact, was handed over to the Indian Ambassador in Islamabad yesterday for transmission to Delhi. It was released by the Pakistan Embassy here today for publication.

A careful analysis of the text would indicate that the main purpose of the proposed non-aggression agreement is to forestall the anticipated criticism in U.S. Congress about the Reagan Administration's decision to rearm Pakistan. The statement tried to assure all concerned that, in seeking this military aid from the United States, Pakistan was in no way attempting to enter into an arms race with India, much less engage in a confrontation with it.

F-16s supply: The statement disclosed, without directly referring to Pakistan's bid to acquire F-16s at an early date, that during the latest visit of the U.S. Under-Secretary of State, Mr. James Buckley, the unresolved issues relating to the delivery schedules of essential defence items had been settled to its satisfaction. It meant that the U.S. had promised an early delivery of at least the first few of these aircraft.

But the statement went out of its way to accuse India of embarking on a programme of acquiring, in large numbers the most modern offensive weapons, including Jaguars, MiG-23s, MiG-25s and Mirage-2000, from both Western and Soviet sources. In spite of this development, it was stressed, Pakistan was ready to seek a tension-free relationship with India through mutual guarantees of non-aggression and non-use of force in the true spirit of the Simla agreement.

The statement also claimed that the acceptance of the U.S. military aid package would not affect Pakistan's principled stand on international issues, including its commitments as a member of the Islamic conference and the non-aligned movement. Similarly, there would be no weakening of the efforts to improve Indo-Pakistan relations.

But the fact remains that the U.S. decision to rearm Pakistan has already strained the relationship between the two neighbouring countries by creating new tensions in the sub-continent. In the context India feels constrained to take appropriate counter-steps, both at the political and military levels, to meet a renewed threat from Pakistan.

Commonwealth exit: As Pakistan has been misusing every available international forum to malign it, India sees no reason why it should support Pakistan's re-admission to the Commonwealth in the present circumstances. So it proposes to oppose actively the move of some countries, notably Britain, Australia, New Zealand and Canada, to invite Pakistan to rejoin the Commonwealth at the coming conference in Melbourne, because India does not want it to exploit one more forum for its anti-India campaign.

The friends of Pakistan in the Commonwealth are trying to muster the support of several Afro-Asian member countries for its readmission as a sort of reflex action of their disapproval of the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan. It is being argued that the Commonwealth countries should extend their moral support to Pakistan in meeting Soviet pressures through neighbouring Afghanistan.

The Government of India will have to take all these politico-military factors into consideration before responding to the latest Pakistan suggestion. In its view a non-aggression pact cannot make much sense if one of the signatories to it is bent on acquiring arms well beyond its legitimate requirements or allows itself to be used as surrogate in the developing super power rivalries in the region.

DELHI SCORED FOR 'HIGH-HANDED' OFFICIAL TRANSFERS

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 15 Sep 81 p 5

[Text]

Opposition members strongly attacked the Government on Monday for the 'high handed manner' in which Governors of States had been transferred.

Speaking at the meeting of the Consultative Committee of members of Parliament attached to the Home Ministry, the members deplored the manner in which Rajasthan Governor Raghukul Tilak and West Bengal Governor T N Singh had been summarily forced out of office.

Home Minister Zail Singh's claim that nothing unconstitutional had been done in the appointment of Governors did not convince the members. Mr Niren Ghosh of the CPI-M charged that the West Bengal Governor had been sacked because the Centre wanted to topple the Left Front Government in the State at a convenient time.

Mr Ghosh and Harkishen Singh Surjeet, also of the CPI-M strongly protested about the Centre's failure to give assent to many legislative measures enacted by the Left Front Government. The bills, passed by the Assembly, had been sent to the President for his assent, but no action had been taken for many months, the members said. They charged that the Centre had a hostile attitude towards the State Government and therefore assent to the bills was being delayed.

The Home Minister tried to assuage the feelings of the members and assured them that every effort would be made to persuade' the concerned ministries to expedite scrutiny and clearance of the pending bills.

The members, cutting across party lines, expressed grave concern on recent violent incidents and activites of secessionist elements and called for stern action to root out these forces. The members were exercised over the brutal murder of veteran journalist and freedom fighter Lala Jagat Narain. They also referred to the continued violence and underground activity in the north-eastern States

Mr Zail Singh said the Government was fully aware of the activities of the divisive and secessionist forces operating in the country and was actively working to "curb and frustrate their efforts to disturb peace"

The Government, he said, was keeping a careful watch on the situation. The Minister, according to an official spokesman of the Home Ministry, "agreed with members that some foreign hands seem to be actively working in fostering these dangerous movements with the sole intention of disturbing the peace in the country".

Briefing the members on the situation in the north-eastern States, the Minister said talks with MNF leader Laldenga were in progress. Mr Laldenga had recently been provided facilities to visit Mizoram and consult his colleagues on the proposals which were under discussion. Mr Zail Singh hoped that the MNF leaders will show more realism in their approach to the problem and work in unison with patriotic forces in the region for the betterment of the community.

On Assam, Mr Zail Singh said there was satisfactory progress in the series of talks with the agitation leaders. And further headway was likely to be made in the meeting to be resumed shortly.

RAJYA SABHA PANEL UPHOLDS RIGHT TO STRIKE

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 15 Sep 81 p 5

[Text]

The Rajya Sabha Committee on Subordinate Legislation has recommended the deletion of a provision in the Bombay Port Trust Employees (Conduct) Regulations, 1976 which bars an employee from resorting to or in any way abetting any form of strike in connection with any matter pertaining to his service or the service of any other employee, reports UNI.

The committee has noted that some of the public undertaking have made no mention of 'strike' in their conduct and discipline rules and have simply provided that no employee "shall engage himself or participate in any demonstration which involves incitement to an offence".

The 47th report of the committee was presented to the House on Monday.

Regarding participation of employees in politics and elections, the Committee has recommended the retention of that part of a regulation which prevents employees from taking part in an election to a legislature or a local authority.

But it has expressed itself against prohibiting an employee from canvassing or using his influence in connection with an election on the ground that part of the regulation violates freedom of speech and expression guaranteed under Article 19 (1) of the Constitution.

PTI adds: The committee, under the chairmanship of Mr Narasinha Prasad Nanda, has viewed this departure from the Central Civil Services (Conduct) Rules in the context that even though there is no Constitutional right to strike in India, a strike in industrial establishment has been accepted as lawful under the Industrial Disputes Act.

The committee has further affirmed that employees of the public undertakings are as much public servants as others and that in the interests of the efficient functioning of those undertakings it would be imperative to extend to them some of the conduct rules applicable to Government servants, with suitable modifications according to their special requirements.

SIKH CONVENTION RESOLUTION SCORES KHALISTAN

Bombay THE TIMES OF INDIA in English 14 Sep 81 p 9

[Text]

NEW DELHI, September 13.

AN all-India Sikh convention held inside Gurdwara Rakab Ganj today declared that the demand for Khalistan was not supported by the Sikh world.

The convention, which a spokesman claimed was attended by 2,000 delegates from all over the country, said in a resolution "The Khalistan demand is a bogey raised by defeated politicians who are puppets in the hands of a foreign government. They (protagonists of Khalistan) are, in fact, enemies of the Sikh world and want to keep this a burning topic."

The resolution said that the Sikhs had, under the leadership of Master Tara Singh, already taken a decision in 1947 that they were an inseparable limb of the Indian Union. The majority of the Sikh masses had never thought of separating themselves from India and as such would continue to contribute their mite towards the development and defence of the country as its free citizens.

While condemning strongly the communal propaganda of the majority community aimed at creating an atmosphere of hatred against te Sikhs, the convention warned that such attacks would not be tolerated.

It also appealed to the people having faith in the secular and democratic character of India to ensure that any move leading to separatist mentality was nipped in the bud, as it was essential not only for strenthening their faith in the welbeing of the minorities but also to win the confidence of the minorities and the Sikh community in particular.

RAJIV GANDHI TALKS WITH NEWSMEN IN LUCKNOW

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 20 Sep 81 pp 1, 7

[Text]

LUCKNOW, Sept 19—Mr Rajiv Gandhi MP said here today that those Congress-I men who raised slogans demanding that he should be made Chief Minister of UP 'must be nuts'.

He was talking to newsmen after a vociferous reception at the aerodrome. And various points of the road leading to the State's VIP guest house. Congress-I men from various parts of the State had collected in Lucknow to accord him a befitting reception on his first visit to the city after his victory in the parliamentary byelections at Amethi. Groups of Youth Congress-I workers who had gathered at the aerodrome and on the road raised slogans in favour of Rajiv Gandhi or someone from the Nehru family becoming the Chief Minister of UP.

Mr Gandhi addressed meetings of UPCC-I executive, Congress Legislature Party and the State Youth Congress-I workers. At all the meetings he urged the Congress-I men to 'work to serve the people and to strengthen the organisation.'

He denied all reports about taking up any office either in the party or in the Government. 'At present I want to serve only as an ordinary MP,' he added.

Mr Gandhi regretted that the newsmen were falling a prey to those who were planting stories to serve their own political ends. For instance, he said, a story was published by a paper about Congress-I MP Arif Mohammad Khan allegedly involved in a passport racket. When pointed out that an official of the rank of superintendent of police had given a statement, Mr Gandhi said that officers should check facts before giving press statements.

Another paper, he said, had published a story about his daily visit to a shooting range, while the fact was that he visited it only once.

Asked about the establishment of a fertiliser factory in his constituency, Mr Gandhi said that the site of the factory was to be decided neither by the party, nor by the Government. It will be decided by a computer.

He denied any knowledge about any move to replace the UP Chief Minister Vishwanath Pratap Singh by any of his (Rajiv's) relatives or cousins and deprecated those who talked about it.

Mr Gandhi said that during his talks with the party legislators office-bearers of the PCC and workers, he heard complaints against the non-availability of power as required by farmers in the State.

He said no one had made any complaint about the non-functioning of the Government or that the bureaucracy was dominating.

When his attention was drawn to complaints of a section of the people that innocent persons were being killed by the police in fake encounters, Mr Gandhi said 'It is very difficult to distinguish who is a dacoit and who is not.

Asked if any party legislator had drawn his attention to a signature campaign, launched by the supporters of Mr Mahesh Upadhyaya a UP MLA recently expelled from the party by the party High Command for revoking of his expulsion, Mr Gandhi replied in the negative.

Earlier, replying to an address of welcome, accorded by the PCC Mr Gandhi called upon party members not to approach the press for the solution of their problems. There might be differences, but the party was the only forum for the solution of problems.

Briefing newsmen after the meeting, a spokesman of the party said that Mr Gandhi was of the view that the workers, who had all along been loyal and sincere to the party, even in its adverse days, should be given preference both in the party and the Government, but they should be accountable to their efficiency and performance.

CPI LEADER SEN SPEAKS ON FUTURE OF COMMUNISM

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 19 Sep 81 p 4

HYDERABAD September 18

"COMMUNISM has come to stay in India. There is no future for India without a strong and significant Communist presence. Far that the Communists in India must also realise that their future depends on the strength and growth of India".

This is how CPI leader Mohit Sen described "the future of the Communist movement in India" while speaking on the subject at the historic Durbar Hall of the women's college at a function jointly organised yesterday by Institute of Asian Studies, India International Centre, and the English forum of Osmania University.

Outlining at length the origin and growth of the Communist movement in India, Mr Mohit Sen said that Communists were in fact the pathfinders of India's freedom struggle. Referring to the criticism that Communists had contributed nothing for the country's freedom. Mr Mohit Sen said that even before the Communist Party was officially born an international group of Communists had declared in their manifesto that the goal of freedom struggle in India should be accepted by the Indian National Congress after half a decade only, Mr Mohit Sen declared.

Commenting on the slow progress of the Communist movement in India, Mr Sen said that this was due to their own failure to understand the multiple and multi-structural character of the India society and its struggle for freedom. The 1964 split had greatly hampered the growth of Communist movement. But for that, this movement would have more than doubled its present strength, both inside and outside the Parliamentary institutions," he remarked.

Mr Sen was optimistic about the immediate prospects for the Communist movement in the country despite hurdles. He stated that there was a vacuum of leadership and at the same time the working class had acquired a new potential. He was of the view that the CPI in particular had emerged as a class revolutionary party with a national outlook. The rest of the Communist movement, Mr Sen said, would have to follow suit.

The CPI leader said that the Communist movement had to remain in total opposition to the present unjust social order. At the same time it had to adopt an attitude of national responsibility even before coming to power. "If you do not care for India now, India will not care for you in the future", he declared.

While making a fervent appeal for the unification of the Communist movement, Mr Sen warned against premature expectations. He called for a step-by-step approach. "Let time and practice test the theory, the programme and policies of the CPI and the CPI-M", he said and added. "let us march together but respect our differences and discuss them. There can by unity but not identity".

WEST BENGAL CPI-M ACCUSED OF CORRUPT PRACTICES

[Text] Calcutta, September 18: The Congress-I legislature party leader, Mr Bhola Sen, today alleged that by creating the West Bengal Human Aids Services Society and the West Bengal Medical Air Charitable Trust and attracting government funds through the trust, the CPM was trying to "serve its own political purpose."

Mr Sen said this would be one of the biggest scandals. According to him, the Maharashtra chief minister, Mr A. R. Antulay, did not collect money for himself and all collections had come through cheques for the trusts set up by him.

The chief minister, Mr Jyoti Basu, was soon there after asked about Mr Sen's allegation. He said what Mr Sen had said about the trust, with which the government was connected as being an agency for promotion of medical research, was "all rubbish." The name of the trust itself, as Mr Basu gave it, was somewhat different and so was the composition.

According to Mr Sen, the society was registered in 1979, its signatories being Mr T. N. Singh (the former governor in his personal capacity) Mr Jyotirmoy Bosu, MP, Syed Sahadullah (brother of the assembly speaker), Mr Amal Datta (Mr Basu's nephew), and three others. Its office was located at Mr Basu's residence. No one knew how much money it had collected, and "exploiting Mr Singh's name." The society had taken about 8,000 square metres of port commission land presumably on lease. Mr Basu said the government had no connection with the society, but he knew it planned to open a hospital.

About the West Bengal Medical Aid Charitable Trust, Mr Sen said it was registered on July 27, 1981, of which Mr Singh was the founder-member, again in his personal capacity, along with two others--Dr M.K. Chhetry and Dr S.K. Bhattacharyya.

CPI DELEGATE SPEAKS ON ASSAM SITUATION

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 15 Sep 81 p 5

[Text]

CPI leader Yogendra Sharma said in the Rajya Sabha on Monday that neither agitation nor repression in Assam would help solve the problem of foreign nationals which could only be settled through negotiations and by eschewing the path of confrontation.

Participating in a discussion on the Assam State Legislature (Delegation of Powers) Bill, 1981 prior to its adoption in the Upper House, Mr Sharma said his party was normally opposed to imposition of President's Rule, but Assam was a peculiar case since no party could form any permanent Government in that State even with a large band of defectors. He, however, hoped that President's Rule in Assam would end soon to help organisation of fresh Assembly elections there.

He pointed out that the agitators in Assam were comprised three different elements. One section was genuinely misled, another section despite its strong views was amenable to reason, while a third section was avowedly anti-national. He wanted the Government to adopt steps that would help the first two sections subscribing to nationalist sentiments to return to sound rails; but urged for stringent measures against anti-national elements.

In this context, he referred to the activity of foreign-inspired forces in Assam, the fact that the national Tricolour was burnt recently on Independence Day, and that five of the CPI's brave cadres had been killed by such elements. These elements were found to possess a lot of arms and ammunition besides maps of oil installations and strategic locations in the state, as recent seizures had revealed.

While severely dealing with such people the Government should try to remove the genuine grievances and apprehensions of the Assamese populace who feared that they would become a minority in their own State, Mr Sharma pleaded.

He also wanted some information of the talks the Government was having with the agitators, but qualified that even if the Government felt that it would not be proper to reveal the details of the talks, the House should know the stage the talks had reached.

SUSPENSION OF DELHI METROPOLITAN COUNCIL EXTENDED

[Text] President Sanjiva Reddy on Saturday suspended the Delhi Metropolitan Council for a further period of six months till 20 March 1982.

The order, extending suspension of the operation of the provisions of the Delhi Administration Act, for the fourth time in the last one-and-a-half years, said that the President was satisfied that for the proper administration of the Union Territory it is necessary to do so.

With this latest suspension of the council, the elections to the representative body of the Capital have been pushed further by a couple of months, and if the elections are not held between now and March next, then the Capital will have been without an elected body for two years.

The council was first suspended on 21 March 1980. It was further extended for two six-month terms in September 1980 and March, 1981.

The Opposition parties had vehemently criticised the Government action and accused it of trying to run the Capital with the help of the bureaucracy.

Even the Delhi unit of the ruling party began demanding early elections to the Council and some local Cong-I MPs led delegations to press the demand for elections to the local body.

Cong-I Fear

Mr Kidarnath Sahni, who was Chief Executive Councillor of the Metropolitan Council at the time of its dissolution, has described as 'unfortunate' the decision to extend the term of supersession of the Council by six months, adds PTI.

The decision 'betrays the fear of the Congress-I to face the Delhi electorate," Mr Sahni said.

DACCA SAID TO BE WARNED AGAINST PAKISTANI OVERTURES

Madras THE HINDU in English 13 Sep 81 p 1

[Article by G. K. Reddy]

[Text] NEW DELHI, Sept. 12.

The Foreign Ministers of India and Bangladesh, Mr. P. V. Narasimha Rao and Mr. Shamsul Huq, concluded their talks today on a hopeful note, reflecting the desire of both countries to settle all outstanding issues in a "constructive and cooperative spirit" and re-establish good neighbourly relations on the basis of "mutual trust and shared interests."

The two sides agreed to take "positive and practical" steps, avoiding negative statements, to resolve sensitive problems like the Ganga waters, maritime jurisdiction, New Moore island and access to enclaves.

PM's assurance: When the Bangladesh Foreign Minister called on the Prime Minister, Mrs. Indira Gandhi, today, she assured him that India would adopt a "constructive, practical and rational" approach to all these contentious issues in an earnest effort to find amicable solutions.

She told Mr. Shamsul Huq that India remained committed to fostering mutually beneficial relations

After the two Foreign Ministers concluded their discussions, the senior officials of the two sides met to draft a joint statement recording these sentiments and voicing the desire of both countries for better relations. It also indicated the decision to take practical steps for settling bilateral issues without any outside interference.

Turning point: The outcome of these talks represented a turning point for the better in the chequered history of Indo-Bangla relations. But it was too early to think in terms of a major breakthrough in resolving any of the outstanding problems.

The two sides were, therefore, particularly careful to avoid undue expectations, while exuding cautious optimism about the prospects for settling these issues

The tone for the discussions between the two Foreign Ministers was set by the understanding arrived at earlier during the preparatory talks in Dacca last week to resolve bilateral differences bilaterally without attempting to internationalise them. It was in this context that the two sides agreed to withdraw their naval forces from the vicinity of the New Moore island and respect the status quo pending a final settlement.

The Indian side utilised the opportunity to caution Mr Shamsul Huq about the implications of the Pakistani overtures to Bangladesh to forge an entente cordiale based on common antipathy towards India than on shared affinity between them.

It was made quite clear that outstanding disputes could not be resolved in an atmosphere of contrived hostility fuelled by political propaganda and religious prejudice.

At the same time India was able to get across the message that it was ready to do whatever was possible, consistent with its own national interests, in giving due weightage to Bangladesh's stand on these issues, so long as Dacca was prepared to adopt a positive approach to them.

Mr Shamsul Huq seemed to have got the point that the key to a good relationship with India lay in Bangladesh's own perception of it.

PAKISTAN ENVOY: ALARM OVER WEAPONS UNWARRANTED

Bombay THE TIMES OF INDIA in English 14 Sep 81 p 9

[Text]

NEW DELHI, September 13 (PTI).

PAKISTAN's ambassador to India, Mr. Abdul Sattar, has said that "misinformation and exaggeration" have spread "unwarranted alarm" about the acquisition of sophisticated arms by his country.

Addressing an inter-city Rotary seminar here, Mr. Sattar said his country had no intention of starting an arms race with India. Such a possibility was "excluded because of the objective disparities."

Describing the 1.5 billion dollars worth of arms purchases Pakistan proposes to make as "comparatively modest," Mr. Sattar said, "more than this amount is being paid by India for the purchase of one single item, namely the Jaguar aircraft."

According to Mr. Sattar, the "deterioration in the security environment" had underlined the need for Pakistan to strengthen its defences. Replacement of much of the equipment of Pakistan's armed forces had become unavoidable in any case because of obsolescence.

AFGHAN ISSUE

Dwelling at length on the situation in Afghanistan, the ambassador said that more recently the "Kabul regime has discarded all caution and escalated reckless acts of violence and hostility."

He also stated that much had been said lately about the F-16 aircraft being acquired by Pakistan to "create the alarmist but incorrect impression that this plane will provide aggressive capability."

He said no mention had been made of "the fact that before Pakistan receives the first of the small number of F-16 aircraft it is negotiating to buy, several squadrons of the latest MiGs and Jaguars will have reached India."

India, he said, was also negotiating for the purchase of submarines from a West European country and a "futuristic aircraft" from another.

Mr. Satter said that a recent statement by Pakistan that it did not intend to use its arms against the USSR "has been misinterpreted, although it should be self-evident that Pakistan cannot concrive of attacking the Soviet Union."

"Nor by the same token, can Pakistan wish to fight India. Our sole purpose is self-defence," he said.

In his view, if Pakistan-India relations were perceived in "adversary terms, it is Pakistan that should be concerned. It is incomprehensible to us that the alarm should be given in a country that enjoys a vast superiority in power."

TRANSFER OF POWER BEGINS NEW ERA IN KASHMIR

Bombay THE TIMES OF INDIA in English 9 Sep 81 p 8

[Article by V. K. Dethe]

[Text]

SRINAGAR: The "transfer of power" within the ruling National Conference from father to son marks the beginning of a new era in Kashmir politics. Dr. Farooq Abdullah, his eldest son, is the political heir to Sheikh Mohamad Abdullah who has dominated the political scene in the Himalayan state for five decades.

The transition has been smooth. The process was accelerated late last year when the Sheikh fell ill and his son-in-law, Mr. G. M. Shah, who was then being projected by a ruling party faction as his political successor, virtually took over the functions of the chief minister at Jammu, the winter capital. Some senior cabinet ministers resented this move and made their feelings known in no uncertain terms. The message was not lost on the Sheikh. His acerbic son-in-law could not carry the party with him despite his reputation as a person who could get things done.

The public endorsement of Dr. Abdullah's candidature for the presidentship of the National Conference was secured by the Sheikh when he announced his choice at a religious congregation at the Hazratbal shrine. Though he was criticised by some political parties for "misusing" a religious shrine for political purposes, the protests did not carry weight. He could effect the change without much of a hullabaloo over trying to found a political dynasty because of the disarray in the opposition parties. The Janata is splintered, with most of its MLAs owing allegiance to the Bharatiya Janata Party who are afraid of switching over for fear of expulsion from the house under the defection law. In any case, the BJP has a tacit alliance with the National Conference in the Jammu region.

The Sheikh sought to neutralise his critics in the Congress (I) by recalling, in his opening speech at the three-day annual session of the National Conference, the historic statement in 1930 of Pandit Motilal Nehru: "Let us hope the son will accomplish the task begun by the father." (It was made when Motilal Nehru handed over the presidentship of the Congress to his son, Jawaharlal.) The Sheikh added that subsequent events were to vindicate the choice of this "wise Brahmin". By citing this parallel, the Sheikh, who recently claimed that his forefathers were Brahmins, sought to confer legitimacy on his son's elevation to party chief.

Dr. Abdullah has his father's charisma. His greatest asset is his affability and the ability to get along with people. He made it a point to invite to the annual session some erstwhile comrades of his father, who had left the party after differences with him. Significantly, Mr. Shyamlal Saraf and Mr. Ali Mohammed Naik accepted and attended. Maulana Masoodi, formerly chief of the state Janata party, did not attend, but sent a "warm letter". Dr. Abdullah also displayed this ability to build bridges of friendship during the speaker's crisis last year. At a time when the name of Mr. Mohiuddin Malik, the then speaker, was anathema to the National Conference, Dr. Abdullah was seen going into his chamber and embracing him. He kept Mr. G. M. Shah's sensitivities in view by asking him to preside when he vacated the presidents chair on occasions during the session, despite the presence of both the provincial presidents.

Observers here, while admitting his ability to carry the party with him, refer to his relative political and administrative inexperience. He has never gone, they say, through the rough-and-tumble of politics. They have a point. Until last year, his political experience was confined to being seen with his father. He did not even have to go to the hustings during the 1980 parliamentary elections as all the opposition candidates withdrew at the last minute. There was no contest even for the presidentship of the party. His was the only nomination paper received by the returning officer. But there is no denying that he is forward-looking and that, with him at the helm, there will be changes in party functioning.

Dissidence within the party, if any, will surface when he reconstitutes the central working committee. Till now, the struggle between him and Mr. G. M. Shah has been fought through proxy within the confines of the Srinagar municipal council. This struggle saw the ouster of the council president, who owes allegiance to Dr. Abdullah, and the coming into power of Mr. Shah's supporters.

The National Conference president, has, however, taken the precaution of announcing the formation of a youth wing. Hitherto, the youth federation unofficially played this role and observers here feel that the new body, named the Youth National Conference, will serve as a counterweight to the parent body till such time as the new president consolidates his position.

But for a resolution and a proposal, there was nothing startling at the session. The resolution on the state's autonomy announced the steps, including a review of Central laws extended to the state, being taken towards the restoration of the constitutional position of Jammu and Kashmir as it existed prior to August 1953, when the Sheikh was dismissed and arrested. If carried to its logical conclusion by the government, this resolution will put the latter in direct confrontation with the Centre.

Special proviso

A careful reading of the agreed conclusions of the Kashmir accord, which brought the Sheikh back to power in 1975, would show that under clause four, "with a view to assuring freedom to the state of Jammu and Kashmir to have its own legislation on matters like welfare measures, cultural matters, social security, personal law and procedural laws, in a manner suited to the special conditions in the state, it is agreed that the state government can review the law made by Parliament or extended to the state after 1953 on any matter relatable to the concurrent list and may decide which, in its opinion, needs amendment or repeal". The clause goes on to say that the grant of President's assent to such legislation would be sympathetically considered.

But the preceding clause makes it clear that only provisions of the Indian Constitution which have been applied to Jammu and Kashmir with modifications or adaptations can be altered or repealed by an order of the President under article 370, each order being considered on merits. But any provision of the Indian Constitution applied in its totality will remain unalterable.

Though the Sheikh is believed to have urged the enlargement of the state's autonomy during discussions with Mr. G. Parthasarathi, Mrs. Gandhi's negotiator, he did not make any headway. In any case, Mrs. Gandhi, in her letter of February 12, 1975, appreciating the Sheikh's acceptance of the agreed conclusions, remarked: "I am aware of your views on the Centre-state relationship in respect of the state of Jammu and Kashmir. I have already explained to you that the clock cannot be put back and we have to take note of the realities of the situation."

Similarly, observers say that Dr. Farooq Abdullah's suggestion that the Congress (I) wind up its state unit appears illogical. If the National Conference, as it claims, has massive grassroots support, then the existence of the Congress (I) should not be a matter of concern to it. By accusing the Congress (I) of creating trouble, the National Conference is tacitly admitting that it enjoys support, even if only in certain pockets of the state.

CORRESPONDENT EXPRESSES ALARM OVER SOVIET INTERVENTION IN AFGHANISTAN

Islamabad THE MUSLIM in English 5 Oct 81 p 6

[Text] Karachi, Oct 4: S. S. Akbari Chief correspondent of RADIANCE weekly Delhi, has said in an interview that the people in India are appalled, and alarmed at the Russian troops intervention in Afghanistan.

They are alarmed by the mass massacre of the Afghans and at the grim prospect of escalation of war. He said the Indians dread the whole sub-continent may be engulfed in war leading believed its mass killings, poverty, hunger and diseases. The Indian journalist opened that what is happening in Afghanistan today may happen in Iran, Pakistan and India. The people of India are already crying aloud in the face of mounting poverty, hunger and disease rampant in every nook and corner of India.

When his attention was drawn towards the communal riots in India, Mr Akbari said the communal riots have become the order of the day in India not because the Hindus hatred of the Muslims but because the heart of the problem is the wretched plight of the Hindus and Muslims living in India.

The heart of the problem is unemployment coupled with hunger and disease. Although the government headed by Indira Gandhi deals ruthlessly with the rioters yet the basic cause of the communal riot is pure and simple economic.

Unless, he added, poverty and hunger are banished from India, the agitation of students, farmers are communalists will continue unabated reverting to Afghan affairs the Indian newsmen remarked that the Muslims of India are not happy with the policy of the Indian Government pursued in Afghanistan. [as published]

Talking about India and Pakistan relations, Mr Akbari said the Muslims of India look forward for extremely friendly and cordial relations existing between India and Pakistan as they are of the considered view that in the happy relations of India and Pakistan lies the well being and prosperity of the minorities of both the countries. Any strained relations between the two countries, Mr Akbari said becomes the cause of concern and anxiety of the minorities of both India and Pakistan.--PPI

KASHMIR CHIEF MINISTER ON HIS STATE'S RIGHTS

Karachi BUSINESS RECORDER in English 8 Oct 81 p 3

[Text] Sialkot, Oct. 7: Puppet Chief Minister Sheikh Mohammad Abdullah of Indian occupied Kashmir state said that we are fully alive as far as the safeguard of our rights are concerned and nobody will be allowed to do harm to these rights at any rate, he added.

According to an Urdu daily TROSHANI of Srinagar Sh. Abdullah was speaking in the so-called legislative assembly of state in reply to a question raised by an opposition member Abdulla Abdulghani Loan of Peoples Conference.

The Sheikh continued that the particulars of the rights of our state had already been defined in the 310 section of Indian Constitution apparently under which the estate enjoys special status.

The relation between the state and centre are based on this section, he added. Sh. Abdullah set aside the blame levelled by Abdulghani Loan regarding the confirmation of the appointment of Chief Justice of the occupied Kashmir High Court, in which Loan alleged that the delay caused in confirmation of the Chief Justice's appointment was synonymous to harm the internal independence of the held state. The state Chief Minister on this point clarified the constitutional position and said that the President of India has the jurisdiction of authority under the held state constitution in this connection.

The approval of recommendations by the occupied state government in connection with the appointment of Chief Justice of the State High Court is a legal prerequisite and the Central Government shall have to concede to these recommendations, Sh. Abdullah concluded.--PPI

PAPERS PUBLISH REPORTS ON PRC INTRUSIONS

Guerrillas in Ladakh

Calcutta THE STATESMAN in English 12 Sep 81 p 9

[Text] Srinagar, Sept.11--Six China-trained guerrillas have been arrested by the Indian security forces recently in different parts of the border areas of Ladakh, according to official reports reaching here yesterday.

The reports further reveal that the guerrillas who managed to enter into Changthang and Nobra areas of Ladakh last month were reportedly deployed by the Chinese Army Intelligence authorities for espionage work in the border areas. They were taken into custody while they were roaming around some Indian defence installations located in these areas.

Official sources said, however, that local Buddhists refused to provide them with shelter because they suspected them to be foreign agents.

PRC Denial Reported

Bombay THE TIMES OF INDIA in English 13 Sep 81 p 1

[Text] Beijing, September 12 (PTI): China today pleaded innocence of a recent border incident in which several Chinese troops armed with automatic weapons reportedly entered the Ladakh region and hoisted the Chinese flag.

A foreign ministry official merely said: "We know nothing about this," when his attention was drawn to the incident.

According to reports Chinese-trained guerrillas had crossed into Ladakh and hoisted the Chinese flag. Both incidents happened last month, but it is not clear if they were connected.

A foreign news agency report from Leh, capital of Ladakh, said six Tibetan guerrillas were found near defence installations "disguised as smugglers and apparently deployed by the Chinese army intelligence unit in western Tibet."

China has been conducting survey work along the border and at times Chinese troops have crossed the frontier, but New Delhi was not making a fuss about the intrusion, some sources added.

An official Indian delegation is due here possibly in late October or early in November to discuss the long-standing border dispute that caused the 1962 Sino-Indian border war.

Officials Refute Denial

Madras THE HINDU in English 14 Sep 81 p 1

[Text] Srinagar, Sept. 13. Though China has pleaded innocence about its troops' recent intrusion into Ladakh, official reports reaching here say that they (Chinese troops) have neither withdrawn from the tri-junction area (of Ladakh), which is 200 metres inside Indian territory, nor pulled down their flag, planted after the intrusion.

Official circles here are, however, hopeful that the Chinese Government will direct its troops to withdraw from Indian territory.

Report From Foreign Ministry

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 24 Sep 81 p 1

[Text] Chinese troops had strayed into Indian territory on the trijunction North Ladakh as early as in May this year, it was learnt from the External Affairs Ministry on Thursday.

It may be recalled that the Chinese Government had denied any such intrusion when such a report had appeared in an Indian newspaper earlier this month.

It is learnt that the Chinese were approached by the Indian border guards who told them that they had strayed into Indian territory. Within a few hours, the Chinese had left the place and returned to their territory. India had not played up the incident, but it acquired publicity when the press report appeared.

The Chinese authorities had taken exception to the report describing it as a "very friendly act" in the official organ of the Chinese Communist Party, PEOPLE'S DAILY. The paper had observed that such a report would harm the cause of Sino-Indian relations.

ASSAM GOVERNOR REPORTED READY TO FORM CABINET

[Text] Gauhati, Sept 10 (PTI). Governor of Assam and Meghalaya Prakash Mehrotra today said that he was ready to examine proposals by political parties for formation of a popular government in Assam, but stability of a ministry would be the 'main criterion' before considering such proposals.

No political parties or groups in the State Assembly, however, had approached him so far in this regard, Mr Mehrotra told PTI in an interview at the Raj Bhavan here.

The Governor said that his immediate concern was the economic development of Assam and he had ordered the State Government to initiate time-bound concrete measures in that direction.

Referring to the urgent need of industrial development in the State, the Governor said that efforts had been made to give more incentives and necessary assistance to the entrepreneurs 'under one roof' to remove the present difficulties faced by them to start new ventures.

Mr Mehrotra said that he had asked the State Industry Department to prepare a 'project profile' on industries which could be set up in the State on the basis of available resources.

The Government, he said, had also constituted a committee to review high power tariff to ensure availability of electricity to the industrial units at reasonable rate.

The Governor said that he would visit each and every district of Assam soon for first hand information about the problems faced by the people of different areas and to take remedial measures accordingly.

COMMUNIST PAPER REPORTS KHALISTAN DEVELOPMENTS

Khalistan Currency Released

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 10 Sep 81 p 1

[Text] Amritsar, Sept 9 (UNI)--The currency of the so-called Republic of Khalistan" was released here today by national council of Khalistan secretary-general Balbir Singh Sandhu.

The currency note--in denomination of five dollars--bears the picture of the Golden Temple on one side, and the portrait of Maharaja Ranjit Singh on the obverse.

It bears the signature of Mr Surjan Singh as the 'Governor of the Reserve Bank of Khalistan.'

The words "Republic of Khalistan" and "five dollars" are written on the note,--both in Roman and Gurmakhi scripts.

Speaking on the occasion, Mr Sandhu said that currency notes in other denominations would be released soon. He, however, refused to disclose the name of the designer of the note and the press where they had been printed.

The notes had been sent by the council "president," Dr Jagjit Singh who was currently abroad, he said.

Meanwhile, 'the Radio Golden Temple,' would be installed here on the birthday of Guru Nanak that falls on 11 November this year, he added.

Opposition in Punjab

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 10 Sep 81 p 4

[Text] The Punjab Hindu SANGATHAN on Wednesday demanded that those raising the demand for a separate Sikh state of "Khalistan" be disenfranchised and not allowed to contest elections to Parliament and State legislatures, reports UNI.

The demand was made by a deputation of the SAGATHAN comprising among others Punjab Arya Pratinidhi Sabha president Virendra, former Punjab Home Minister Mohan Lal and Punjab Vyapar Mandal general secretary Chaturbhuj Mittal, when it met Prime Minister Indira Gandhi.

A spokesman of the SANGATHAN told newsmen that the deputation apprised the Prime Minister of the "divisive, separatist and destructive policies of the Akali Dal whose demand for State autonomy in consonance with the Anadpur Saheb resolution was a stepping stone to Khalistan."

Clarifying that "the SANGATHAN was not opposed to the Sikhs but to the 'communal' policy of the Akalis, the spokesman said the Akalis were playing the same game that was played by the Muslim League for the creation of Pakistan."

The spokesman showed copies of a "Khalistan" passport and a currency note to the newsmen, which, he said, proved that the "Khalistan" movement enjoyed powerful support.

He said the deputation also demanded official language status for Hindis in Punjab and minority status for Hindus in Punjab, Nagaland and Jammu and Kashmir.

SPLIT AMONG ASSAM AGITATION SPONSORS 'IMMINENT'

Bombay THE TIMES OF INDIA in English 10 Sep 81 p 9

[Text]

SHILLONG, September 9.

A SPLIT in the All-Assam Students' Union (AASU) and the All-Assam Gana Sangram Parishad (AAGSP), co-sponsors of the two-year-old Assam agitation over the foreign nationals issue, appears imminent.

The organisations are being subjected to various pulls and pressures and a sort of polarisation is taking place between those who are not too concerned with the plums of office and others having political ambitions. While the relatively moderate and non-political elements are understood to be keen to reach an understanding with the Centre on measures to resolve the issue, the hardliners among the agitators are not too happy with what they describe as the capitulation of the moderates.

The parishad, a conglomerate of over a dozen organisations, has three main components. While the AASU provides it with the muscle and the Assam Sahitya Sabha the support of intellectuals, local organisations like the Purbanchalya Lok Parishad and the Assam Janatabadi Dal (AJD) form the political frame of this loosely-knit organisation.

While the AASU and the Sahitya Sabha — the two non-political organisations with no political axe to grind —are on one side of the fence, differences exist even within the various political constituents of the AAGSP. For instance, the AJD is already split into three factions with three self-proclaimed presidents of the organisation.

The marriage of convenience between the AASU and the AAGSP was virtually dissolved late last year when both sides publicly declared their intentions of going their own way. However, the efforts of some mediators helped in papering over the cracks on that occasion.

The AASU leadership had then grudgingly agreed to continue its partnership with the parishad for fear of being held responsible for scuttling the agitation.

The rift once again surfaced last week when the executive of the parishad expelled one of its convenors, Mr. Jatin Goswami, who represented the Sahitya Sabha and was known to be a votary of an early-negotiated settlement to the problem. He was expelled on the charge of "anti-movement" activities. Last one got an impression that the action against Mr. Goswami was directed to silence the moderates, the parishad executive performed the balancing act of admonishing the "hawkish" PLP leader, Mr. Nibaran Bora, for writing a signed article in a Gauhati journal, 'Agradoot', challenging the wisdom of continuing the negotiations with New Delhi.

DELHI APPROVES HALDIA PETROCHEMICAL COMPLEX

[Text] Calcutta, September 9. The industry minister, Dr Kanai Bhattacharya, told the assembly today that the government of India had adopted the Haldia petro-chemical complex plan and that some officers would visit Calcutta this week-end to finalise the details.

He told another questioner that he did not agree with the government of India's view, conveyed to the chief minister, Mr Jyoti Basu, that an electronics complex, proposed to be located at Salt Lake in the city's suburb, mainly to meet the defence needs, should not be located so near an international border.

The border state concept, according to him, no longer held good, because of the fast development of weaponry with which it was possible to reach any point from any other point. The state government would, therefore, pursue the matter.

In the meantime, the state government, on its own, was going ahead with a Rs 25-crore electronic development project to be implemented during the current plan period. But Salt Lake had its own advantages. The industry posed no pollution hazard and there was land earmarked already for it.

The small industries minister, Mr Chittabrata Mazumdar, responded positively to a member's suggestion that an all-party legislators' delegation should visit Delhi to persuade the authorities concerned to increase the allotment of raw material like iron and steel, tallow, paraffin wax and aluminum to over 70,000 small units in West Bengal.

Mr Mazumdar gave figures of the allotment and actual supply of these items to West Bengal over the last few years, comparing with those made available to Punjab and Haryana, to say that the state was not getting justice in this regard. He cited the example of tallow and said not an ounce of this raw material could be obtained during 1980-81 because the STC wanted users to lift stocks from Bombay docks.

PUNJAB LEADER SAYS DELHI AKALI RALLY A FLOP

[Text] Chandigarh, September 9: The Punjab chief minister, Mr Darbara Singh, yesterday claimed that no more than 40,000 people joined the Akali Dal rally in Delhi on Monday. Only 20,000 of the participants were from Punjab, he stated.

The chief minister told newsmen here that the "thin" attendance at the rally showed that the Sikhs did not support the demands of the Akali Dal(L). The party had failed to prove that the Sikhs were being discriminated against. Most of the slogans and demands did not concern the Sikhs alone. They concerned the entire state, he said.

The demands were mainly economic, but the Akalis were in the habit of giving them a religious colour to exploit the sentiments of the masses, he stated.

Mr Darbara Singh said the charge of religious interference also did not hold water. It was indeed ironical that the Akali Dal, which held a convention in 1971 to install Mr Santokh Singh as president of the Delhi Gurdwara Prabandhak Committee, was now trying to dislodge him from the post. In any case, if the Akalis felt so strongly about it they should urge the government to abolish the Gurdwara Act and manage the affairs of the gurdwaras themselves. Why should they ask the government to hold Gurdwara elections, he asked.

According to observers here, the Akali rally did not prove to be a damp squib as was predicted by the chief minister, or a fiasco as feared by the PCC(I) president, Miss Sarla Prasher. However, the number of participants fell far short of the Akali Dal(L)'s expectation of 500,000.

CIVIL RIGHTS LEADER ALLEGES DICTATORSHIP PLANNED

Calcutta THE SUNDAY STATESMAN in English 20 Sep 81 p 3

[Text]

Mr V. M. Tarkunde, eminent jurist and president of the all-India body of the People's Union for Civil Liberties, warned that attempts were being made to impose dictatorship on the country. A definite step in this direction was likely to be taken in the near future, he said in Calcutta on Saturday.

Inaugurating the first State conference of the West Bengal unit of the PUCL, Mr Tarkunde said that many Third World countries, particularly those which, like India, had been under colonial rule, now had dictatorial regimes. Events in the country, according to him, indicated that a change for dictatorship was impending.

Many people he said, thought that the country's problems could be solved under a benevolent dictatorship. But dictators preferred to maintain a status quo, whereas a change for the better could be achieved only in a democracy.

Mr Tarkunde expressed grave concern over the recent attempts to convert the judiciary into Government machinery. Citizens' rights —political, civil or economic—could not be protected without an independent judiciary. The alleged attempts at subjugating the judiciary to the ruling party and the Government was part of the design to impose dictatorship, he said.

He was also critical of the National Security Act and the Essential Services Maintenance Bill. He doubted the Centre's argument that the Act had been promulgated to punish economic offenders. According to him, had the Government been sincere, it could deal with economic offenders with legislation such as the Conservation of Foreign Exchange and Prevention of Smuggling Act. In reality, he alleged, the Act had been used against political opponents of the ruling party at the Centre. It was "dangerous" for the people of the Government had a permanent provision for preventive detention without trial.

Mr Tarkunde said that the Government would have been justified in passing the ESM Bill if it set up an alternative machinery to redress workers' grievances. Strikes he added, were a means to collective bargaining and asked how workers could bargain without strikes in the event of a dispute.

Civil liberties were far more important than the franchise. Events had proved that elections could be "bogus". The protection of civil liberties was also a guarantee for political rights. He urged people of all political views to organize themselves to safeguard civil liberties, so that the Government did not find them "sleeping over" the repressive laws and reimpose an emergency.

Among others who addressed the conference were Mr Pratap Chandra Chunder, former Union Education Minister and Janata leader, Mr Santosh Rana, MLA (CPI-ML) and Mr Asutosh Banerjee (SUCI). Mr Ananda Shankar Ray, noted litterateur, presided.

DELHI RESPONSE TO PAKISTAN PROPOSAL LAUDED

Calcutta THE SUNDAY STATESMAN in English 20 Sep 81 p 8

[Editorial: "Scope for Discussion"]

[Text]

It might be difficult to consider the Pakistani proposal for talks to evolve guarantees for "non-aggression and non-use of force" in isolation from the formidable military plans now being discussed by the U. S. House Foreign Affairs Committee. The Reagan Administration's rationale seems to be that since Pakistan is under direct and constant Soviet pressure. General Zia-ul-Haq needs the $3.2 billion package promised by Washington as well as about 42 F-16 aircraft, to defend his country. Mr James Buckley, the Under-Secretary of State for Security Assistance and now Islamabad's most fervent champion in the West, would not be deflected from pursuing this line of fallacious reasoning even when several Congressmen drew attention to Mr Agha Shahi's repeated affirmations accepting assurances of Moscow's pacific intentions. The anomaly is less easily dismissed in India for it inevitably raises questions about who really is seen as the adversary from Islamabad. In this context, it is pertinent to note that while 15 Pakistani infantry and two armoured divisions are stationed along the Indian frontier, only five divisions (four infantry and one armoured) are deployed on the border with Afghanistan. If Mr Buckley's claim of Pakistani fears of an Indo - Soviet "pincer movement" provides a partial answer, it also implies that the USA is arming General Zia for purposes other than those that are so vigorously stated.

This seeming prevarication is not likely to generate confidence in New Delhi or induce any degree of optimism about agreement. It is curious, for instance, that while U. S. spokesmen justify military aid in terms of the alleged Soviet threat, the Pakistani ambassador to India defends acquisition of sophisticated weapons only on the grounds of India's military capacity. The contradiction does, however, lend some importance to a proposal that was first mooted when Mr Agha Shahi visited India last year, and reiterated when Mr Narasimha Rao was in Pakistan in June. Islamabad's original and wholly unrealistic interest in military parity seems in recent months to have shifted to a mutually agreed reduction of forces leading to the establishment of some kind of ratio. If, for argument's sake, the proposal were to be treated as genuine, it would still have only limited application to the Indo-Pakistani border: India's defence obligations elsewhere, especially along the Himalayas, cannot be included in the purview or in any way be circumscribed by an agreed formula. Nor, as Mr Swaran Singh earlier told Islamabad, can the matter be left to military commanders who can at best discuss conditions on the ground within strictly defined sectors. Any overall decision can only be taken at the highest political level.

Nevertheless, New Delhi has done well not to reject the offer out of hand as had seemed likely from Mrs Gandhi's earlier reference to the "trap" of a lower level military balance. While scepticism is perfectly understandable, any approach that holds out even the remote prospect of reducing tension deserves thoroughly to be examined. Even if it leads nowhere, New Delhi's positive response might help to scotch the bogey of Indo-Soviet collusion. A negative Indian attitude can at this time only strengthen General Zia's case, for he must find strident American expositions of his peril at Soviet hands somewhat embarrassing when he is also trying to repair relations with Moscow. Indian inflexibility would provide him with just the excuse that he might be looking for to obtain sophisticated arms without offending the Soviet Union, a point that cannot be lost on the External Affairs Ministry's parliamentary consultative committee.

STAND ON PAKISTAN COMMONWEALTH REENTRY SUPPORTED

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 19 Sep 81 p 9

[Text]

India's stand on the controversial question of Pakistan's re-admission to the Commonwealth has found broad support from Commonwealth Secretary General, Siddarth Ramphal, reports PTI.

Mr Ramphal feels that the concurrence of all members countries of the 44-nation Commonwealth was involved in such an issue. India is also of the view that such questions had to be decided on the basis of unanimity as stated by Prime Minister Indira Gandhi, in a press interview two days ago.

Any dramatic developments regarding Pakistan's re-entry into the Commonwealth at the Melbourne summit later this month have been ruled out by Mr Ramphal in a recent meeting with diplomatic and Commonwealth writers in London.

The issue of re-admission of Pakistan is not on the agenda for the Melbourne summit which begins on 30 September, Mr Ramphal said.

The Commonwealth Secretary General expressed himself 'against projecting the question in 'high relief.' It is not really helpful to project this matter in high relief and certainly not in an east-west context,' he said.

According to Mr Ramphal, the formal position is that no approach of any kind had been made to the Commonwealth Secretariat. However, he was aware that the issue had been the subject of some bilateral contacts.

Mr Ramphal expressed the view that Pakistan's re-admission is the kind of matter that 'most appropriately evolves in quiet conversation.' Melbourne could provide the opportunity of that kind, he said.

He told the questioner that any process of consultation did not imply 'automaticity.' The concurrence of all member countries was involved.

The Secretary-General also spoke of the important convention that requests for membership should broadly reflect the 'wish of body politic.'

'Since this is the first time such a matter will be arising, I expect that the Commonwealth leadership would want to consider wider questions of policy and procedure before dealing with any particular case While Melbourne, therefore, could see a beginning along these lines, I would not expect it to take the process all the way,' Mr Ramphal added.

BENGAL ASSEMBLY ASKS JUTE INDUSTRY NATIONALIZATION

Calcutta THE STATESMAN in English 19 Sep 81 pp 1, 9

[Text] The West Bengal Assembly passed a resolution on Friday, demanding nationalization of the jute industry, Mr Kamal Guha, Agriculture Minister, said nationalization of the industry alone could save jute growers. Mr Bhola Nath Sen, leader of the Congress(I) legislature party, however, opposed the resolution.

The nationalization of the jute mills was demanded in an amendment moved by Mr Ashok Bose, Chief Whip of the Left Front legislature group, to a resolution moved by Mr Kamal Sarkar (CPM) and six others.

Mr Guha alleged that the jute mill owners had virtually declared a war on jute growers and workers in the jute industry by refusing to purchase raw jute. They had made the "dangerous" propositions that both the cultivation of jute and production at the mill be cut down, he added.

The Minister alleged that the mill owners were trying to precipitate a situation in which they could close down units and avoid paying bonus to the workers. The mill owners had stopped buying raw jute from the growers because they would have to pay the rates fixed by the Jute Corporation of India at Rs 182 a quintal if they bought the produce now. They were biding their time to buy raw jute at much lower rates when the growers took to distress sale.

Mr Guha referred to a meeting of the representatives of the Indian Jute Mill Association with the Chief Minister, where the IJMA men pleaded inability to buy raw jute unless they were provided with bank loans. But the mill owners had not bought the produce with Rs 84 crores they had received 14 weeks ago from the Reserve Bank of India for purchasing jute. During the meeting with the Chief Minister, Mr Guha said, the IJMA representatives had said the mills bought raw jute for six weeks with the RBI loan and that the rest of the money was spent on production.

While describing this as unfair on the part of the industry, the Minister said that Mr Jyoti Basu had told the IJMA delegation "firmly" that they must buy raw jute from the growers. He criticized the Centre for failing to persuade the JCI and the industry to buy more jute from the growers. But the jute growers would not accept the situation. Mr Guha warned that if a law and order problem was created because of the jute industry's "raw deal" to the growers, the Centre would have to take the responsibility.

According to the Minister, jute crop in the State this year had amounted to about 3.9 million bales. The JCI had agreed to buy about 1.3 million bales. Usually, the mills purchased the remaining crop. But this year a "disastrous" situation had been created by the mills' refusal to buy raw jute from the market.

Demand

Earlier, moving the main resolution, Mr Kamal Sarkar complained that the present system of purchase of raw jute and the current jute price were detrimental to the growers' interest. He demanded that the Centre buy the entire crop and immediately stop the purchase of the produce by private agencies. He wanted the Centre to arrange the purchase in consultation with the State Government and the panchayats be involved in opening purchase centres and issuing identity cards to jute growers.

Mr Sarkar demanded that the crop be priced at Rs 300 a quintal and that the purchase be ensured early in the season. He wanted the Centre to allow the State Government to set up its own jute corporation and provide funds to it.

While supporting Mr Sarkar's resolution, Mr Bhola Nath Sen opposed Mr Ashok Bose's amendment demanding nationalization of the jute industry. He said that nationalization would not solve the problem of the farmers. He criticized the State Government for failing to complete arrangements for the purchase by the JCI. According to him, cards were not distributed to bona fide growers when the JCI went to market. He alleged that the panchayats which were entrusted with the task of distributing identity cards were patronizing middlemen. Godowns were not provided to the JCI. Referring to the incident in West Dinajpore a few days ago, in which two jute farmers were killed in police firing, Mr Sen said that the killings would not have occurred if the State Government completed the preliminaries.

The Agriculture Minister maintained 12,00,000 identity cards had been distributed to growers. He said that he had earlier told the House that the distribution of the cards would take two to three years. He claimed that the State Government had done its best to provide storing facilities to the JCI. Different Government buildings and schools had often been used for the purpose. A meeting had been convened by the Land Reforms Minister on September 21 to discuss further measures in this respect. He informed Mr Sen that the Land Reforms Department, and not the panchayats, distributed the cards. He also denied Mr Sen's allegation that the panchayats were patronizing middlemen.

In fact, the Left Front Government's purchase policy had so antagonized the middlemen that they had formed an association and made representations against the policy.

Mr Deba Prasad Sarkar (SUCI) moved another amendment to the main resolution, demanding that the State Government make its own arrangements to buy the produce from the growers if the Centre did not act in accordance with the resolution. Referring to his amendment, Mr Guha said that the mill owners ignored the JCI, a Central organization, despite the fact that they had to depend on the Centre on many counts. One could easily imagine that mills would take a worse stand towards the State agency, he said and asked: "Who would then buy the crop?"

The House rejected Mr Sarkar's amendment by a division.

SCHEDULED CASTES PANEL REPORTS ON TAMIL NADU TOUR

Calcutta THE STATESMAN in English 21 Sep 81 p 9

[Text]

NEW DELHI, Sept. 20.—The Tamil Nadu Government has told Parliament's Committee on Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes that although conversions had been taking place in the State since 1944, the present mass conversions of Harijans to Islam "were very serious", and were "being done in an organized way".

The committee mentions this in its report of a study tour of Tamil Nadu in August. The report was tabled in both Houses of Parliament on Friday.

"It had been found by the State Government that after conversion, the converts were under continuous follow-up action for the purpose of religious initiation and were drawn into the religious network systematically", the report said.

The committee was also told that the conversions were of "great concern to the State Government" and the latter was "trying to find out what and where things had gone wrong".

The State Government's Home secretary, who was among the senior officials the committee spoke to, said that Meenakshipuram in Tirunelveli district, which was the principal scene of recent conversions, was situated among three Muslim villages and was, therefore, having considerable impact.

Harijans of that village, according to the official, had been working in the homes of Muslims for a long time, were conversant with their customs, "and their minds were ready for conversion". The State Government had also received information that people from outside the State were visiting the area and encouraging Harijans to embrace Islam.

The committee, which visited Meenakshipuram on August 11, was told, according to the report, that "atrocities committed by the police on the Harijans of Meenakshipuram hastened the process of conversion from Harijans to Muslims".

In a graphic description of the process of conversion, gleaned by the committee from the leaders of the Harijan community in the village, the report says: "It was stated that about 300 families of Meenakshipuram had embraced Islam so far. On March 19, Muslims of the area and certain Muslims who had come from outside had arranged a feast and invited the Harijans. Those Harijans who did not want to go were dragged to that feast. The conversions followed the feast on that day. Prior to that a local MLA belonging to the Muslim League and a member of Parliament belonging to the same party were seen visiting the village. They generally came after 10 p.m. and remained there for some time.

"It was alleged that many well-to-do Muslims were putting pressure on them to get converted. They were being told that if they embraced Islam they would get social equality and respect and they would be able to marry their children into the Muslim families and also their children would be sent abroad for jobs...

"It was also reported that a large number of Muslims from neighbouring districts and from Kerala visited Meenakshipuram regularly and exchanged greetings with the newly converted. The study group saw for themselves on that day (of its visit to the village) that more than 100 Muslim men and women had come from outside and were present there".

DISCRIMINATION

At the committee's meeting with officials in Madras, the Home Secretary pointed out that Harijans were subjected to discrimination in non-Harijan villages, that the use of chappals by them was objected to, and that there were separate barber shops and drinking water facilities for the Harijans. The official told the committee that social change would be the only answer to the problem. "Quite a lot of change had already taken place".

The State Social Welfare Secretary felt the situation was "very complex", that conversions had been going on for a long time, and that despite economic development Harijans had not been given social equality. Also, it was not the poorest among the Scheduled Castes who were converting "but the educated, who had taken advantage of the relaxations and benefits earmarked by the Central and State Governments". They were revolting against social inequality.

"The Harijans also had a feeling that Muslims responded more to their greivances and difficulties than the Hindus. In the State, in certain pockets prejudices were deep-rooted and would take time to go".

The report notes that in response to the committee's query about the role of foreign money in these conversions, the Social Welfare Secretary said that it was difficult to say whether foreign money had been involved. "So far, affected persons had not given any information in that regard. It might be that they felt that it was not in their interest to disclose whether they had received any amount for conversion. However, it was engaging the Government's attention and it would have to be probed".

The committee records that in a subsequent note, the State Government drew the conclusion from the recent conversions that religion had ceased to be a matter of conviction and had become more a matter of convenience.

More importantly, the State Government pointed out that "after the initial euphoria, there was a certain disillusionment already setting in among the new Muslims since they had been given separate places of worship, etc"

WOMEN AT DISADVANTAGE

The State Government note also mentioned that the converted women were at a particular disadvantage "since all the social disabilities suffered by Muslim women were being imposed on these women also, who were, until recently, enjoying freedom of movement, freedom of social mixing and economic wages, all of which had been lost to them".

Details supplied to the committee by the State Government indicated that although conversions had taken place recently in three southern districts of the State, the number converted was the largest in Meenakshipuram (1,000 converted on February 19) and in Kurayur in Madurai South district (400 between February last year and May this year).

Kanday (in Madurai South) with 93 conversions in June; Veerawanur (in Ramanathapuram district) with 56 on May 20; Maravakudi (in the same district) with 48 on May 15; Melamadai (also in the same district) with 46 on May 29, and Ernampatty (in Madurai North district) with 29 in May were also on the list of recent conversions. In six other villages in the same districts there had been conversions, but they numbered less than 10 in each case.

WEST BENGAL EXPECTS RECORD AUTUMN PADDY CROP

Calcutta THE STATESMAN in English 21 Sep 81 pp 1, 9

[Text]

WEST Bengal expects a record production of paddy during this kharif season. Unlike in the Northern States, where the monsoon has reportedly withdrawn early, affecting the vital period of paddy plant's growth, it still persists in West Bengal. The West Bengal farmers have no complaints about the weather, since it had never been so good for many years. Rain has been more or less evenly distributed. As a result, dependence on irrigation has also been marginal.

A conservative estimate of the aman paddy expected is around six million tons, to 6.2 million tons, which, however, was reached earlier in the State. The optimist section of the Agricultural Department of the Government hopes that the production may be as high as 6.5 million tons, specially because the monsoon is still favourable for the formation of "milk" in the paddy grains.

Except for a few pockets in Midnapore and Bankura, crop damage due to flood and drought has been minimum this year. In the drought-prone area of Bankura, specially in Mezia and Gangajalghat, crops were lost in about 100,000 acres, while in another 40,000 acres in Debra and Moina sub-divisions of Midnapore were affected by floods. The destruction even in these areas may not be total because of recent rain in the drought areas of Bankura and transplantation in some areas of Midnapore, where the flood water has drained out.

Another important factor which could have affected production was plant diseases. Experts feared a spread of such diseases this year because of the persisting cloudy weather. Fortunately, that too has been kept low. Sporadic cases were reported from the Sunderbans and Arambag, but the losses were not serious. The only "epidemic" was reported from Egra, where caterpillars destroyed a portion of the crop. However, the total loss will not be over 1% of the crop.

The coming three weeks, agricultural experts say, are crucial for the "pregnancy" of the paddy plant. This is the time when the grains are formed, which require occasional rain and some sunshine. The dry spell over Punjab, Haryana, Rajasthan and Uttar Pradesh for the past six weeks has affected grain formation. Since Nature has been favourable in West Bengal, farmers hope that for the coming three more weeks too, there will be no upset in the weather. Specially because the irrigation system in West Bengal is not as widespread as in Punjab or Rajasthan and only widespread and evenly distributed rain can decide the prospects of the crop. Experts feel that after a favourable season, if rain stops before the crucial three weeks, as it has been the case in the Northern States, growth of paddy can be stunted, affecting as much as 15% of the total crop. Meteorologists do not think that there will be an early withdrawal of monsoon in Bengal and as far as trends go, there should not be anything to hamper the record target expected this year.

Last year, agricultural experts were alarmed when they found that jute cultivation was eating into aman cultivation land. Jute was cultivated in 610,000 hectares, which was much higher than the "ideal" of 475,000 hectares. This year, however, jute cultivation has been brought down to 500,000 hectares and thus, increased the acreage under paddy. Moreover, aman paddy was sown in some areas after an early jute harvest. This was specially so in north Bengal, where about 20% of jute land was used for sowing aman paddy this year.

The total area under aman cultivation in West Bengal is about 10 million acres. It is difficult to increase the area further and the Agricultural Department is trying to increase the yield of paddy to persuade the farmers not to allow the land lie fallow after jute production. The attempt at multi-cropping suffered a setback as the price of fertilizers was raised twice early this year, raising the price over 50%. The consumption rate of chemical fertilizers, which was steadily growing by about 30% every year, dropped to about 15% this year after the price rise. The State Government's subsidy on nitrogenous fertilizers, however, increased the consumption to some extent. In spite of the fertilizer limitations, about 40% of the area of cultivatable land, according to the Agricultural Department, has been used for double cropping.

COMMENTATOR DEPLORES 'DISARRAY' IN MILITARY

[Commentary by Romesh Thapar: "State of the Military: Time To Sit Up and Take Notice"]

[Text]

THE other day, I had occasion to visit a major military hospital. The hedges were trimmed. The lawns had been swept clean. The familiar little white bricks lined the roadways and pathways. The vast complex of buildings was well-maintained. There were no crowds—and no noise. Oh, if only we could bring this kind of "culture" to the crowded space of our sub-continent.

By the time I had entered the wards, and spoken to a few of the patients, all the glamour of the outward facade had dissolved. The cockroaches were crawling. Air-conditioners and air-coolers were out of order. The rooms were dingy and unkempt. The curtains had not been washed for a long, long time. And the bathrooms had that familiar smell we associate with underdevelopment.

It cannot be, I thought to myself. But it was. The nursing set-up, claiming to be "understaffed", did not seem to have any system by which it worked. Patients had often to hunt for the nurses to get their medicines. The food was terrible. Casual visits by doctors. No rigorous inspection. The hospital had become like so many in the country, but without the reasons we usually ascribe to the sharp decline in efficiency and standards.

The technical apparatus was in a similar state of free-wheeling. Despite good equipment, X-ray pictures were of poor standard. The most complicated tests, some described as "nuclear", were being conducted by junior assistants unlikely to understand what was expected of them. Small wonder that even the Intensive Care Unit, supposedly the most sensitive in a hospital, had been "invaded" by influential family members of patients.

I came away deeply demoralised, and began to wonder whether the infections which are destroying us have taken hold of the aloof military establishment which is so carefully looked after and nurtured by the ruling elite. The demoralization increased when senior military officers, who should know better, advised caution in criticism and pretended that maybe it was wrong to generalise. Yes, these too were the lazy civilian responses to an unhealthy situation.

If hospitals are becoming neglectful, a quiet look around at the disabled of previous wars on our borders will show that no one cares about them except voluntary bodies which are shocked by our casual attitude and the way we treat our soldiers as faceless creatures. If the impression gathers, as it is bound to, that no one cares about the disabled any more, there will be reluctance to risk one's life in battle. Make no mistake about it: morale is made up of many tiny elements of consciousness and a variety of sensitivities. It is the most elusive factor in our somewhat selfish society.

SECRET STRIFE

Obviously, something is wrong. Apart from the defence sector which must embody all the sicknesses of the public sector, and arms dealing by senior retired officers running into hundreds of crores, strange reports are coming out of the ordinance storage depots. At several centres, soldiers and NCOs have been involved in some kind of gang war, the details of which are being withheld without proper reason. There have been equally strange stories about men in our border formations spying for Pakistan, and the harassment of their families. And, to top it off, the officer corps is now resorting to the courts to fight promotions and demotions and suspensions, which points to confusion in selection systems. No probing is being done. All is secret.

I recall how some time ago I was startled to discover that now it is very difficult to be recruited into the defence services unless money is paid to the recruiting apparatus. The going rate a few years ago was Rs 2,000. It has doubled since then, I am told. What is interesting is that this state of affairs is well-known to the military staff, but no Chief has been able so far to break this dangerous corruption at the grassroots. May be, even the effort has not been made.

The seniormost echelons are not free of sloth and dilly-dallying. For example, it is well-known that the famous Jaguar file passed through the hands of three Air Chiefs. As one finally made up his mind, it was time for his retirement. And so the dismal story was repeated three times. Meanwhile the cost had soared, a story that is repeated at every level in the economic ministries of the Government. Despite all this very expensive cogitation, we are now busy telling the country that the Jaguar is not really the aircraft we want. The F-16s, promised to Pakistan, are too good. So, we are back to considering the Mirage 2000, and the Tornado which is the successor to the Jaguar. What happens when the F-17s and F-18s are released for the junior partners of the USA?

REGIONAL FEARS

These stray thoughts on the state of the military need recording because we are confronted with a very grave destabilization in the region. The decision of President Reagan to build Pakistan into an Israeli-type front-line state, ostensibly against the Soviet Union, does not and cannot change the thinking of Islamabad's military clique which has only one enemy—India. The entire argument about confronting the Soviet Union is not taken seriously by the Pakistani generals.

As for the proposition of moulding themselves into a tough, efficient Israeli-type state, that is a rather far-fetched idea for Pakistan's military rulers, even if they were to romanticize their role for their unhappy people. For them, India will remain the enemy, and it is in our direction that the U.S. military aid will be used—unless, of course, we are able, through intelligent political management, to dissolve the tangles between us and around our borders.

In all our military confrontations, preparedness and the efficient utilization of available armament have been decisive factors. The collisions with Pakistan have invariably emphasized that theoretical superiority in armament must be matched by the capacity to activate it. The destruction of the Patton tank myth and the virtuosity of our own Gnat fighter are living examples to refute those who spend their time merely matching armament strength. Even the collapse in 1962 against China in NEFA, when we were literally unprepared, was not due to the prowess of our northern neighbour but to the failure of tactical generalship at the front. It is an event that needs more intelligent understanding even at the professional level, or else it is likely to distort and unbalance rational thinking.

Its preparedness — and I now use the term to cover the entire military canvas—is the critical factor, we need to shake the military machine out of any lethargies that may have accumulated over these recent years of political and economic drift. Courage and bravery in modern war are not enough. A highly sophisticated machine operates behind the lines. If the administration and coordination here is wanting or defective, it can write finis to any brilliant operation.

With the entry into South Asia of a USA controlled by men obsessed with rather simplistic notions about how the USSR is to be isolated, it is vital that the Indian Army, Air Force and Navy begin to sharpen their systems to overcome any deficiency in equipment. This is doubly important for a poor nation. We are at present talking about F-16s and their allegedly incredible power. Soon, other exotic pieces of armament will be under debate. This is inevitable when arms build-ups become fashionable, but it would be disastrous if we forgot the nuts and bolts of the military system.

I do not believe for one moment that the defence services in India are insulated from the general national environment which is not very healthy. In the drive for more and more matching armaments, and the inevitable physical expansion of the defence services in which all members of the officer corps are intensely interested, there is every likelihood of the military administration suffering increasingly from the palsies and paralyses which have hit the civilian fabric of society. We are inclined to be very short-sighted about this—and particularly in military circles.

Over these years of freedom, the military establishment has undergone profound changes. Unlike the situation prevailing at the time of the British, when recruitment was based firmly on carefully nurtured "martial classes" and officers were drawn from non-political or "loyal" families, today open competition is the entry point of the officer corps and recruitment is spread over the entire sub-continent. The military establishment is still uninvolved, always reluctant when called upon to interfere in civilian strife, but it is political in the sense that it reflects the moods and passions of the wider classes and castes from which it is drawn. The secure, politically manageable base of recruitment is no more.

If we have not understood this change, we are oblivious too of the need to intensify motivations and commitments among cadres who possess no martial traditions and look upon a military career as only another job where jobs are scarce. Demobbing and retirement systems in our fantastically expanded military establishment need careful study so that we are ensured of the finest fighting men who at a critical moment are prepared to die fighting. Selectivity should not be evaded. This sounds like a cliché, but flabbiness in promotions is a challenge. It is like a vicious weed. If neglected, it overwhelms.

SHADY BARGAINS

Political interference at various levels sharpens these problems. Fortunately, it has so far been possible to minimize the impact on the military establishment. However, it would be short-sighted to imagine that it is not touched by widely publicized "scandals" around the Jaguar deal, the Centurion tank sales and transfers, the wobbly decisions over Swedish and German submarines, and the decision to abandon the Harrier aircraft, to mention a few. The military cannot but be upset and demoralized by armament purchases which are subject to secret bargaining by unprincipled political fixers. Their lives depend on these purchases.

The whole framework of probity, discipline and accountability is being shot through. We cannot leave these matters to secret assessment. India's military budget was around Rs 1,300 crores when the problem of Bangladesh surfaced in 1971. Now it is more than double—some Rs 3,500 crores. And the projection is for another Rs 1,000 crores. If as civilians we are angry over what little we know of these goings-on, can the military be less incensed? After all, feeding these angers are all the other disgruntlements which are part and parcel of life in India today.

And that's the most disturbing fact of all. If the military establishment reflects the disarray—and breakdown—all around, is it possible to carry out a correction without attending to our "total" condition? The sooner we face this fact the better.

WRITER GIVES BACKGROUND TO NEW SALEM STEEL PLANT

[Article by S. Parthasarathy: "Salem Steel Plant: Waiting for the Second Lap"]

[Text]

TO Josiah Heath, a sagacious Englishmen who lived in the early years of the 19th century, belongs the credit of first manufacturing steel in South India. He dreamt of an iron smelter at the foothills of Kanjamalai, a hill overlooking Salem and pregnant with iron ore.

The pioneering efforts of Josiah Marshall Heath, a member of the Indian Civil Service, saw the setting up in 1826 of a smelter worked with oxen and fired by charcoal. This iron was exported and used in the construction of Menai Straits suspension bridge. His first iron works was in Porto Novo in South Arcot followed by similar works in Pullampetti in Salem and Tiruvannamalai in North Arcot.

These gallant efforts could not, however, gather momentum, faced as they were with financial difficulties unfavourable climate, non-availability of fuel, etc. Operations ceased in Pullampetti in 1858, in Porto Novo in 1866 and in Tiruvannamalai in 1867.

A century and a half later Heath's dream has taken shape, though not in its plenitude, with the first stage of the integrated Salem Steel project (officials still maintain it is an "integrated plant") going on stream and commercial production starting on Sunday.

The first step was taken way back in 1970; the inauguration of work on an integrated flat rolled stainless steel plant at the project site by the Prime Minister Mrs. Indira Gandhi. But this actually did not mean anything. No funds were provided for several years to go ahead with the construction.

In fact, the project staff, engineers and others, left for better pastures elsewhere after being in Salem for a couple of years; they doubted the sincerity of the Government in going ahead with the project in the form announced. The notable exception was Mr. V. Subramaniam, former Managing Director of the Salem Steel Company, who was fretting and fuming with no work to do at Salem.

It was in 1977, seven years after the formal inauguration of work, that the project was resuscitated and funds were provided under the first stage of a Detailed Project Report, prepared by Desturs, to create facilities to produce annually 32,000 tonnes of cold-rolled stainless steel sheets and strips. It is this stage that has come to fruition now exactly on the target date with not much cost over-run, a rare distinction for public sector projects.

There is an interesting background to the efforts to set up a modern steel plant in Salem where iron/steel was produced for the first time in India over 150 years ago. After Independence, the Tamil Nadu Government initiated several proposals for an integrated steel plant in Salem making use of the local iron ore. These included one based on Kanjamalai ores and Neyveli lignite. Desturs were associated with most of these proposals and they prepared DPRs for a 0.5 million tonnes of mild steel plant. The Japan Consulting Technical Institute confirmed the technical feasibility and commercial attractiveness of the proposal.

The input for the cold-rolled complex will initially be purchased hot bands. Facilities for iron and steel making, hot rolling and cold rolling are to be added as per the DPR in the second stage to produce 220,000 tonnes of finished steels and strips comprising 70,000 tonnes of stainless steels, 75,000 tonnes of electrical steels and 75,000 tonnes of other special and mild steels. While the whole plant is estimated to cost around Rs. 700 crores, the first stage has up to now cost about Rs. 145 crores.

Stainless steel as an industrial raw material is widely used in the manufacture of equipment for chemicals, pharmaceuticals, fertilizers, dairy, atomic energy, space research, automotive vehicles etc. Its demand as seen from consumption figures is of the order of 45,000 tonnes per annum. This must be only the tip of the iceberg. Limited availability and high domestic prices as compared to international prices have kept the demand low.

The temple of modern India should make shortage of stainless steel in the domestic market a thing of the past. The profitability of the company will be affected by the steep rise in the customs duty on the imported hot bands (it is now 320 per cent) operating over and above the countervailing duty and transport costs, according the company's chief executive Mr. A. A. Raju. The company's selling prices which take account of these, may not be economic particularly when imports of finished cold-rolled products are also allowed. The company has represented to the Government calling for doing away with or at least considerably reducing the levy, besides stopping imports.

With such a large investment of Rs. 145 crores and with direct employment remaining as low as 1000, the only hope for its becoming the focal point for the industrial development of this region, depends on application industries which unfortunately are not emerging in the neighbourhood or in the State. Observers are afraid that it may remain just a rolling mill with no multiplying effect for growth.

The project is getting wound up with its completion on schedule. What next is the question that bothers observers. The Union Government still maintains that this is only the first lap of the journey. Is the journey going to be long? When is the second lap beginning? Salem, in their view, should blossom into a giant integrated special steels plant as originally sanctioned. Only then will the dream of a steel plant for Salem come true. Will that happen, ask these observers.

The Salem plant was assured of a second Sendzimir mill and last year even a token provision was made for preliminary work. Because of the availability of infrastructure, it is expected to cost not more than Rs. 10 crores. Observers however, learn that thanks to the pressure from the Alloy Steel Plant (ASP), Durgapur, the second Sendzimir mill was not included in the Sixth Plan. ASP is trying to have certain extra facilities now itself so that after a couple of years it can stake a claim for the second Sendzimir mill in the country. That would mean the Salem plant would have to live with just one Sendzimir mill with annual production of 32,000 tonnes of stainless steel.

Though Mrs Gandhi's Government had taken a policy decision to set up an integrated steel plant at Salem and the same was approved by the Cabinet, during the Janata regime, the Steel Minister, Mr. Biju Patnaik, by a mere order, completely changed the concept of the integrated plant for Salem. Observers say he did it to accommodate the ASP lobby as well as to provide at Paradeep in his home-State a port-based plant. They regard this as a serious matter.

In view of the limited scope for expansion of the Salem Steel Plant, it is necessary to think in terms of horizontal expansion, under which semi-finished steel could be hot-rolled etc. in Salem to meet the demands of the Southern States. Market considerations should justify this, it is pointed out.

There is a hint that Dasturs are being asked to examine the future direction in which the Salem plant could be developed further. Power cannot be cited as a restraining factor with the Mettur thermal station coming up. For the functioning of an integrated plant, about a 100 MW power generation capacity would be needed while for the first stage, just commissioned, the power requirement would be around 30 MW when production reaches full capacity.

COMMENTATOR SPECULATES ON IMF LOAN TERMS

Madras THE HINDU in English 13 Sep 81 p 2

[Text] Does the Government of India have any right to borrow from International institutions like the International Monetary Fund without first placing before Parliament all the facts relating to the loans and the conditions it proposes to accept?

Mr P. Ramamurthy (CPI-M) who raised this constitutional question in the Rajya Sabha during the half-hour discussion last week, took the view that under Article 292 of the Constitution, the Government does not have this right.

Article 292 says: "The executive power of the Union extends to borrowing upon the security of the Consolidated Fund of India within such limits, if any, as may from time to time be fixed by Parliament by law and to the giving of guarantees within such limits, if any, as may be so fixed."

Mr Ramamurthy's interpretation of the Article was that so long as Parliament does not enact a law fixing a particular limit, the Government of India has no right whatsoever to go on borrowing. "Otherwise," he said, "there is no need for this law, there is no need for this constitutional provision that casts a responsibility on Parliament to fix a limit for borrowing purposes." He charged the Government of India with by-passing this constitutional provision.

Mr Ramamurthy cited the examples of both Britain and Italy which also had raised massive loans from IMF in the past. "Even before they (the loans) were finalised these conditions (relating to the loans) were placed before Parliament and Parliament's approval was sought" by the United Kingdom and Italy. He charged the Government of India with trying to make a fait accompli before coming to Parliament.

Mr R. Venkataraman, Union Finance Minister, did not agree with Ramamurthy's interpretation of Article 292 and asserted that it did not cast such an obligation on the Government "It is the other way about," he said. The Government's right to borrow was unfettered by this constitutional provision as long as Parliament does not impose any limit on such borrowing.

Mr A. G. Kulkarni (Cong-S) who also participated in the discussion on the IMF loan and referred to Article 292, however, appeared to accept the position as explained by the Finance Minister, but regretted the "utter negligence on the part of the Government" in not having taken Parliament into confidence.

Since the "loaning and guaranteeing operations of the Government are beyond the purview of Parliament," Mr Kulkarni said, "it is high time that he (the Finance Minister) brings forward such a legislation so that these operations of the Government of India come under the purview of Parliament." The Finance Minister said that he would take note of this point of view which has been made several times before.

The country will have to wait to know the conditions relating to the IMF loan until the Finance Minister, as he has promised, places them before Parliament after the completion of the negotiations.

Among the "key documents" mentioned in this connection is a "letter of intent" from the Finance Minister to IMF laying down his acceptance of the "arithmetically formulated performance clauses." One may be certain that the contents of this "key document" will be a well-guarded secret unless the Finance Minister places them also before Parliament.

It appears that the "letter of intent" to be signed either by the Finance Minister of the Governor of the Central Bank of the borrowing country will have an "annexed memorandum" "requesting an extended arrangement from the IMF."

The Finance Minister of the borrowing country making a "request" for assistance from the Extended Financing Facilities of the IMF, has to set forth in his letter (a) the objectives and policies that the authorities intend to pursue for the period of this extended arrangement, (b) the policies and measures that the authorities intend to pursue for the first year of this extended arrangement, (c) understanding with the IMF regarding reviews that will be made of progress in realising the objectives of the programme and of the policies and measures that the authorities will pursue for the second and third years of this extended arrangement.

The "arithmetically formulated performance clauses" mentioned in the Washington report are presumably the following:

The borrowing country will not make purchases under this extended arrangement throughout the first year during any period in which the data at the end of the preceding period indicate that (1) the limit on domestic credit or (ii) the limit on credit to the public sector..."are not observed."

This conditionality would apply if the borrowing country "fails to observe the limits on authorisations of new public and publicly guaranteed foreign indebtedness" or if "throughout the second and third years, if before the beginning of the second year and the beginning of the third year of the extended arrangement, suitable performance clauses have not been established in consultation with the IMF as contemplated" in the attached letter.

The final paragraph says that in accordance with the attached letter, the borrowing country will consult IMF on the adoption of any measures that may be appropriate at the initiative of the Government or whenever the managing director requests consultation because any criterion has not been observed or because he considers the consultation on the programme is desirable.

In addition after the period of the extended arrangement, and while the borrowing country has outstanding purchases under this extended arrangement, the Government will consult with IMF from time to time at the initiative of the Government or at the request of the managing director concerning the borrowing country's balance of payments policies.

All these should leave nobody in any doubt that IMF is not only asking very hard questions but also insisting on getting the right answers before it could be persuaded to part with any cash.

AGENCIES REPORTED TO MISUSE FOREIGN FUNDS

Madras THE HINDU in English 17 Sep 81 p 9

[Text] New Delhi, Sept 16--The Government said in the Lok Sabha today that the Gandhi Peace Foundation and AVARD (Association of Voluntary Agencies for Rural Development) were "misusing" foreign funds by engaging themselves in "political" activities.

Mr Yogendra Makwana, Minister of State for Home, also announced that the Government had under consideration amendments to the law regulating foreign contributions.

His senior colleague, Mr Zail Singh, promised that the commission being set up by the Government to inquire into complaints against the Gandhi Foundation and AVARD would be "dispassionate."

Answering a spate of questions, the Ministers made it clear there would be no assumption against any foreign country. "We feel they have given the assistance only for the welfare of the people."

The proposed commission would see whether the foreign funds were being used "in the right manner or not."

Mr Eduardo Faleiro (Cong-I), who had tabled the question, demanded an inquiry into "receipt of funds by CFD (Citizens for Democracy)," while Mr Madhu Dandavate (Janata) asked whether the Asia Foundation (now banned) had provided grants to the Nehru Museum and Library of which "our present Prime Minister, Mrs Indira Gandhi is the president" and to the Indian Law Institute of which Krishna Menon used to be the president.

At this stage, Mrs Gandhi was seen making a comment, but what she said was not audible in the press gallery.

Denial: Mr Makwana denied a suggestion by Mr Dandavate that the inquiry was being ordered just because Jayaprakash Narayan's name was associated with those organisations.

There were allegations against the Gandhi Foundation and AVARD and that was why the Lok Sabha adopted a resolution calling for a commission of inquiry against them, he explained.

Intervening, Mr Zail Singh regretted that in the name of Gandhiji so many things were happening.

Asked by Mr Bhikhu Ram Jain whether Mr Morarji Desai had returned the funds when informed that the Asia Foundation, the donor organisation, "belonged to CIA," Mr Makwana denied knowledge of it.

Ban not lifted: Mr Indrajit Gupta (CPI) suggested that the remarks of the Minister--that the recipient organisations were engaged in political activities--meant "a prima facie case" against them. Under what circumstances the ban on the Asia Foundation was "removed" later, he asked.

Mr Makwana said the 1968 ban was the result of "some irregularity, misuse of funds and certain activities detrimental to the cause of the country." The ban was not lifted.

About the "political" activities of the Foundation and the AVARD, the Minister said a meeting had been called at which Prof. Raj Krishna, former member of the Planning Commission, was also present and it was decided to revive the People's Union of Civil Liberties as a common forum to bring together the various Opposition parties. At a meeting in Nadiad, a decision was taken "to undertake political activities."

This "is nothing but misuse of money for purposes other than that for which it is received," Mr Makwana asserted.--PTI

IFAD OFFERS FUNDS FOR SUNDERBANS DEVELOPMENT

Calcutta THE STATESMAN in English 18 Sep 81 p 9

[Text] The International Fund for Agricultural Development has come forward to offer financial assistance for the implementation of the five-year integrated development project for the Sunderbans. After the green signal from the World Bank, which had earlier sent a team to India to make a critical appraisal of the project, the Rome-based international organization has agreed to offer one-third of the cost of the project which is about Rs 32 crores.

According to Mr T. B. Lahiri, member-secretary of the Sunderbans Development Board, the assistance is in the form of a soft loan to be repaid in 50 years with a moratorium on repayment for the first 10 years.

The project, which has taken effect from April 1 this year, will cover 62% of the total area in the Sunderbans and will largely benefit small and marginal farmers, landless labourers and poor fishermen. In fact, such a big project has never been taken up in the past for development of one of the most backward regions of the State.

The project aims at transforming the pattern of farming from mono to double cropping. There are 737,967 acres of cultivable land which comes under the plough only in the kharif season. Aman paddy is the traditional crop. Maize, wheat and pulses are also grown and the area also has great potential for the production of sunflowers, chillies, watermelons and cultivation of fish.

Drainage Facilities

Once the project is implemented, about 540,000 bighas will have proper drainage facilities leading to an estimated 50% increase in the yield of aman paddy. 112,500 bighas will come under irrigation in the rabi season; and the acreage under such rabi crops as chillies, watermelons, oilseeds, wheat and vegetables will increase.

Drainage and minor irrigation have been given priority in this labour-intensive and employment-oriented project. Ten major sluices and "river closures" will be constructed in Chhatna, Sukha, Moni, Chilkamari, Gomati and Moukhali rivers. A number of derelict canals and drains will be excavated. Silted tanks will also be dug up.

To promote pisciculture in the Sunderbans, two fish farms will be set up in Jharkhali and Mahisani islands. A provision for about Rs 2 crores has been made in the project for fish breeding in brackish water. It is expected that fish production will go up by another 650 tons a year.

Social forestry to provide fuelwood to the people and fodder to their cattle, has found a place in the project. Trees will be planted on embankments, canal banks, along roads and on the banks of ponds. A provision of Rs 35 lakhs has been made for this purpose.

A number of brick-paved roads running to 280 km, 10 large and 20 small jetties, wooden bridges and other physical infrastructure facilities will be provided to accelerate mobility of both men and material.

The Sunderbans is a composition of scores of islands and is crisscrossed by innumerable rivers, rivulets and water channels. Planners have, therefore, felt the necessity of developing a transportation system which will give a much-needed boost to the economy of the region inhabited by about 2.5 million people.

IMF SOURCES, OTHERS QUOTED ON LOAN SOUGHT BY NATION

[Article by N. Ram]

WASHINGTON, Sept 10

The five billion SDR extended loan to India is expected to come up for approval before the International Monetary Fund's Executive Board in October, following the annual meeting of the World Bank and the IMF.

Highly placed Fund sources confirm in response to enquiries that staff papers relating to the arrangement under the Extended Fund Facility (EFF) have gone to Mr J. De Larosiere, Managing Director and Chairman of the Executive Board of the institution.

"The T's haven't been crossed yet nor the I's dotted", one such IMF source told THE HINDU, adding that in the case of such a major deal the practice was to circulate the documents to Executive Directors and a limited number of City staff members a few weeks before the matter came up formally before the decision-making body.

The key documents are the "Letter of Intent" from the borrowing country's Finance Minister and the arithmetically formulated "performance clauses".

Tough Scrutiny

Mr Larosiere is known to back the arrangement as it has been negotiated. The detailed terms and conditionality are expected to come under tough scrutiny by the more conservative sections of the Executive Board, above all the Reaganites — who are on record demanding that IMF conditionality (which has been, by their sights, deplorably relaxed in recent years) must be made more explicitly rigorous. The Fund's Managing Director now openly supports this approach, underlining the shift to greater rigour in his latest pronouncements.

A survey by the institution's "staff" released in July is quite explicit about two aspects of this point while dealing with the Fund's current role in "the key related areas" of adjustment and financing.

"First", it noted, "the Fund has decided to concentrate its financial support on countries engaged in strong programmes of economic adjustment — that is, programmes that will tailor external deficits to what can be serviced on a sustainable basis out of a growing income... Adjustment has become imperative in many countries and may require more time and may have to include measures addressing structural problems...

Prime difference

"This emphasis on adjustment programmes constitutes the prime difference from earlier practice. In the period following the first wave of oil price increases in 1973-74, approximately two thirds of the resources provided by the Fund to its members were made available on terms involving a low degree of conditionality. At present, by contrast, some three fourths of the Fund's new lending commitments involve upper credit tranche programmes: That is, they require rigorous adjustment policies".

"Secondly", the survey known as 'World Economic Outlook' noted, "the Fund assists member countries in identifying economic problems and in diagnosing policies to correct them. Sound fiscal and monetary policies are always essential...

"There may also be a need for complementary measures designed to enlarge a country's economic capacity and the resources available to it, as well as for more specific measures designed to provide better incentives for production, to remove bottlenecks, or to eliminate existing distortions in cost-price relationships and resource allocations.

"In view of this, the Fund has increased its collaboration with the World Bank in order to ensure that its adjustment programmes are supportive of a member country's investment priorities".

A relative thing

Some Fund officials — sensitive to the controversy in India over the forthcoming loan and especially aware of the strong criticism expressed in Parliament and by a number of independent economists — are currently engaged in "clarification" to the effect that conditionality is a relative thing, depending on the standpoint and indeed on the eye of the beholder.

They are also making the point that whereas, "typically", governments come to the IMF when they are in "deep financial trouble", the Government of India is coming at a time when it is in "a relatively strong position". To what conservative or business appetites in the West, they are throwing in the message that the essential idea is for the Fund to step in where the World Bank has failed — offering India "freedom" (as a front-paged 'New York Times' report puts it) to invest in oil production and other industries".

In fact, an IMF official told the leading American newspaper, the terms of the EFF loan would be highly suited to financing "major outlays for offshore drilling equipment as well as other investments".

The IMF's annual report, to be released on September 13, is expected to reflect a reinforced and more explicit conservatism. The orientation will be spelt out, more clearly than in recent years, on monetary and fiscal policies, foreign borrowing, exchange rate management, import liberalisation and export performance, policies towards foreign investment and domestic savings and investment, de-regulating prices, demand management and social programmes.

The official IMF line today is openly to advocate — for countries undertaking "structural adjustment" — the scrapping or reduction of automatic wage indexation, "excess" demand conditions (whatever that means), price regulations, and other "rigidities" seen as standing in the way of a desirable allocation of resources.

Tutelage

It is precisely this orientation or tutelage that is generating controversy in a number of countries, including India.

Regarding publication of the details of conditionality involved in the extended loan to India, the IMF sources said the fund could not be expected to release any details and it was up to the government involved to reveal less or more.

But the question is: Notwithstanding the Finance Minister, Mr. R. Venkataraman's promise to make the deal "almost a public document", is he going to place in Parliament the text of the "Letter of Intent" and the "performance clauses"?

INDIAN, ROMANIAN CHAMBERS OF COMMERCE MEET

[Text] New Delhi, September 19. The first meeting of the joint working group of the Federation of Indian Chambers of Commerce and Industry and the Romanian trade ministry felt that the current volume and value of bilateral trade could be stepped up sizably.

India could import several items from Romania such as rolled steel products, oil drilling equipment, specialised machine tools, ball bearings, railway equipment, electronic components, fertilisers, chemicals, pharmaceuticals and drugs, and newsprint.

Romania could take from India items like hydraulic pressers, compressors, railway equipment, electrical and electronic components, including wires and fables, measuring instruments, iron ore and pellets, finished leather goods, tyres and tubes, coffee, paper, rice, sugar and Tea. It was stressed that larger purchases of Indian goods and services by Romania would help balance the two-way trade.

Several areas were identified for industrial cooperation between the two countries. For instance, Romania could cooperate in setting up projects in India in fields such as fertilisers, electronic equipment, petro-chemicals, basic drugs, pig iron, iron ore pellets and such other items--some on buy-back basis.

India could join hands in establishing labour-intensive enterprises especially for automobile parts and accessories, electronic components, construction material, certain railway equipment and parts, hand tools and such other items involving labour intensive and less sophisticated technology.

In some of these areas, there was a need to explore the possibilities of exchanging teams of scientific, developmental as well as consultancy personnel.

It was also mentioned that in many of the projects which Romania was presently setting up in Africa, the Middle East and South-East Asia, India, in view of its close proximity, historical links and similarity in socio-economic conditions could become a natural and useful partner. Romanian enterprises could be associated with the projects which Indian entrepreneurs had been undertaking and executing abroad. It was agreed that by working together, both countries could derive better results to their mutual advantage.

KANPUR FERTILIZER UNIT CAPACITY EXPANDED

Madras THE HINDU in English 20 Sep 81 p 6

[Text]

NEW DELHI, Sept. 19.

The Rs. 85-crore expansion project of IEL (Indian Explosives Limited) fertilizer unit in Kanpur was commissioned on September 17, making the unit the largest urea producing plant under commercial operation in the country. The plant's annual installed capacity had been raised to 675,000 tonnes (equivalent to 310,000 tonnes of nitrogen) from 450,000 tonnes.

Announcing this at a press conference here on Friday, the Managing Director of the plant, Dr. S. S. Beijal said the additional production from the third stream now commissioned, would result in reduction of import of urea and saving of $6.59 millions (Rs. 53.10 crores) in foreign exchange.

When in full production, he claimed, the plant would account for ten per cent of total all-India production of nitrogen and would meet one third of Uttar Pradesh's requirements.

The IEL unit was set up in the sixties with a twin-stream plant and the third stream, now added, will have a production capacity of 137,000 tonnes of ammonia and 225,000 tonnes of urea. The expansion project has been completed in 28 months, which is claimed to be the shortest period ever recorded for a project of this kind.

Dr. Beijal said the investment per tonne of urea in the expansion worked out to Rs. 3,500 compared to Rs. 5,500 for the proposed gas-based plants being set up in the country.

Another feature was that for the first time the detailed engineering of a fertilizer project and procurement of hardware had been handled entirely by Indian consultants.

For the expansion project ICI of U.K. had provided the process knowhow for the naphtha reformation section and ammonia synthesis. Toyo Engineering Corporation of Japan provided process knowhow and basic design for the urea plant. The Benfield Corporation of USA provided the process for carbondioxide removal.

He said unstable power supply had led to the plant tripping up and consequently being shut down for two or three days at a stretch resulting in huge production loss. Apart from this, there had been a 25 per cent power cut and there was every likelihood of a further increase in the power cut. Still, he expected the urea production in the current year to be 410,000 tonnes, of which 5,000 tonnes would be from the third stream commissioned on Thursday last.

Net worth definition

Asked about the retention price fixed for the manufacturers, Dr. Beijal said the existing basis for determining the 12 per cent post-tax return on net worth was not attractive. He said the definition of 'net worth' followed by the Government was not the same as commonly understood.

According to Government definition, "net worth" was the total of "net fixed assets" and "working capital". If this was adopted, Dr. Beijal said, in eight or nine years the entire fixed asset would be wiped out due to depreciation and the return would be worked out only on the basis of the working capital which would not amount to much in an industry like fertilizer.

This would not enable the industry to declare at least 15 per cent dividend to shareholders. According to him, the "net worth" should be the total of "equity" and "reserves". He said a representation on these lines would be made to the Government by the industry soon.

RESERVE BANK REPORTED UNHAPPY OVER ECONOMY

Calcutta THE STATESMAN in English 19 Sep 81 p 9

[Text]

NEW DELHI, Sept. 18.—The Reserve Bank of India does not apparently share the confidence about the state of economy expressed by the Prime Minister and the Finance Minister in their recent pronouncements.

The Reserve Bank's annual report for the year July 1980-June 1981, which was approved by the bank's board of directors last month and which is expected to be made public later this month contains forthright, if rather circumspectly expressed, reservations about the price situation, balance of payments, the state of Government finances and even the recovery in industrial production claimed by the Government.

While acknowledging that there has been "a slight slowing down" of the pace of price increase the Reserve Bank's report underscores the fact that the price increase this year "is of a more general nature" than in the last year. This the report regards as "the qualitative difference" in the current price situation.

In 1979-80 (July-June), the sugar group and petroleum crude and mineral oils together accounted for more than 50% of the total increase in the price index. In contrast, in 1980-81 (July-June) there has been a sharp rise in prices of most "primary articles" Even among "manufactured products", if "sugar, gur and khandsari" are left out, the other manufactured products notably iron, steel and ferro-alloys and groundnut oil, have had a more marked influence in 1980-81 together accounting for 10% of the price rise, as against only 1.7% last year.

Very ominous is the Reserve Bank's conclusion that with the price increase assuming a more general or widespread character, containing inflationary forces has become "more difficult", requiring "more general measures by way of management of overall supplies, as well as demand".

STRUCTURAL IMBALANCE

The Reserve Bank is obviously dissatisfied with the management of the Union and State Government's finances especially in the context of its judgment about inflationary pressures becoming more widespread. The bank's report makes no bones about the emergence of "a structural imbalance" in the finances of the Government of India, as seen from the appearance of "deficits even in the revenue account" in the past three years.

Referring to the Union Government's attempts to shore up its finances by increasing recourse to market borrowings, the Reserve Bank points out that it has not been possible for the "narrow market for Government securities" to absorb this "sharp increase" in the quantum of Central Government borrowing, with the result that "the Reserve Bank has had to take on an increasing portion of these loans".

POLITICAL MURDERS 'UNIQUE TO COMMUNIST-RUN STATES'

Calcutta THE STATESMAN in English 21 Sep 81 p 9

[Text]

MR Yogendra Makwana, the Union Minister of State for Home Affairs, said in Calcutta on Sunday that political murders "were unique in the Communist-run States". In other States like Uttar Pradesh and Bihar, there were cases of murders but these had no political overtone.

Talking to reporters, he said that he knew about political murders in West Bengal. Such things were also happening in Kerala and "probably in Tripura". When it was pointed out to him that Mr Jyoti Basu has ascribed these murders to the intra-party clashes in the Congress (I), Mr Makwana said: "I do not agree with the Chief Minister. His allegations are bogus".

The Union Minister alleged that the Communists were intolerant of other political parties and "wanted to finish them off". This attitude of the Communists led to political murders. The law and order problem in Uttar Pradesh and Bihar mainly related to atrocities on the Harijans and communalism. He, however, made it clear that communal disturbances were not an all-India phenomenon. These were confined to particular areas which were prone to such happenings.

Referring to the Jamshedpur riots during the Janata regime, Mr Makwana pointed out that the inquiry commission, in its recent report, has blamed the RSS for the communal disturbances. Asked whether the Government was contemplating to ban the organization, he replied; "We will think over it". All the State Governments had been requested to ban holding of "sakhas" (drills in public) by the RSS followers. A few States, including West Bengal, Kerala and Gujarat, had complied with the Centre's request, he said.

When his attention was drawn to Press reports that the West Bengal Governor had called for confidential character rolls of some senior State Government officials, Mr Makwana said: "I do not know anything about this". If the Governor had done any such thing, he said, it might be that he had some reasons for this.

He had received allegations from various non-Communist parties that there had infiltration in Government services by Communists. Asked whether the Centre was contemplating any change in the bureaucratic set-up in West Bengal, the Union Minister said that it was the State's concern. As for the Central Government offices in the State, he said, the Union Government was "competent to do it".

Mr Makwana, who had met the new Governor, Mr B. D. Pande, on Saturday, said that Mr Pande had told him that he was happy to meet the Chief Minister and his colleagues. Mr Pande was now in Delhi possibly to pay courtesy calls on the President and the Prime Minister. Mr Makwana did not disclose to reporters whether he had had any discussion with the Governor on the current political situation in the State.

INQUIRY COMMISSION REPORT ON BIHAR RIOTS RELEASED

Bombay THE TIMES OF INDIA in English 14 Sep 81 pp 1, 9

[Text] Patna, September 13. The three-member inquiry commission, headed by a judge of the Patna high court, has blamed major administrative lapses, aggressive behaviour of Hindu communalists preceding the disturbances and panicky reaction of the minority community for riots at Jamshedpur on April 19, 1979. Officially, it was said that 108 lives were lost in the riots.

The commission, headed by Mr Jitendra Narain, former judge of the Patna high court, includes Mr P.P. Agrawal, former secretary to the Union government and Mr S.M. Rizvi, former inspector-general of police, Bihar.

The commission submitted its report on August 31. It was released to the press today by the chief minister, Dr Jagannath Mishra.

The report further says: "After giving careful and serious consideration to all materials on records, the commission is of the view that the Rashtriya Swayamsevak Sangh (RSS), with its extensive organisation in Jamshedpur and its close links with the Jana Sangh and the Bharatiya Mazdoor Sangh, had a positive hand in creating a climate which was most propitious for the outbreak of the communal disturbances."

The report says the Hindu communalists, certain of their strength in sheer number, prepared the Hindu psychology, by evocative appeals and actions. "We do not, however, consider that the material on record warrants a conclusion that by such action, the Hindu communalists were planning for a riot. They cannot, however, escape the liability for having created with full awareness the conditions in which a riot could break out."

The commission has also indicted the civil and the police administration of the district, including the commissioner, and found substance in the allegation that the Bihar Military Police (BMP) jawans acted in collusion with the Hindu communalists. The commission has also blamed the then vice-chancellor of Ranchi university for having accorded permission to the RSS to hold its camp and "shakhas" on the campus of the cooperative college, Jamshedpur.

The report says: "There is nothing on record to substantiate the contention that the Muslims were determined to start a riot. However, acting in panic, for which there was sufficient cause, the Muslim minority had planned to the extent of preparing themselves against an attack by the Hindu communalists. The anti-social amongst them turned this preparation into aggressive action."

"On the basis of the facts before the commission, the conclusion is irresistible that some preparation had been made both by the Hindus and the Muslims. After a close look at the evidence on record, pre-planning and preparation for an attack by one community on the other is not discernible. On the part of the Hindus, the pre-planning was to get the Ram Navmi procession taken out through Road No 14 at any cost."

In a damaging indictment of the administration, the commission says on the basis of evidence before it, it is clear that no steps were taken to defuse the situation arising out of the demand by Hindu communalists to take out the procession through Road No 14 through a predominantly Muslim populated area, where a mosque was located right on the roadside. "Had the controversy regarding Road No 14 been resolved earlier, before the tensions mounted, there would have been no riot."

The report says the officers of the district administration headed by the deputy commissioner and the superintendent of police had, in fact taken the stand throughout that there was no communal disharmony before the outbreak of the riot. "Starting with such an approach, it is no wonder that the officers concerned failed to comprehend the depth of feelings that had been aroused over the dispute on the question of the Ram Navmi procession route."

Dealing with the role of the BMP and its alleged collusion with Hindu fanatics, the commission quotes the course of events to prove that it did give rise to the suspicion that, deliberate or otherwise, firiing on the Hindus had no effect. Not a single Hindu could be identified as having been injured or killed as a result of the 108 rounds of firing by the BMP in 22 hours in a Muslim basti.

"This, coupled with the fact that when the Hindu attacking mob had been driven away from the area, nine Muslims were found dead in their own houses, gives some clue and credence to the allegation of connivance."

Dealing with the conduct of the civil and police administration of Jamshedpur during the riots, the commission has pointed to lapses on the part of the then commissioner of Chhotanagpur. The administration failed to rise to the occasion.

"If the anti-social elements had gone into hiding, it was not enough for the police to admit helplessness. And in the deteriorating situation, some determined action was called for stretching all forms of administrative action to the extreme. We hold that the SP failed to provide the proper leadership in this operation and the DC remained 'satisfied' with all that was being done without justification for such compliance."

Analysing the role played by communal organisations, the report says the RSS leader, Mr. Balasaheb Deoras and Mr. Dinanath Pandey, Janata party MLA from Jamshedpur, added fuel to the fire by their activities preceding the outbreak of violence.

Enumerating the sequence of events, the commission says that the holding of the RSS camp and "shakha" on March 31 and April 1, 1979, and the speech made by Mr. Deoras at 4.30 p.m. on April 1, just five days before the Ram Navmi festival were the beginning of the communal frenzy in the steel city.

Mr. Deoras had said at the camp that he was sad that Hindus in their own country were not allowed to take out religious processions freely and that the number of mosques were increasing day by day and in the Arabian countries Hindus were not allowed to construct temples. Mr. Deoras also referred to the controversy regarding Road No. 14 which ultimately became the bone of contention for the Hindu fanatics resulting in large-scale rioting, arson, plunder and firing.

In the opinion of the commission, "the speech by Mr. Deoras, made the stand of the extremists amongst Hindus all the more rigid in respect of their previous stand regarding Road No. 14 and the commission has found that the proximate cause of the disturbances was the controversy regarding Road No. 14."

The report says: "In the first instance, the speech of Mr. Deoras tended to encourage the Hindu extremists to be unyielding to their demands regarding the road. Secondly, his speech amounted to communal propaganda. Thirdly, the "shakhas" and the camps that were held during the divisional conference presented a militant atmosphere to the Hindu public. In the circumstances, the commission cannot but hold the RSS responsible for creating a climate for the disturbance that took place on April 11, 1979, and thereafter."

The commission says Mr. Dinanath Pandey created a situation for the outbreak of riots by stalling the progress of the Ram Navmi "jhanda" procession of the Dima basti "akhara" after he failed to stall the agreement reached earlier that only three MLAs would accompany the flag throughout the disputed zone, others joining the procession later. The "akhara" procession had to pass through the disputed Road No. 14.

When Mr. Pandey saw that his plan had been stalled by the administration, he put forward the demand that one Mr. Trivedi of the "akhara" arrested earlier as a precautionary measure be released forthwith. His associates in the procession took this as a cue and stuck to their position. No amount of persuasion could move them.

Meanwhile, over 2,000 people armed with "lathis", "bhalas" and other weapons joined the procession. The provocation started with the throwing of bricks on the procession and rioting followed.

The commission observes that "Mr. Pandey's action in raising an impossible demand resulting in precious time being lost in the passage of the procession through new Purulia Road was directly responsible for escalating the tense situation. Repudiating Mr. Pandey's denial of his links with the RSS, the commission concludes that "his actions followed a line which was in fulfilment of the general scheme of the Hindu communalists of Jamshedpur. His conduct had thus directly contributed to the outbreak of the riot."

Referring to a leaflet circulated by the Shri Ram Navmi Kendriya Akhara Samiti on April 7, asking their supporters to defy the authorities since they (the samiti) had the backing of the constables, havaldars and homeguards, the commission observes that "a noticeable link did exist between the claim made through the leaflet and the subsequent conduct of the BMP sepoys."

The commission has recommended that meetings and conferences of communal organisations like the RSS and the Jamait-e-Islami should be prohibited in all educational institutions, whether public or private. An officer of the rank of deputy commissioner should be posted at Jamshedpur to co-ordinate the work of both the Dalbhum and Saraikela subdivision, specially in the matter of law and order.

The commission has suggested that communally-sensitive areas like Kasidih, Bhalubasa, Dhatkidih, Shastrinagar, Ramdas Bhatha and Mohammedan line of Sakchi be kept under surveillance and more police stations and outposts should be created immediately.

The commission has deprecated the practice of house allotment by private companies to their employees on communal lines. It noticed that Muslims the Hindus at another. This practice according to the commission, should be discontinued and the quarters allotted on a "non-sectarian basis."

UNI adds: A three-member commission of inquiry has blamed the Rashtriya Swayamsevak Sangh (RSS), the erstwhile Jana Sangh, (now Bharatiya Janata Party) and its labour wing, the Bharatiya Mazdoor Sangh for fomenting the riots at Jamshedpur in April, 1979.

The commission, headed by Mr. Jitendra Narain, a former judge of the Patna high court, said the seeds of communal violence were sown by the RSS chief Mr. Balashaheb Deoras, in his speech during a divisional meeting of the RSS workers in the last week of March, 1979.

WRITER LAUDS REJECTION OF GRIFFIN APPOINTMENT

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 15 Sep 81 p 2

[Article by Mohit Sen: "The Griffin Connection"]

[Text] The Griffin connection is being pushed out of sight. Coincidence or not the fact remains that the attention of the nation has been successfully diverted to the Antulay abomination. Stinking and reeking, the Antulay affair certainly is. To let it pass would have been a crime. But a greater crime is the fade-out of what the Griffin connection amounts to.

It is certainly no coincidence that the very same quarters that went to town on the Pratibha Trust are advising that too much should not be made of what our External Affairs Minister has chosen to term an episode of temporary bitterness between our country and the sponsors of the CIA murder gang leader. But those who care for India and fight for its future must not allow this to happen.

For there was certainly a method behind the madness of the Reagan administration in proposing that the Government accept Griffin as the political counsellor of the US embassy in India. The Left and its press can certainly claim credit for having informed the nation about who Griffin was. This was some time ago. It showed the indispensability of the patriotic concern of the Left.

But Washington knew that the Government of India knew for quite some time who Griffin was. Still it pushed him forward. Its real assault on India was not the retaliation in rejecting Prabhakar Menon but in the brazen insistence on Griffin's acceptance by our Government after all that he was known to have done on and from our soil.

The Government deserves the congratulations of all of us in having called the US bluff and demonstrated that it is not going to be bullied or blackmailed by anybody, no matter how powerful he imagines himself to be. It will give a shot in the arm to the entire Third World which is sought to be bludgeoned and frightened into acceptance of the role of international terrorist that the US has now assumed.

Let us recall that this rejection comes against the background of increased frenzy in the rearming and instigating of Pakistan against us. F-16s to Pakistan and Griffin to India--that was the scenario. Jean Kirkpatrick made this quite clear in New Delhi and in Islamabad. She went a step further in Kathmandu when she asked democrats to pillory India for preferring Soviet dictatorship to American democracy. Some Indian democrats are obliging her, even anticipating her at Atal Behari did on his US visit.

It comes against the background of what a section of the press has called the plan of Pakistan's supercaucus of generals who are planning a sneak attack against India in pursuit of a secret plot hatched by them in collaboration with the CIA and Pentagon. And that is why Buckley is again in Islamabad.

Against this background comes the Griffin connection. He is no ordinary CIA agent dressed up as a diplomat. He is one of the key figures of the CIA disposal squad--disposal of the leaders of the Third World. He has won his spurs in organising the murder of Mujib and the entire leadership of Bangladesh. He has gained fresh laurels in helping the murderous gangs which intervene every day in the internal affairs of sovereign Afghanistan. He is a destabiliser through murder.

The CIA has publicly announced that it is now placing still greater importance on the killing of Third World leaders. The 'accidents' in the air that brought down Torrijos of Panama and leaders of Ecuador and the liquidation of the Iranian leadership after the 'hostages' are back in the US are part of the same strategy that continues to menace the lives of Castro and Qadhdhafi. The murderous removal of all leaders of the army in Bangladesh who fought for its freedom is also a link in the same chain.

Let us not imagine that it could not happen here. The pressure to make our Government accept Griffin was a crude reminder that targets for CIA association are not lacking in our country, unless they are ready to be lackeys. And whatever else the leaders of the Government of India are, they are not the lackeys of US imperialism.

What is disturbing in the unfolding situation is not only that bolting the door to a particular Griffin does not mean that others are not already within the house nor that still others would not get in. It is still more disquieting that there are no signs of any kind of national mobilisation against this latest act of US effrontery. A somewhat tepid discussion in Parliament seems to be all that would happen. The Government evidently wants to play it on a low key so that fences can be mended and, perhaps, the IMP loan secured.

Some of the Opposition, at any rate, are not particularly the opponents of the Griffin line. Some others of the Opposition seem to find it uncomfortable to be on the same side of the barricade as the Government even on the issue of exposure of and opposition to the CIA.

And so the Government and even those of the Opposition whose anti-imperialistic redentials and aspirations are beyond doubt, combine to keep the people of our country virtually immobilised. This is irresponsibility, bordering on the criminal. After all, the country would be safe, to say nothing of its leaders, only when the people are aroused as to who their enemies are and what they are up to.

Surely, the time has come for the shedding of unnatural allergies, at least on issues where there is agreement and which are at the heart of the very existence of the country we have all suffered together to bring into and keep in being. Surely, the time has come for consultations between all those who sense the coming doom if joint initiatives and the most widespread mass mobilisation are not undertaken.

In this connection due note should be taken of the fact that while one 'superpower' announces its plan to plant murderers as its diplomats so that India should cease to count in world affairs, the 'other superpower' takes just the opposite position. It has been reported that on 7 September, President Brezhnev of the Soviet Union mentioned India by name while talking of the active participation of Asian states in world affairs during a speech at a banquet in honour of the visiting top-most leader of the Vietnamese Communist Party, Le Duan, President Brezhnev said 'We welcome the growth of the international influence of India, of the countries of Indo-China, of other Asian states and their active participation in world politics.'

This should answer the mischievous and motivated propaganda that the Soviet leadership has suddenly become very critical of the foreign policy pursued by the Government of Smt Indira Gandhi. It is quite clear that the Soviet leadership not only supports the realistic, anti-imperialist and pro-peace progressive foreign policy of the Government but would do all in its power to promote the growing emergence of India as an influential world power in its own right.

As for vacillations, ambiguities and dangers emanating from external economic relations or internal policies of the Government of India, these are for us, the people of India, to debate, discuss and struggle over. But these should not and cannot blur the progressive character of the foreign policy of Smt Indira Gandhi's Government nor make anyone doubt that it has the support of the Soviet Union.

This should also make the Government and the ruling party leaders realise that the constant talk of 'two superpowers' and at least, verbal equating of the Soviet Union and the USA is not in the national interest. It is always better to speak the truth. Otherwise, the people may get demoralised and even disoriented about the basic reality of where we are in the world of today. The Soviet Union is our friend, is for peace and the freedom and development of all newly independent countries. The US is the polar opposite.

What is more, there are powerful forces in the US which do not go along with the brinkmanship and bullying of Reagan and his gang. Plainspeaking by our Government would help the further assertion of these forces. Balancing, even verbally, would be counterproductive.

And if we are to be helpful to ourselves, to the world and to the opponents of the Reagan course in the US itself, we must not allow the Griffin connection just to vanish.

PRO-KHALISTAN PARTY FOUNDER ARRESTED IN JULLUNDUR

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 15 Sep 81 pp 1, 7

[Text] Chandigarh, Sept 14 (UNI)--Former Punjab Education Minister Sukhjinder Singh was arrested at Jullundur tonight.

According to official sources, Mr Sukhjinder Singh, who recently formed the pro-Khalistan party after breakingaway from the Akali Dal (Longowal) was apprehended for his alleged unlawful activities. The Punjab Government had recently registered a case against him following his various statements, pleading for Khalistan.

Mr Sukhjinder Singh was arrested under Section 13 of the Prevention of Lawlessness Activities Act 1967 and Section 124 (A) of the Indian Penal Code for inciting a revolt.

Soon after his arrest, Mr Sukhjinder Singh was produced before a magistrate who remanded him to judicial custody.

Our Staff Correspondent adds: Sant Jarnail Singh Bhindrawale wanted in Lala Jagat Narain murder case outmarted the Haryana and Punjab police last evening.

As the police secured warrants for the arrest of the Sant from a court at Ludhiana yesterday forenoon a statewide alert was ordered by the police in the two States. The Punjab CID also informed the Haryana authorities that the Sant was at 'Dera' in village Chamoya of district Sirsa.

Accordingly, the two States ordered heavy contingents of the armed police from places as far as Jullundur and Patiala in Punjab and Madhuban in Haryana to rush to the village. As the truckloads of the armed police from the two states reached the village, they threw a heavy ring around the village.

The authorities on the spot and the State headquarters here felt almost cheated when the news finally came around noon today that the Sant had in fact, left the village 'dera' around dusk last evening leaving, the Punjab and Haryana police high and dry.

Amidst reports that the Sant, along with his dozen heavily armed supporters had escaped from village Chamoya and finally reached his 'dera' headquarters at Chowk Mehta in district Amritsar, the director general (police) Birbal Nath and DIG (CID) J.S. Anand left presumably for Amritsar to person ly supervise the operations.

Meanwhile, heavy contingents of police fully armed have thrown a tight ring around Chow Mehta in Amritsar, amidst reports about his possible escape or just dramatic appearance to offer arrest.

Reports from his 'dera' said that the Sant has denied his involvement in any way in the murder of Lala Jagat Narain.

Meanwhile, unconfirmed reports reaching the State headquarters from Sirsa in Haryana said that the heavy police force of Punjab and Haryana deployed around village Chamoya to arrest the Sant and the other two proclaimed offenders exchanged fire.

The reports claimed that it was during a confusion that the Sant escaped to reach his 'dera' headquarters Chowk Mehta.

Reports reaching Chandigarh from Amritsar have quoted the Sant as saying that he 'was prepared for arrest.'

According to these reports, the Sant expressed his 'preparedness to a group of Amritsar newsmen visiting his dera at Chowk Mehta.'

The Union Home Ministry is reported to have expressed unhappiness over the escape of Bhin drawala.

It is also learnt that Union Home Secretary T. N. Chaturvedi, who reviewed the situation with the Chief Ministers of Punjab Haryana and the senior government officials last week, was in touch with them regarding the arrests of the alleged assassins.

ACUTE SHORTAGES AFFECT NORTH INDIA PRODUCTION

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 15 Sep 81 p 8

[Text]

Acute shortage of inputs like coal, iron and steel, cement, furnace oil, diesel and kerosene continues to plague industry in North India UNI reports quoting the quarterly survey of the Punjab, Haryana and Delhi Chamber of Commerce and Industry for April-June, 1981.

In many cases, it shows, the actual shortfall in the supply of inputs was as much as 100 per cent.

The survey covered representative firms producing sanitary-ware and ceramics, distilleries, chemicals and allied products, starch, gluten, oil vanaspati, sugar textile, carpets rubber and engineering products.

According to the survey coal consuming firms received less than 36 per cent of their total requirement of 4,602 wagons, though they had been allotted a quota of 56 per cent amounting to 2540 per cent.

STEEL

In iron and steel an acute scarcity of structural steel has been observed. This impact has been felt on the slow progress in expansion programmes. The scarcity has also compelled entrepreneurs to purchase structural steel from open market at very high prices.

Many units, which have undertaken expansion programmes or want to set up new projects, have been held up due to lack of cement. Even urgent repair works have been stalled due to the shortage.

The furnace oil consuming firms were allotted less than 43 per cent (2812.8 kl) of their actual requirements, out of which some firms received nothing. In certain cases, the availability was mainly restricted due to inefficient management of supply and lack of adequate transportation facilities.

SAMPRADAYIKTA VIRODHI APPEALS FOR CURBS ON RSS

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 15 Sep 81 p 7

[Text]

All-India Sampradayikta Virodhi Committee President Subhadra Joshi has stated that the report of the inquiry commission on the Jamshedpur riots 'should open the eyes of all those parties and groups interested in maintaining communal harmony and preserving the secular character of society.'

In a statement on Monday, Mrs Joshi said the Government should take immediate action to curb the activities and propaganda of the RSS, squarely blamed for the Jamshedpur riots, and other organisations of this nature.

"But the Government action alone is not enough. There is need for a national campaign, in which all secular-minded parties and groups should participate, to educate public opinion about the anti-national and communal character of the RSS. I appeal to all well-wishers of the nation to sink their political differences in order to build up such a campaign, she underscored.

Referring to the RSS chief's observation that the report was 'politically motivated,' she said it was baseless on close examination of facts "The Commission (which had indicted the RSS) was set up by a Government of which the political wing of the RSS was a part. The RSS had been given full opportunity for explaining its conduct. The verdict cannot be honestly dismissed as Mr Balasaheb Deoras has tried to do," she observed.

NEWSPAPER SOCIETY HOLDS MEETING IN BANGALORE

Keynote Speech, Officers Elected

[Text] BANGALORE, Sept 16.

The Indian and Eastern Newspaper Society (IENS) today expressed grave concern over the alarmingly increasing attacks on newspapers and newspapermen and called upon the Government to take adequate steps before these tendencies got out of control.

Presiding over the 42nd annual general meeting of the IENS here, Mr. K. L. Sarkar, Chairman, said the attacks were often inspired and encouraged by politicans in a bid to suppress criticism or make newspapers toe their line.

The IENS, he said, had urged all professional organisations to discuss these grave threats and find solutions to overcome them.

Financial burden

Mr. Sarkar said the Centre's acceptance of the Palekar Tribunal's awards subject to certain modifications, had imposed a heavy financial burden, to the tune of Rs. 40 crores, on the newspaper industry.

The Government struck another "severe blow", he said, by levying 15 per cent customs duty on imported newsprint and simultaneously announcing a hike in its price. This would impose a yearly additional financial burden to the tune of Rs. 50 crores, he said.

To forestall any move on the part of newspaper establishments to lighten their burden of Palekar awards to some extent by retrenching some of the unwanted staff, the President has recently issued an ordinance protecting jobs of part-time journalists, Mr. Sarkar said.

The newspapers would have no option but to further increase their price and advertisement rates. Thus, gradually, newspapers will be beyond the reach of the common man.

The Government's newsprint allocation policy for the current year would further curtail the growth of newspapers, since the lower growth rate had been permitted to the small and medium categories of newspapers.

Newsprint wastage

Referring to wastage of newsprint, Mr. Sarkar said the IENS had already pointed to the Government that the actual wastage of newsprint was not less than 10 per cent and urged it to maintain at least the status-quo in regard to wastage allowance.

Describing the supply of newsprint by the State Trading Corporation (STC) as far from satisfactory, Mr. Sarkar said the IENS had suggested forming a cooperative society like the one in France to handle all operations of buying newsprint for all newspapers and their storing at a no profit basis.

Mr. Sarkar informed the meeting that the Reserve Bank of India had promised to take a realistic view while considering the proposals for increased working capital requirements of newspapers because of the recent hike in newsprint prices and the customs duty levy.

The IENS hoped that the Government would also not go ahead with the proposed amendment to the Press and Registration of Books Act and stand firm by its earlier policy of not fixing any news-advertisement ratio.

The IENS, Mr. Sarkar said, was shocked to understand that Chief Ministers of certain States had reportedly stated that Government advertisements should be stopped to such newspapers which criticised Government policies and not highlighted its achievements.

Such leaders want the newspapers to blindly toe the Government line giving up their independent thinking, he said.

Intolerance was growing against the press with Chief Ministers at different forums describing journalists as scorpions, snakes and prostitutes.

On complaints of invasion of privacy by the press, he said the Press Council was conducting a separate investigation into this.

Mr. Sarkar pointed out that the IENS had argued that it was difficult to formulate workable guidelines. The Society felt it was dangerous to legislate on the subject.

The newspaper industry in the country had started modernising its operations only during the last few years. Mr. Sarkar said. Fresh information was being generated at a fast pace and a nation which did not have the due means to cope adequately with this mushroom growth would become an 'anachronism'.

The IENS, Mr. Sarkar said, had urged the Government to immediately withdraw the levy of customs duty on import of printing machinery and equipment by newspapers to enable them to replace their outdated machinery.

The Press Trust of India (PTI) planned to computerise its news services. This, he felt, would ensure greater accuracy and rapidity in editing, and corrections and greater communication efficiency.

He also lauded the commendable work done by the Press Institute of India and the Research Institute of Newspaper Development for bringing professionalism in editorial, managerial and technological aspects in newspapers.

Office-bearers elected

Mr. Mammen Verghese, of the Malayala Manorama was elected President of the IENS for 1981-82 at the meeting.

Mr. Ramesh Chandra of Dinman and Mr. N. Murali of THE HINDU were elected Deputy President and Vice-President respectively.

Mr. Vishwa Bandhu Gupta of Daily Tej is the Hon. Treasurer. — PTI.

Resolutions, Press Briefing

Madras THE HINDU in English 17 Sep 81 p 10

[Text] Bangalore, Sept 16. The Iran and Eastern Newspaper Society, here, today, took a grave view of the inceasingly large number of crimes committed on newspapers and newspaper organisations in the country.

In a resolution, the IENS said that it had pointed out time and again, particularly, in the last few months, about the grim forebodings of such incidents, without any action being taken.

It advised the Governments at the Centre and in the States that if extremist tendencies were allowed to raise their head further and the voice of dissent muffled by violence, the very edifice of democracy would collapse.

The IENS also adopted a resolution condemning the fatal attack on Lala Jagat Narayan and paid tributes to his services to the country as a freedom fighter and journalist.

At the end of the meeting, briefing reporters, the Deputy President of the IENS, Mr Ramesh Chandra, expressed concern over the impact of the governmental levies on the newspaper industry and feared that because of the resultant escalation in newsprint costs and government levies, the daily newspaper faced the threat of being priced out. He said that since newsprint constituted more than 60 per cent of the total cost of production of a newspaper, the continuous price hike and the subsequent customs duty would mean the difference between survival and failure to hundreds of newspapers in the country.

Mr Ramesh Chandra spoke of the important place of newspapers as purveyors of information, particularly, in a developing country and said that instead of the Government trying to save foreign exchange by making newsprint costlier, it could very well try to build up and improve the indigenous production of newsprint.

Though newsprint projects in Kerala and Karnataka had been started, they had not reached the stage of production as earlier envisaged.

It was also stated that the Mysore Paper Mills, which had been building up a newsprint project, was thinking of pricing its product at Rs 7000 per tonne as against the price of imported newsprint of Rs 4,500 just a year ago, which had of late increased again. He said one would expect that in view of the international situation and the prices going up, the Government could consider some sort of a subsidy system to help the newspapers keep the price of newspapers at reasonable levels.

FORMER MNF 'ADJUTANT GENERAL' REPORTED MISSING

Calcutta THE STATESMAN in English 17 Sep 81 p 12

[Text]

SHILLONG, Sept. 16.—The former "adjutant-general" of the MNF Biakvela, who was in Aizawl on bail from Gauhati jail, has disappeared, according to reliable indications. The self-styled Colonel led a contingent to China and back a few years ago. A dare-devil like the late Kaito Sema of the Naga underground, he led a group of rebels diagonally across northern Mizoram from Manipur to the Chittagong Hill Tracts in the mid-70, —a spectacular dash that took them within a few kilometres of Aizawl itself.

He was subsequently caught by the Burmese and handed over across the Manipur border and thereafter, lodged in Gauhati jail. According to reports, he had an active role in organising the recent student demonstrations in Aizawl. The Mizo Zirlai Pawl, the student body, has now suspended the agitation.

The Sailo Administration has made no secret of its fears that Biakvela and another hawk, "Lt. Col. Lalrawna", were allegedly forming a new cadre of young men for a fresh insurgency. The alleged aim was to indoctrinate about 50 graduates or under graduates and take them across the border for training in weapons.

Secondly, and more important, the plan was to brainwash boys in the 15 to 20 age-group, boys who had no idea of the insurrection, the emotional climate and subsequent human suffering and misery.

DROUGHT ENDANGERS AUTUMN HARVEST IN NORTH

Calcutta THE STATESMAN in English 17 Sep 81 p 11

[Text] New Delhi, Sept 16--The lack of rain in the northern States since the end of July has sharply affected the kharif crop prospects, particularly of rice. It is not expected that the rice production target of 58 million tons will now be reached.

How much the shortfall will be depends on the effectiveness of the emergency measures being taken by the Central and State Governments to save the kharif crop, but it is possible that the production will be from 3-4 million tons short of the target.

This is bound to affect the availability of grain both for buffer stock purposes and also for keeping the public distribution system going. Some exercises have been done on the possibility of making more grain imports.

The first imports of wheat in five years were made when 1.5 million tons were bought in the U.S. market in July. This was then considered the minimum necessary, both as a precaution and as a measure to prevent traders from raising prices.

At that time, after the procurement of approximately 6.3 million tons of wheat--nearly 3 million tons below the target--total grain stocks were around 14 million tons. The needs of the public distribution system must have depleted the stocks further since.

Rice procurement will begin after the harvest in two or three months but the current drought in the north is bound to affect the target. Fortunately, paddy production in the south and other regions of the country is said to be satisfactory. The main States affected are Rajasthan, Haryana, Uttar Pradesh and Madhya Pradesh.

When wheat was bought in the U.S. markets, prices were low since neither Russia nor China had shown interest in making grain purchases despite their bad harvests. Since then, both these countries have made inquiries which are expected to lead to heavy purchases. Prices in the USA have risen sharply.

Hence, further grain imports will cost the Government considerably more than the Rs 270 crores that it had taken in July--and this at a time when the foreign exchange reserves are falling sharply.

Even in July, some officials felt that at least 4 million tons of wheat should have been imported. However, it was decided to limit the imports in view of forecasts that the monsoon would be normal.

The monsoon was, in fact, bountiful in June and July in nearly all parts of the country. But the kharif crop needs further showers in August and early September and the lack of these in some States has affected the production prospects and led to the possibility of more imports.

PLAN TO INCREASE PULSE, OILSEED OUTPUT TOLD

Madras THE HINDU in English 14 Sep 81 p 16

[Text]

NEW DELHI, Sept. 13.

The Centre has finalised a plan of action to step up oilseeds production from 8.9 million tonnes in 1979-80 to 13 million tonnes by 1984-85 and pulses production from 8.4 million tonnes to 14.5 million tonnes.

The two centrally sponsored programmes will together involve an outlay of Rs. 81.7 crores.

It has been proposed to organise pulse growers around cooperative dal mills into cooperatives on the lines of the milk cooperatives of Anand to ensure remunerative prices as an incentive for increasing production.

Top priority is proposed to be given to the implementation of the centrally sponsored programmes to supplement the efforts of the State Governments as the shortage of oilseeds and pulses, which are articles of mass consumption, has caused concern to the Government.

Arrangements have been finalised to ensure timely supply of various vital inputs required to make this drive a complete success.

Flexible approach

As an important component of the campaign all the agencies, both at the Centre and in the States, including the field agencies, will be activised to undertake successfully the drive for augmenting the production of oilseeds and pulses.

State Governments will be authorised to divert funds, if necessary, upto an extent of 15 per cent from one programme to the other? within the overall sanctioned financial limits to provide operational flexibility in the implementation of each of the centrally sponsored programmes for oilseeds and pulses.

It is expected that the flexibility of approach in spending the funds will enable the State Governments to tailor the programmes to their specific needs. This concession will also apply to all the central sector and centrally-sponsored schemes with which the Department of Agriculture and Cooperation is concerned.

The Centre has taken up the responsibility for the supply of quality seeds. A committee under the chairmanship of Mr R. C. Sood, Additional Secretary in the Department of Agriculture and Cooperation, has been set up to promote and monitor a planned programme for seed production.

Adequate number of trained village level staff will be provided in the States, where the training and visit system of extension is not in operation, to ensure effective and quick transfer of improved technology to farmers for increasing production of oilseeds and pulses. In other States, the oilseeds and pulses development technology will be suitably incorporated in the existing T and V system of extension.

Concerted efforts are proposed to be made to promote the cultivation of short duration Arhar varieties in Andhra Pradesh, Karnataka, Maharashtra and Madhya Pradesh.

An intensive drive will be undertaken to expand the area under summer moong and rabi moong in States like Orissa, Andhra Pradesh, Tamil Nadu, Karnataka and Madhya Pradesh.

ANALYST DISCUSSES 'DEMORALIZATION' IN CIVIL SERVICE

Madras THE HINDU in English 14 Sep 81 p 8

[Article by K. K. Katyal: "Officialdom: Distortions and Deficiencies"]

[Text] The recent shake-up of 15 Secretaries at the Centre was startling. The changes were significant for many reasons, and chiefly because merit appeared to receive greater attention than loyalty. But the exercise is going to be a long haul.

MANY more steps are needed to restore confidence and a sense of purpose among top civil servants besides Mrs Gandhi's recent exhortation to Secretaries of Central Ministries to be correct and fearless in their dealings with their political bosses. To say this is not to suggest that the Prime Minister was less than categorical in her assurances but to stress that the rot in the bureaucracy is too acute to be removed by one such exercise. What happens in practice over a long period will carry greater conviction with officials than the outlining of abstract propositions.

It is equally important to identify the causes for the demoralisation that had set in among the officials or for the appearance of a new culture in which the relationship between officials and political heads was based less on accepted principles of a democratic parliamentary set-up and more on mutual convenience. The bureaucracy conducted itself eminently well after the transfer of power from the alien rulers to a popular Government in 1947 but could not withstand the pressures and tensions that accompanied the transfer of power from one party to another in the last four years, as also the Emergency.

The ICS got kudos for its role in the trying post-partition period, especially in the shattered State of Punjab, from those very people who used to decry it as "neither Indian nor civil nor service". Why is it that the IAS and other Central services collapsed under lesser pressures? To blame the bureaucracy for this steep drop in standards is to oversimplify the situation. The politicians in power too are responsible.

True, the bureaucracy needed to be turned and conscious steps were required to see that it adjusted to the changed role. True, there was some resistance by it and the process was not very smooth. But did politicians in authority observe the new norms concerning them in letter and spirit?

The situation at the Centre might not have been as bad as it was in the States where Ministers and MLAs would browbeat collectors and superintendents of police, or others among the ruling elite would put pressure on station house officers to take decisions to promote some personal and political interests. But are not top officials at the Centre categorised as "ours" and "theirs" by political bosses? And has this not been the deciding factor in good many cases in the matter of postings, transfers, promotions, and demotions? That officials allowed themselves to be categorised thus is another sordid aspect of this state of affairs.

The ascendancy of "ours" (they changed with the change of the Governments) worked havoc with the administration at a time when, because of new, intractable problems, the country was more ungovernable than ever before. This set of officials was preoccupied more with efforts to keep themselves on the right side of the source of favours bestowed on them than with the efficient discharge of duties. Their "to hell with them" attitude towards those with whom or for whom they were expected to work made things worse.

Then there were unedifying spectacles of such appointees clashing with one another and of their wrangles continuing endlessly because none of them, feeling secure with the support enjoyed by him, was prepared to yield to the other.

If Mrs. Gandhi's address to the Secretaries is part of a bigger, sustained operation, there is a hope that the present unhealthy trends may be reversed. Perhaps it is not an isolated case but part of an exercise, of which the last month's shake-up in the high echelons in the Central Secretariat and her known desire to do away with the institution of "Special Assistants" to Ministers are the other facets. The expected reshuffle of the Cabinet too may fit in with this streamlining process.

The changes of Secretaries were startling both because of their sweep and quality. Rarely in the past were 15 Secretaries affected by a shake-up at one time. There were some welcome signs of return to professionalism, though in one case, where the Minister and the Secretary did not pull on well, the latter was moved instead of identifying the causes of friction and taking the logical follow-up action.

The changes were significant for many reasons chiefly because merit appeared to receive greater attention than loyalty. There was at least one clear case of a loyalist being sent to his State because of the controversy over the deals finalised by his Ministry under his stewardship. This followed the change of the Minister, a loyalist too. Two women officers were elevated to the top level while a senior Secretary, earlier posted in an unimportant Ministry got an assignment commensurate with his standing. The Home Ministry under a new incumbent appeared set for a more dynamic role than had been the case since January last year.

The impression that the advice of the Prime Minister's new Principal Secretary, Mr. P. C. Alexander, influenced the decisions and that he and the Cabinet Secretary, Mr. Krishnaswamy Rao Sahib have an effective say in such matters may help restore the morale of officials.

A long haul

But it is going to be a long haul and results would be evident only after officials find tangible evidence of the changed climate. Till then, we would have to live with the consequences of the present distortions and deficiencies. The points that Mrs. Gandhi raised in her talk with Secretaries were not new and had been mentioned by her, in official files, notes, letters to Ministers and Chief Ministers during her earlier tenure. That the situation should have remained unchanged, nay, even worsened, is a sad commentary on the state of the administration. It also shows that optimism about the future is premature.

The tendency to pass the buck, the comparative emoluments of seniors in the Government and the private sector, the tyranny of rules, need for discipline and effective leadership and caution against indolence about which she talked recently, figure at length in a note she circulated among her Cabinet colleagues in 1975.

Tyranny of rules

This is what this unpublished document says about rules: "In a parliamentary democracy, everyone from the Minister down to the civil servant at the lowest level is accountable for the decisions he takes. This is at the root of the elaborate documentation and the rules governing every transaction. But it does not justify the complexity of the rules or the unnecessary, discursive and repetitive noting that impedes the functioning of Government offices. Accent should be on simple rules and on brief and precise exposition of points at issue so as to facilitate quick decision making".

About evading decisions: "A major cause of deterioration is the tendency of higher officers to shirk responsibility. The feeling has grown that taking decisions is risky and invites criticism. The file-pusher feels safe because he commits no mistakes. This tendency must be combated. Officers should be judged on the basis of the results they show and the contribution they make to the fulfilment of the objectives of the organisation they serve. They should be assured that Government will draw a distinction between genuine errors of judgment and those based on fradulent motives. It is essential that full protection is given to officers in all cases where their action is bona fide even though they may have committed mistakes. Honest and upright officers should be assigned to posts which call for exercise of discretionary powers. They should not be allowed to atrophy in inconsequential jobs".

Witch-hunting

A word of caution against witch-hunting: "Tax dodgers, smugglers, disappointed applicants for licences and permits and disgruntled subordinates often seek to wreak their vengeance on honest officers through wild and baseless allegations. Honest officers should be shielded fully against witch-hunting inspired by such unscrupulous elements".

And the comparison between the Government set-up and the private sector: "There is a feeling of relative deprivation among Government employees arising out of higher emoluments for comparable work in public undertakings. Some measure of differential in the pattern of emoluments may be called for having regard to the differences in the nature of work and the procedures for recruitment, promotion and removal of employees in public enterprises. But it has to be ensured that the levels of emoluments in public enterprises do not outstrip significantly those in Government".

Seniority

The tyranny of seniority too evoked adverse comments and rightly so, but the criteria to be devised to induct dynamic, young officers in top positions would have to be free from extraneous considerations. The reliance on seniority undoubtedly detrimental to the health and vigour of the administration increased over the years.

As the Deshmukh study team pointed out, the oldest and the youngest Secretaries in 1934 were 54-1/2 and 42-1/2 years of age, but, in 1968, the oldest was 60 and the youngest close to 50. Similarly, the average age in the Thirties at the time of promotion was around 48 and in the Sixties about 53. This as also the practice of appointing officers at the fag end of their career as Secretaries calls for remedial action without recourse to arbitrariness.

PUNJAB EDITOR'S MURDER REPORTEDLY POLITICAL

Calcutta THE SUNDAY STATESMAN in English 13 Sep 81 p 12

[Text]

CHANDIGARH, Sept. 12.—The group behind the murder of Lala Jagat Narain had other names on its list. The Punjab Government has taken steps to insure the safety of those included in the list, according to Mr Paramjit Singh, Chief Secretary.

Mr Singh told a Press conference today that this group believed in certain views which it felt were being opposed by the Lala and others. The murder bid was not to end with Lala Jagat Narain's death.

He, however, refused to comment when asked if protagonists of Khalistan were suspected of being behind the murder. He did not identify the group either, but said that the police were looking for the suspects.

The investigation so far—questioning of the arrested suspect, Nachatar Singh, and verification by the Police—showed that it was a political murder, planned and financed by those who differed with the Lala's views.

The Chief Secretary said that some other editors in Jullundur, including Mr Virendra of Pratap, Mr Sadhu Singh Hamdard of Ajit and the Editor of Akali Patrika, Mr Ram Singh had been provided with police guards.

A charge was made in the Lok Sabha yesterday that people behind the Khalistan movement and the killing of the Nirankari Baba Gurbachan Singh were responsible for the shooting of Lala Jagat Narain a veteran journalist, on Wednesday near Ludhiana. It was also stated that the Punjab Government was not cooperating in the investigation of such murders and that the Centre should take the initiative for an investigation.

KILLINGS BY PRO-LIN BIAO NAXALITES INCREASE

[Excerpt] The pro-Lin Biao group of Naxalites has once again taken to the path of annihilation of "class enemies" according to the police. Land owners, small business men and shopkeepers are the main targets.

For example, on the evening of July 28, Mr Dilip Kumar Bhowmick, the owner of a poultry farm was attacked while he was returning home on a motorcyle. As the vehicle slowed down near a culvert, a few persons jumped on him with swords. He sped away, but could not escape serious injuries. Similarly, the owner of a petrol pump was ambushed by a dozen people, near Santipur railway station on the evening of July 18, and stabbed to death.

Records show such extremist activity, particularly in West Dinajpur and Nadia districts. In West Dinajpur, there were 15 violent incidents involving suspected Naxalites in 1980, including eight murders, two bomb cases, one assault on policemen and four incidents of looting of paddy. Compared to this, till July this, year, there were 69 such incidents. Including 12 murders, 31 dacoities, two dacoities with murders, four robberies, 15 incidents of carrying of illegal arms and two bomb cases. In Nadia, there were 15 murder and gun snatching cases involving suspected Naxalites between December last year and July this year.

Theft of Guns

The revival of Naxalite activity seems to have resulted in a sharp rise in the incidents of theft of guns (snatching as well as stealing) in the State. While last year 155 such cases were recorded, this year, till July, the figure was 185. The affected districts are: West Dinajpur (73), Burdwan (19), 24-Parganas (21), Murshidabad (10) and Nadia (9).

The Naxalite groups responsible for these incidents are said to be regrouping in West Dinajpur, Nadia, Malda and Birbhum. When chased by West Bengal police, they take shelter in Bihar where they are said to be maintaining a low profile to avoid persecution by Bihar police.

BIOGRAPHICAL INFORMATION ON BENGAL GOVERNOR

[Text] Mr Bhairab Datt Pande was sworn in as the Governor of West Bengal at Raj Bhavan, Calcutta, on Saturday afternoon. Mr Sambhu Chandra Ghose, Chief Justice of Calcutta High Court, administered the oath of office.

The Chief Minister and most of his Cabinet colleagues, judges of Calcutta High Court, the Speaker and the Deputy Speaker of the West Bengal Assembly, the vice-chancellors of Calcutta, Jadavpur and Rabindra Bharati universities, some members of the diplomatic corps, the Inspector-General of Police, West Bengal, the Commissioner of Calcutta Police, the Chief Secretary and secretaries of different State Government departments and the president of the West Bengal Pradesh Congress (I) were among those present.

In a televised interview broadcast in the evening, Mr Pande sought the cooperation of all sections of the people in the State. He said that as the Governor of West Bengal it would be his duty to achieve its all-round development.

The Governor said that he and his wife were great admirers of the art and literature of West Bengal and appreciated the State's contribution to music, the humanities and the sciences. He hoped to be fully involved in these activities in the State.

Earlier, Mr Pande arrived in Calcutta from Delhi. He told reporters at Calcutta airport that West Bengal was a premier State in India and as such should take its premier position. He wished prosperity to the State and its people.

Asked whether his appointment as the West Bengal Governor was political, he replied: "Why should it be political? I am not a politician". He was, however, happy with his present appointment.

Mr Pande, who was accompanied by his wife, was received at the airport by Mr Jyoti Basu and some of his Cabinet colleagues, the Speaker and senior officials of the Union and State Governments.

Mr Pande was born on March 17, 1917, and obtained his B.Sc. degree from Allahabad University and B.A. degree from Cambridge.

He entered the Indian Civil Service in 1938 and had his first posting in Bihar. He served the State for nearly 21 years in various capacities before he moved over to the Centre as Joint Secretary in the Ministry of Community Development and Cooperation and later in the Ministry of Defence Coordination and Supply from 1960 to 1963.

Mr Pande later became Additional Secretary in the Ministry of Finance and for some time was chairman of the Central Board of Revenue and Gold Control Administration.

For two years from 1963, he was chairman of the Life Insurance Corporation before moving to Bihar as Commissioner-General cum Chief Secretary in 1967.

Soon after, he returned to the Centre and till early 1970 was Secretary in the Planning Commission and till May 1971, Secretary in the Department of Heavy Engineering and the Department of Industrial Development.

He was Finance Secretary from May 1971 to November 1972 and till March 1977 Cabinet Secretary and Principal Secretary to the Planning Commission.

He was part-time chairman of the National Transport Policy Committee set up by the Planning Commission from May 1978 to 1980. He was till recently the chairman of the Railway Reform Committee.

LARGE NUMBER OF 'OVERSTAYING' PAKISTANIS REPORTED

Bombay THE TIMES OF INDIA in English 13 Sep 81 p 7

[Text] Islamabad, September 12 (PTI). More than 45,000 Pakistani nationals visiting India stayed on in the country in the last 30 months, according to a study conducted by the Indian Embassy here.

The number of Pakistani nationals staying on in India was thus more than two-and-a-half times the number of Indian nationals staying on in Pakistan during this period, the embassy said in a press release here yesterday.

The study indicated that reports appearing in the Pakistani press, including one attributed to a Pakistani government official that a large number of Indian nationals who travel to Pakistan settle down here were "totally incorrect," it said.

The pattern of traffic this year, for example, indicate that the number of Indian nationals arriving in Pakistan was approximately equal to the number returning.

Therefore, there was no basis for the assumption that some of them had settled down in Pakistan though at any given time there would always be a certain number of Indian and Pakistani nationals staying on in the other country.

This did not mean that they had settled down or intended to settle down in the country of their visit, the embassy press release added.

According to the embassy study, in addition to the number of Pakistanis staying in India for various reasons, 9,866 overstayed without valid reasons in 1980. However, this had not prevented the Indian government from continuing its liberal visa policy--as it was their declared policy to facilitate travel between India and Pakistan. Efforts were being made to further liberalise issue of visas.

As far as possible, intending Pakistani visitors to India were issued visas on the same day as the application was made, the embassy said.

BOOK ON INDO-SOVIET COOPERATION RELEASED

Bombay THE TIMES OF INDIA in English 12 Sep 81 p 15

[Text] New Delhi, September 11. The Vice-president, Mr M. Hidayatullah, said yesterday that Indo-Soviet friendship and cooperation was based on mutual trust and was not directed against any other country.

He said that over the past decade, since the signing of the Indo-Soviet treaty of peace, friendship and cooperation, relations between India and the Soviet Union had been further strengthened and both countries were striving to promote and nourish world peace.

Mr Hidayatullah was speaking after releasing the book "Studies in Indo-Soviet Cooperation" at a function held at Vithalbhai Patel Bhavan. The book has been edited by Dr Shankar Dayal Sharma, MP.

Mr Balram Jakhar, speaker of the Lok Sabha, who presided, said that Indo-Soviet ties were on a firm basis and for the mutual benefit of both the countries. The treaty had stood the test of time.

Devotion to Duty

He called upon people in India to imbibe the Russian qualities of hard work and devotion to duty which alone could lead the country towards progress and prosperity.

The Soviet charge d'affaires, Mr S.I. Semivolos, said it was significant that the book was being released when the tenth anniversary of the Soviet-Indian treaty of peace, friendship and cooperation was being widely celebrated in both the countries.

He said the treaty symbolised the "relations of sincere friendship and close cooperation between our two countries. These relations have deep historical, political, cultural, and material roots and have always been marked by mutual respect, by identity or similarity of our positions in the international arena."

Earlier, Dr Sharma, welcoming the vice-president, said the publication, which had contributions from several well-known writers and intellectuals was bound to further strengthen the Indo-Soviet ties of friendship and cooperation.

SIKH SETTLERS IN UTTAR PRADESH TRIBAL AREA ILLEGAL

Bombay THE TIMES OF INDIA in English 12 Sep 81 pp 1, 9

[Article by K. Bikram Rao: "U.P. Settlers Defiant"]

[Text]

KHATIMA (Naini Tal), September 11.

"WE will give up our life, not our land." This forceful statement of a Rai Sikh in the Terai region at the foothills of the Himalayas sums up the defiant mood of the Punjabi settlers who face eviction under the recent UP government ordinance.

A quick tour of the area shows that the ordinance, promulgated ostensibly in pursuance of the Prime Minister's resolve to undo the injustice done to the scheduled tribes and scheduled castes, has generated social tensions. There are apprehensions that attempts to dispossess the settlers of the land, the ownership of which vests with the tribals according to revenue records, may lead to clashes.

The ruling Congress (I) is apparently not united on the issue. Even while the revenue minister, Mr. Baijnath Kureel, who is a Harijan, reiterated the government's resolve to restore the land to the tribals, Mr. Ranjit Singh Sethi, a Sikh minister of state, who was recently dropped from the ministry, publicly announced at a meeting here: "Mrs. Indira Gandhi has stayed the operation of the ordinance." Inquiries at the secretariat, however, show that there was no such directive from New Delhi.

The essentially agrarian problem has acquired a political colour with the circulation of the "Khalistan map", drawn up by Canadian Sikhs, showing the Terai region as part of Khalistan.

Given the rigid stance of the Tharus and the Punjabi settlers, the state ministry has a tough problem on its hands. At Haldwani, a Harijan Congress (I) MLA, Mr. Bihari Lal, has said the "continued exploitation" of the hapless Tharus should end soon. He and his party colleagues are pressing the district administration for the effective implementation of the ordinance.

The land, officially claimed to be under the illegal occupation of the settlers, is put at 16,552 acres. Spread over 238 villages, this land had been occupied after 1969, according to official statistics.

The Sikh leaders, Mr. Jai Singh and Mr. Barbans Singh, who had been living in the Terai area for the past four decades, contend that the government should regularise the occupation by the settlers. They argue that the settlers had reclaimed inhospitable land after undergoing considerable risks.

The general secretary of the Terai Krishak Sangh, Mr. Jagir Singh, a young farmer who is organising the settlers' agitation, told this correspondent that the revenue records were defective and as such could not form the basis for dispossessing the settlers. Major Avtar Singh, another settler, claimed that several Tharus had of their own volition sold the land to the settlers. How could the government invalidate such transactions?

The district administration is, however determined to implement the ordinance. The district magistrate, Mr. Babu Ram, said in an interview that the "new Punjabi settlers" had no case at all. It was not correct to say that implementation of the ordinance had been stayed by the Prime Minister or anyone else in authority. "My administration is going ahead with it."

He pointed out that in 1951 the "Tharu and Bukosa tribals owned about half a million acres of land. Today they own only 80,000 acres."

Whatever the merits of the rival claims, any visitor to Khatima, Sitarganj, Barpur and interior villages cannot but notice the sharp contrast in the life styles of the settlers and the Tharus. At Baghora village, Mr. Mohan Singh, a Sikh farmer, owns a huge farm and lives in a modern bungalow. Only a few metres behind his coutryard, the land is dotted by Tharu huts and hovels.

Three Tharu farmers, Sukhi Singh, Mulu Singh and Hira Singh, said their fathers owned the land before the settlers came over and occupied it. The Tharus alleged that most of it had been taken away by the settlers through illegal mortgage and transfer of ownership, or forcible occupation.

The Tharus have no leaders worth the name. A Rana family has set up a Rana Parishad. This family in course of time built up an empire for itself by allegedly depriving the other Tharus of their land. In private conversation, several Tharu farmers are sharply critical of the Rana Parishad leaders. They were previously money-lenders. The result is that the Tharus accounting for nearly one lakh families, remain an unorganised lot, much like rural labourers.

These Tharus, who are Rajput by caste, had migrated from Chittorgarh in Rajasthan. When the Khilji emperor, Alauddin Khilji, destroyed the Rajput kingdom in his pursuit of the beautiful Queen Padmini, hundreds of Rajput princesses escaped with their servants to the safety of the Himalayan foothills in the Terai region. Traditionally, these royal women enjoyed a higher status than men. Even today the women rule the household and look after other affairs.

The first serious attempt at settlement in the Terai region was made during the chief ministership of Mr. Govind Ballabh Pant, soon, a large number of Sikhs from Pakistan came over to the area. The UP government offered them land. The sturdy agriculturists soon reclaimed the land and emerged as rich farmers. With the development of communications in the Terai hinterland in the sixties, more people from Punjab, retired army personnel and cultivators from the backward eastern UP were attracted to Terai.

They bought land from the Tharus at throwaway prices. Sukhhi Singh, a Tharu, had bartered Rs. 1,300 and in the bargain lost his holding of 46 bighas and paid over Rs. 8,500 as interest on the loan he had taken for his son's wedding. There are hundreds of cases of people from eastern UP and Punjab, who came as moneylenders and became owners of the Tharus' land.

When the alienation of tribal land assumed serious proportions, the social welfare directorate appointed a study team to probe the living conditions of the Tharus. A detailed study report was prepared in 1978. It revealed that some 1,500 settler families had grabbed land from the Tharu and Buksa tribals who had owned it for a century or so. But various efforts to check land alienation failed because of political and other factors.

The June 3 ordinance is in fact an amendment to the land laws bill. It bans the sale of Tharu land and empowers district officials to prosecute illegal occupants of Tharu land. As the objects and reasons explain, the bill seeks to remedy the disturbed social equilibrium in the Terai region.

Even as controversy rages over the issue, curiously no political party has taken any initiative to sort out the problem. This is because almost all political parties are divided vertically on the agrarian issue.

The ruling Congress (I) is split into the Harijan tribal block led by Mr. Bihari Lal and the Sikh group led by Mr. Jai Singh. The Bharatiya Janata Party, which has some influence in the area, is scrupulously avoiding taking sides, apparently for fear of facing a split in its ranks.

The two Communist parties find themselves in a curious situation. The secretary of the district unit of the CPM, Mr. Satya Prakash, openly champions the cause of the Punjabi settlers. The Marxist leader contends that the ordinance is "undemocratic." Under Mr. Satya Prakash's leadership, the district unit of the CPM did not join the "land to the Tharu tiller" struggle.

The CPI has its own problems. Revenue records show that two chief functionaries of the district CPI own over 200 acres of land. An important CPI leader here allegedly has some 150 acres of farmland registered in the name of his pet dog.

The government is apparently determined to enforce the ordinance. It remains to be seen, however, whether it has enough political will to go ahead with the scheme, particularly in the light of the militant stand taken by the settlers who possess licensed arms.

GARHWAL LOK SABHA REPOLL SCHEDULED FOR 22 NOVEMBER

[Text] New Delhi, Sept 19.--Re-poll in the Garhwal Lok Sabha constituency by-election will be held on November 22. The Chief Election Commissioner, Mr S. L. Shakdher, told this to reporters here this evening, after a meeting with contesting candidates and their representatives earlier in the day.

According to Mr G. C. Bhattacharya, general secretary of the Democratic Socialist Party, the repoll will be held on November 22. Mr Raj Narain told a separate Press conference that it would be in the second half of November.

The re-poll was ordered following protests from Mr H. N. Bahuguna, the Democratic Socialist Party candidate, that police from Haryana and other States had been posted at polling stations without the prior permission of the Election Commission.

The seat had fallen vacant following the resignation of Mr Bahuguna both from the Congress(I) general secretaryship and Parliament. Mr Bhattacharya, who represented Mr Bahuguna, and Mr Negi, U.P.'s Minister for Forests, were among those who met the Chief Election Commissioner to urge an early by-election in Garhwal. Mr Bhattacharya said the commission told the delegation that 15 days would be given for campaigning and the notification would be issued by November 7.

On behalf of Mr Bahuguna, it was urged that in conformity with the Election Commission's order, the re-poll should be held under the direct supervision of the Election Commissioner. This will require that no police force from outside the State be allowed in the constituency.

AUSTRIAN LOAN--New Delhi, September 8--Austria has granted a loan of 206 million schillings (equivalent to Rs 10.3 crores) to India. The loan has a grace period of ten years and carries an annual interest of two per cent. It is earmarked for the purchase of investment goods from Austria. The loan was proposed by the Austrian chancellor, Dr Kriesky, after his return from a visit to India last year. Dr Kreisky wanted the loan to be announced as a prelude to the North-South summit conference in Mexico. [Text] [Bombay THE TIMES OF INDIA in English 9 Sep 81 p 14]

AICP ON CPI--Leaders of the West Bengal unit of the All India Communist Party believe that the liquidation of the Communist Party of India has been completed following its decision to join the Left Front in West Bengal. The CPI has now become an appendage of the CPI(M). A spokesman of the AICP said in Calcutta on Monday that the CPI had been relegated to the position of the Forward Bloc and the RSP and lost its independence. He called upon the CPI leaders, who had opposed the decision to join the Left Front, to realize the futility of an inner party struggle. These leaders should come out openly against the official line of the CPI, he said. The spokesman said the AICP did not support the proposed bandh called by the Left Front on September 11, which was politically motivated though the party was against the Essential Services Maintenance Ordinance. But the party would not oppose the bandh for the sake of trade union unity. [Text] [Calcutta THE STATESMAN in English 9 Sep 81 p 3]

CONGRESS-S RESIGNATIONS--New Delhi, Sept 8--Several senior members of the Youth Congress(S) today submitted their resignations to the party president, Mr Sharad Pawar, in protest against the "defamed clique" within the party. WORLD BANK, IDA LOANS--New Delhi, September 16--The World Bank has sanctioned a loan of $100 million and its affiliate, the International Development Association, a credit of $220 million to India. The World Bank loan is for the construction of a bagassee-based pulp and paper mill in Tamil Nadu, while the IDA credit is for irrigation development in Madhya Pradesh. The IDA credit will help the provision of irrigation facilities under the Mahanadi reservoir project and the Hasdeo Bango project. Both projects are under construction and are estimated to cost $439 million over a five-year period--July, 1981, to June, 1986. Under the scheme, canals will be enlarged to enable them to meet peak water needs. Sufficient control structures will be provided to enable them to respond to changing seasonal and annual water demands. The IDA credit is for 50 years with ten years of grace. MADRAS VICE CHANCELLOR--Madras, Sept 16--Dr M. Santappa has been appointed Vice-Chancellor of the Madras University for three years from the date on which he assumes charge. The term of office of the former Vice-Chancellor, Mr G. R. Damodaran, ended on September 3 and a committee of convenors of Syndicate Committees has been looking after the duties of the Vice-Chancellor since then. Starting his career as Reader and head of the physical chemistry department of the Madras University in 1952, he moved to the Madurai extension centre as professor during 1958-62. He became professor of physical chemistry in the Madras University in 1962. He was also concurrently Director of the Central Leather Research Institute (CLRI) during 1972-79. Dr Santapa was also Vice-Chancellor of the Sri Venkateswara University, Tirupati, from January 1979 to June, 1980 and then came to CLRI again as its Director. This is the first time in the 125 year history of the Madras University that a university professor has been appointed Vice-Chancellor. Also, for the first time in the long history of the university, a person belonging to the scheduled caste has been given the privilege of presiding over the destinies of this prestigious alma mater. CONSPIRACY IN TRIPURA--Agartala, September 18 (PTI)--The Tripura chief minister, Mr Nripen Chakravarti, said today some "documents and letters," recovered recently, brought to light a "deep-rooted conspiracy by a section of Tripura tribals in collusion with the RSS to overthrow the left front government in the state." Some foreign powers and antidemocratic elements were also involved in this, he told the state assembly, while concluding a debate on a private motion moved by the opposition Tripura Upajati Juba Samiti member, Mr Nagendra Jamtiya. Earlier on the opening day of the monsoon session today, the four-member TUJS opposition staged a walk-out protesting against a discussion in the house on alleged charges against them of an anti-state conspiracy. This was no part of the agenda, he said. [Text] [Bombay THE TIMES OF INDIA in English 19 Sep 81 p 1]

MANGALORE AIRPORT IMPROVEMENT--New Delhi, Sept 18--The Civil Aviation Minister, Mr A. P. Sharma, told the Lok Sabha today that a parallel runway would be constructed at Mangalore airport to overcome landing difficulty faced by bigger aircraft. A survey was being conducted and the cost of the runway would be known only after its completion. He admitted that the present runway was short and Boeing 737 aircraft could not land at Mangalore during the rainy season. Mr Janardhana Poorjary said the existing runway was dangerous. He referred to the HS-748 (Avro) aircraft of the Indian Airlines, which met with an accident while landing at Mangalore airport in August. UNI. [Text] [Madras THE HINDU in English 19 Sep 81 p 7]

FARM EXPORT TASK FORCE--New Delhi, Sept 19.--A task force has been set up to tap the export potential of the farm sector as had been done in the case of marine products. ANTULAY ACCUSES U.S.--Nagpur, Sept 19 (UNI)--Maharashtra Chief Minister A.R. Antulay today alleged "American hand" in the campaign launched against him by the "capitalist" press on the issue of donations to the trusts with which he is associated. Addressing the eleventh convention of the All-India Panchayat Parishad here, Mr Antulay said the campaign had begun immediately after his condemnation of the US at the intellectuals' convention in Bombay for arming Pakistan "to destroy Indian democracy." Mr Antulay lashed out at the "so-called national press which is in reality a capitalist press" for giving what he called a distorted view of the events in the country and for claiming to represent public opinion. These papers did not reflect the hopes and aspirations of the rural poor comprising 80 per cent of the country's population, he felt. [Text] [New Delhi PATRIOT in English 20 Sep 81 p 1]

KASHMIR CONGRESS-S--Srinagar, September 20 (PTI)--Senior leaders of the Jammu and Kashmir Pradesh Congress(S), led by Mr Bhim Singh, MLA, at a meeting here today resolved to set up a "state-level regional party," and sever their links with the party led by Mr Sharad Pawar. PROCESS FOR APPOINTMENT OF GOVERNORS DISCUSSED

Jakarta SINAR HARAPAN in Indonesian 20 Jul 81 pp 1, 12

[Excerpts] In his statement that 60 percent of the new appointees for governorships had been determined by the central government and 40 percent by the regional governments, the minister of internal affairs only meant to illustrate the vital importance of the regional system of government, in accordance with Law No 5/1974. So stated Drs. Feisal Tamin, spokesman for the Department of Internal Affairs, Monday morning.

In his statement to SINAR HARAPAN Feisal added that the comment of the minister of internal affairs, Amir Machmud, did not imply a strict attention to percentages but only indicated that considerations for national unity lie above regional interests.

Feisal said that according to Law No 18/1965 decentralization meant granting autonomy to the regional governments on as broad a basis as possible, but according to Law No 5/1974 autonomy takes on an explicit, responsible character. This, said the department's spokesman, means giving precedence to the concern for national unity. "And that's what Pak Amir meant by '60 percent,'" said Feisal. That's also the reason why the figures "60 percent" and "40 percent" have never been in any of the laws.

Feisal added that, no matter what, the provinces cannot free themselves from the undivided state of the Indonesian Republic, whereas the responsibility for unity and union lies with the central government. Governors must be persons who have the trust of the central government because they represent the central government and the president in their respective regions. But, he said, regional interests continue to receive strong attention, and this is reflected in the provincial parliamentary elections.

Feisal explained that last Friday night Ahamad Amins, head of Aceh's regional parliament, together with the heads of the parliamentary factions and Aceh's current governor, Eddy Sabara, gave Amir Machmud a list of candidates for the position of governor of Special Region Aceh.

The regional parliament of Aceh determined the candidates for governor to be Teuku M. Hadi Thayeb (nominated by FKP [Development Work Faction], ABRI, [Indonisian Armed Forces] and PDI [Indonesia Democracy Party]), Mohamad Ali, Drs. Agus Yusuf and Asnawi Hasyim (also nominated by PDI) and Gazali Amna (nominated by FPP [Development Union Faction]).

According to Feisal, the minister of internal affairs only agreed to three gubernatorial candiates: Teuku M. Hadi Thayeb, Mohamad Ali and H. Gazali Amna. According to plans, Aceh's parliament will elect a new governor on 25 July.

The choice of Aceh's governor will be made on the basis of a presidential executive order, but, according to the law, the president's decision is absolutely not tied to the number of votes each candidate has received.

Meanwhile, Sudarko Prawiroyudho, MP, verified Monday afternoon that there is nothing new in the law about the 60-40 percentage split between the Central and regional governments as expressed by the minister of internal affairs. In his statement to SINAR HARAPAN the member of the Development Work Faction added that when it comes to politics, mathematical calculations can't be used. They only result in different kinds of interpretations.

He said he thought probably what the minister meant was related to the presidential prerogative to make the definitive choice for governor from several chosen candidates submitted by the provincial parliaments, witout being tied to the candidate that has received the most votes.

He said that provision is made in the law that prior to the time candidates are officially brought before the provincial parliament, there must first be a discussion with the minister of internal affairs. "In that constitutional but unofficial discussion there is allowance for debate," he said. The president remains tied to those candidates submitted to him, and he may not choose a candidate apart from those submitted.

REAGAN ADMINISTRATION POLICIES DISCUSSED

Jakarta KOMPAS in Indonesian 21 Jul 81 pp 1, 12

[Excerpts] Two persons who know much about U.S.-Indonesian relations have given differing views on current U.S. Government policy. Tribuana Said said there is nothing new in U.S. policy on aid to the developing nations. The only difference lies in President Reagan's personal style of "snapping a lot at others." On the other hand, Jusuf Wanandi from DSIS [expansion unknown] said it is evident that the United States Government today has not yet developed a complete and comprehensive foreign policy.

The two men were interviewed by KOMPAS Monday in connection with the summit of seven industrial nations now taking place at Chateau Montebello in Ottawa. There has been a lot of comment on the dissatisfaction of the Reagan Administration over aid given by the governments of the industrial nations directly to the governments of the developing nations. Reagan wants to transfer the funds to the private sector through loans or investment activity.

According to Tribuana Said, there is actually a great deal of continuity in American presidential politics, even when there is a change of administration. This is espcially true in the area of U.S. foreign policy. "What differs is only the style and the poltical emphasis of each president," he said.

As to whether Reagan intends to decrease foreign aid, Said feels U.S. Ambassador Edward Masters' comment in East Java some time ago still needs to be heeded. According to Masters, U.S. aid to Indonesia actually is going to increase next year, from $60 million to $75 million. "Masters' statement implies a sense of continuity in U.S. foreign policy," he said.

According to Said, Reagan really does want to enlarge the role of the private sector, both in his own country and in the Third World. Similar issues, i.e., the desire to increase the role of private business in U.S. foreign economic relations, are being debated in the U.S. Congress. Construction of the Pusri Fertilizer Plant in Palembang is one of the cases affected by the move to the private sector because direct government-to-government aid is involved. Congress has been critical of such direct aid.

These congressional attitudes are not showing signs of disappearing. Congress is leaning toward increasing aid via the private sector in order to facilitate the development of private enterprise in the two countries and does not want to increase the government's role in economic affairs.

According to Said, it is important to note that private businesses of the two nations hold differing views in the negotiation process. Up till now Western governments have used different methods than Western businesses. For instance, governments have lightened the tax burden, import-export duties and interest rates on loans. "If you can call that 'aid,' then that is the kind of aid to expect under the Reagan Administrtion," he said.

Tribuana Said feels this policy will not cause major problems for Indonesia's private sector. Economic relations with the West are growing stronger now that the New Order is several years old. "And for those private Indonesian businesses that have already laid the groundwork for relations with the United States, this policy will even stimulate new growth," he said.

Meanwhile Jusuf Wanandi said that current U.S. policy is emphasizing recovery of the American economy itself. But U.S. foreign policy is not going to wait around until domestic problems are solved. As a result, said Wanandi, one must admit that the Reagan Administration has not yet formulated a complete and comprehensive foreign policy. U.S. allies in Western Europe and Japan recognize current U.S. foreign policy as "so much rhetoric." Most of the rhetoric revolves around sounding the alarm on the Soviet threat. It's almost as if the United States is saying that all international problems today are a direct result of Soviet machinations. That simply is not true, says Wanandi. For instance, many problems in the developing nations only have local causes or reflect some instability in domestic or regional developments.

According to Wanandi, the developing nations do hope for military aid in certain crises. But more often economic relations and transfer of technology are what is needed most. "These have a more stabilizing, long-term effect and can benefit the U.S. Government as well," he said.

But the very opposite is happening, said Wanandi. The U.S. Government does not understand the desires of the developing nations or use those desires as "unbreakable tools" that might help govern and improve its friendships. The United States is actually ignoring the chance to develop better relations with Third World nations.

TALKS WITH FRENCH LEADERS REPORTED

Jakarta KOMPAS in Indonesian 27 Jul 81 pp 1, 9

[Excerpt] Indonesia is holding comprehensive discussions on Indonesian-French bilateral relations in technical and cultural cooperation, politics and trade. So stated Foreign Affairs Minister Mochtar Kusumaatmaja to reporters upon his arrival at the Halim Perdanakusuma Airport Sunday evening.

The foreign affairs minister had just attended the International Conference on Kampuchea in New York. On his return trip to Indonesia he stopped in France at the invitation of French Foreign Minister Claude Cheysson for discussions from 22 to 24 July.

Kusumaatmaja said that in addition to meeting with the French foreign minister, he was also involved in a series of meetings with the minister for research and technology, Chevenement, the minister of industry, Drefuss, and several other high French officials. Discussions revolved around bilateral relations the two countries have shared up till now.

In addition, the foreign affairs minister said, they discussed international problems that related directly to the national interests of the two countries. Furthermore, he said that he took the opportunity to brief the French minister on the International Conference on Kampuchea, while Claude Cheysson informed him about the summit of the seven industrial nations in Ottawa.

The two ministers agreed that French-Indonesian relations will grow through friendship and cooperation in a number of fields. The French foreign minister noted the vital importance of Indonesia's position in international politics, for instance in the nonaligned movement or the Muslim world. The two nations agreed to conduct close, regular discussions on the matters of mutual concern in all fields.

Kusumaatmaja said he considered his meetings in France to be very important in the light of current French reformulation of domestic and foreign policy. The foreign affairs minister said in response to a question that Indonesia welcomes Mitterand's plans and ideas for increasing assistance to the Third World. It means the Third World has a friend [among] the developed nations. But because these plans and ideas are only at the conceptual stage in the new French Government, Indonesia is taking a wait-and-see position. Clearly, however, Indonesia welcomes the French expression of interest, especially their efforts to attract attention to the North-South dialogue. "This is most encouraging," said the foreign affairs minister.

During his talks Kusumaatmaja also asked if the French were willing to become members of the commission that was established by the International Conference on Kampuchea in New York. "I hope France will not refuse to become a member of the commission," he said.

Furthermore, on behalf of President Soeharto the foreign affairs minister renewed the invitation to the French president that had been made earlier. "Foreign Minister Cheysson expressed his thanks and said he would be happy to convey the message to Mitterand," said Kusumaatmaja. The French foreign minister himself accepted Kusumaatmaja's invitation to visit Indonesia at an unspecified date.

INVESTMENT BOARD TO HAVE INCREASED SUPERVISORY ROLE

Jakarta KOMPAS in Indonesian 30 Jul 81 pp 1, 12

[Excerts] President Soeharto has asked the Capital Investment Coordinating Board (BKPM) to give more serious attention to supervising business investments in Indonesia in both developmental and operational stages. So stated Ir Suhartoyo, head of BKPM, after his interview with the president at the Cendana Street residence Wednesday.

Suhartoyo said that in the light of this supervisory role, BKPM has sent out letters to each business concern asking for an accounting of its activities. The first reminder was sent on 1 June and the second on 2 July 1981.

He said that letters of reminder were sent to each of more than 500 companies that have invested here. The letters were sent because the companies had not yet responded to the first reminder to report on investment activities. Most of the investment companies are located in Jakarta, he said.

"If there is still no response," said Suhartoyo, "then we will take action. The deadline is this month." He said the individual letters are not quite (but "almost") a reprimand, and they are the "final reminder."

Concerning sanctions, Suhartoyo said that first of all BKPM can revoke customs and tax exemptions. Only the Department of Industry may cancel permits, but BKPM does have a right to make recommendations.

Ir Suhartoyo also reported to the president on steps to carry out Presidential Decision No 33, dated 27 July 1981, which concerns BKPM's function and organization. Replacing Presidential Decision No 53, 1977, the new directive concerns additional responsibilities and organizational developments for BKPM, including supervisory tasks.

Concerning organizational developments, Suhartoyo said that while BKPM now has two deputies besides the chairman and vice chairman, in the future there will be three: The deputy of planning and management, under the Bureau of Planning and the Bureau of Management; the deputy of development and promotion under the Bureau of Development, the Bureau of Training and Guidance and the Bureau of Promotion; and the deputy of evaluation and permits under the Bureau of Project Evaluation, the Bureau of Allowances and Permits and the new General Service Bureau.

REPORT ON DISSIDENT GROUPS, DEATH OF WARMAN

Jakarta HARIAN UMUM AB in Indonesian 29 Jul 81 pp 1, 8

[Article by Tatos Kesuma: "Who is Warman? Hunted for 3 Years, Finally Shot Dead in Soreang"]

[Excerpts] The anti-terrorist squad of the 6th Military Region Command ("Siliwangi") has shot and killed the terrorist leader called "Warman." The incident took place in the Soreang Kolot section of the village of Soreang in Bandung district.

Syaefudin, head of the 3rd Village Association in Soreang Kolot, and Ibu Enggah, landlady, just shook their heads in amazement. Ibu Enggah said she never imagined that an "uninvited guest," long sought by the authorities, was living in one of her guesthouses. Warman and his wife were staying at Ade's cottage.

According to Ibu Enggah, Ade and his wife had begun to rent out one of the huts in back just 5 months ago. About 24 years old, Ade is regularly employed as a tailor in Bandung. Normally he and his wife don't see each other very much.

Warman (a name easily remembered) became well known from the time he started to commit his terrorist acts. Having formed the "Holy War" army and under the pretense of defending the fisabillah faith [Dar ul-Islam], he began to incite the people to rebellion against the legitimate government. Some people he had stirred up fled to a jungle hideout from where they began to launch their terrorist actions. In North Sumatra the gang, called the "Holy War Command," burned down a church, destroyed a mosque in Padang, and performed acts of terror in Lampung, South Sumatra. From there the gang crossed over to Java and committed atrocities in Surakarta, Jakarta and West Java.

Warman's gang meant to terrorize the people so that neighbor would suspect neighbor. Now in the midst of development, the Indonesian people would become agitated, and the government program for development would end in failure. Muslims were deceived. Churches were burned so that Christians would mistrust Muslims; mosques were defaced so Muslims would suspect Christians. Important figures in society, educators and students, were murdered. All was done for the sake of the ultimate goal of the gang.

The commander of the Restoration of Security and Order Command once divulged the background of terror and theft that occurred in Sumatra and Java. According to the commander, the movement began in 1976. Led by Haji Ismail Pranoto, the terrorists tried to blow up the Baptist Hospital in Bukittinggi on 11 October 1976. Then they blew up Nurul Iman Mosque in Padang on 11 November 1976. There were bombings in Medan at Ekabudimurni Church, the Methodist Church, Apollo Restaurant and Riang Theater. The underground newsletter "Ghost of the Revolution" was distributed 25-26 December 1976. H. Ismail Pranoto, the mastermind of these acts, was captured and tried in the Surabaya court. He was convicted on 19 September 1978 and received a life sentence.

In 1977 the Hasan Tiro group calling itself the "Indonesian Muslim Liberation Front" became active. Some people who called themselves "Free Aceh" and later the "Hasan Tiro Outlaw Terrorist Band" (GTLHT) were involved. The proclamation of the Free Aceh State was signed by Hasan Tiro, who was residing in the United States along with Dr Muhtar Hasby, Ir Samawi, Dr Zaini and Dr Husaini. The activities of the terrorists led to armed rebellions. The group's methods were to incite the people and force its desires on them, to put pressure on transmigrants and to commit acts of sabotage, such as the attack on the liquified natural gas plant at Arun, Aceh. Authorities have now virtually paralyzed the movement.

In 1978 the A. Q. Jaelani group was formed. Members called themselves the followers of the "Islamic Revolutionary Struggle." Essentially the high point of GPI's [expansion unknown] illegal activities occurred in the planned event of 20 March 1978, which, because of the alertness of the security forces, was thwarted. GPI has espoused five stages for its movement. The first stage involves introduction and expansion. Then the following stages include participation, mobilization and situation development. The fifth stage is action.

The terrorist activites of Warman and company seem to have peaked in 1978-80, ending in 1981. First, Jaja Sujadi, former member of Darul Islam and its Indonesian Islamic Army [Muslim dissident group], was murdered in West Java in 1978. The murder of Parmanto, First Assistant Rector of the March Eleven State University in Surakarta, occurred on 19 January 1979. He was shot to death by four persons, later known as Musa, Farid Gozali, Hanif and Muhammad. Some of the names were aliases. Farid was known particularly in Jakarta because he killed two members of the 5th Military Region Command ("Jaya") who were trying to capture him. Finally he was killed in a shoot-out with security forces.

On 19 January 1979 Suman Kalijaga, an IAIN [State Islamic Religion Institute] student in Yogyakarta, and Hassan Bau were killed in the village of Cangkringan, Kalasan, Yogyakarta. [sic] The investigation showed that five people were involved in the crime, including Musa, who had also killed Parmanto in Surakarta 8 days earlier with the same weapon. It was learned further that there was a plan to murder the judge and the public prosecutor who tried the case of H. Ismail Pranoto in 1979. Also exposed was the robbery of almost 4.5 million rupiahs (salary for IAIN employees) in February, 1979 by Musa's gang. And on 31 March 1979 there was an attempt, which failed, to steal the staff's wages at the Malang Teachers College (32 million rupiahs). Abdullah Umar and Harun were captured in Malang, East Java.

The person called Musa actually was none other than Warman himself. Born in Central Java, Warman joined up with the Kartosuwiryo Darul Islam/Indonesian Islamic Army band in West Java during his youth.

After the Kartosuwiryo band was wiped out by the volunteer service, Warman joined those who were transmigrating to Lampung in South Sumatra. But later from his new residence he was able to recoup once again, and he continued to foment disorder. He masterminded the theft of the gold shop in Tasikmalaya on 9 April 1980, the robbery of the Sinar Jaya gold shop in Bandung on 31 March 1980, the robbery of the Save and Borrow Cooperative in the Cikijing Majalengka subdistrict in April 1980, the robbery of the gold shop in Subang, the robbery of the teachers' wages in Banjarsari Ciamis on 3 May 1980 and the Rajapolah case in which two policemen were killed on 22 August 1980. All were planned by Warman.

It was learned that after Warman had wandered about for approximately 3 years, finally he settled in the region around Bandung district. The intelligence units of the 6th Military Region Command, which also were the anti-terrorist team, quietly began to pick up the trail.

On Thursday, 23 July around 2:30 in the morning, a small team stole up to a little 3 meter by 5 meter hut in Soreang Kolot and surrounded it. It was still pitch dark and no one could be seen moving about. But voices of the villagers began to be heard. Apparently they were getting up to eat the post-midnight meal [during Ramadan].

A voice ordered Warman to surrender and come out. All grew still in the hut. Then the officers repeated the order to surrender. Warman, who really was inside, apparently began to realize he was surrounded. Bur rather than heed the command to surrender, he threatened anyone who tried to capture him.

Finally the well-trained officers threw smoke bombs on the roof of Warman's hut. This seemed to work, because all the residents swarmed out of their homes to avoid the acrid smoke. But the fugitive Warman couldn't be seen. Apparently he hadn't come out of the door but had tried to escape through the rear bamboo wall. He was stunned when he got through the wall. Seeing that escape there was futile, he reentered the hut. Finally, because of the choking smoke, he broke out the side wall while spraying bullets from his 45 calliber Browning FN. Here, then, he was killed by the authorities.

LABOR SAID TO DISTRUST BARGAINING COMMITTEES

Jakarta KOMPAS in Indonesian 17 Jul 81 pp 1, 12

[Excerpt] The Labor Arbitration Team is not a legally-established body and for that reason workers do not have to abide by its decisions. According to the Labor Law, only P4 Pusat and P4 Daerah are recognized as official labor arbitration boards. So stated Dr Yap Thiam Hien in response to a KOMPAS reporter's question Tuesday afternoon concerning the recent formation of the Labor Arbitration Team under a directive of the minister of manpower and transmigration.

But, said Yap, the government action to form this team cannot yet be said to be in opposition to the law as long as that action does not violate basic labor rights or other regulations. Yet, if the government simply relies on P4 Pusat and P4 Daerah to arbitrate labor disputes, that doesn't mean all problems will vanish, Workers have not even trusted P4 and P4D for quite some time. "What workers still have faith in those institution?" asked Yap. In fact, management controls the bodies which arbitrate labor disputes. And that is no longer a secret, said Yap.

According to Yap, members of the World Council of Churches and Indonesia's well-known senior attorneys tend to think that the workers are going to be pacified. And there is already an established way to do that. But the problem is that labor has not trusted the legal channels for so long that it is now looking for a shortcut by appealing to parliament. It is precisely actions like this that the government is trying to prevent.

By opting for the court system now, labor's problem is can it wait 3 or 4 years for disputes to be settled. Actually management's own tactic is to use the court system. What it means is that if you aren't happy with P4's decision, appeal to the courts. "So where are the guarantees for labor?" asked Yap.

Labor has a right to request parliament's attention insofar as that approach is considered the most effective way for labor to make its case. It is clear, though, the route through parliament is not only a judicial approach but also a political one. What is wrong with a political approach, asks Yap, if it remains within existing legal bounds?

Those cases in which workers were forbidden to seek legal assistance are, according to Yap, disturbing signs. "Illegal," he said, "Don't forget, workers are citizens too. Apart from whether workers are of high or low estate, in our nation all must obey the law. And because we are a nation under the law, equal rights for all are also written into the 1945 Constitution. On that basis, workers are included among those who have a right to seek legal assistance.

TIN AGREEMENT SUPPORTED

[Excerpts] Prof Dr J. Katili, director general of General Mining, has proposed that the text of the sixth International Tin Agreement be ratified immediately by the government. During the fourth set of discussions in Geneva 9-26 July, a majority of the representatives of the consuming and producing nations, except for the United States and Bolivia, accepted the text of the agreement.

In his statement Friday, Katili, who had led the Indonesian delegation in the Geneva meetings, said that agreement on the text was reached because of the like-mindedness of the producing nations (ASEAN specifically), the skill of the negotiators and the resolve of the moderator, Peter Lai, from Malaysia.

The text has been submitted to each of the governments, but final ratification is to take place in the UN General Assembly in New York beginning 3 August.

According to Katili, there is no more room for compromise. Indonesia should accept the text as it is because a new principle has been included in the agreement, concerning obligatory contributions that must be paid by producers and consumers alike.

Compared to previous tin agreements, he said, the sixth International Tin Agreement has made progress in achieving a balanced accord on the mutual responsibility of producers and consumers alike. "But in the future perhaps the tin market will continue to be as depressed as it has been," he said.

In response to a question on what it would if the United States did not join in ratifying the agreement, the director general said that it could have a profound effect, especially if the U.S. continues to release its reserves. But Katili still believes the United Stated as a large nation will not act irresponsibly, all the more since the United Stated itself knows that releasing reserves can ruin the market. "Even though the United States is now releasing its reserves only a little at a time, we continue to oppose such action because it is done at a time when the price of tin is declining," he said.

In repsonse to a question on production plans, chief director of PT Timah [Tin Company], A. R. Ramly, yesterday said plans set for 1981 will continue to be carried out. In order to keep to that schedule, PT Timah must become more efficient and more competitive. It also must revise its budget up to 15 percent over earlier figures.

By remaining efficient, he said, Indonesia will prevail over those producers who are less so. He said that tin production costs in Indonesia are far lower than they are in Bolivia or Nigeria. Compared to other countries, Ramly said, Indonesia is "most fortunate" to have such easily accessible, large reserves. Even compared to Malaysia or Thailand, Indonesia is still in a better position, because the mining process all the way to the smelting stage is handled by Indonesians themselves.

SHIPBUILDING PROJECTIONS, CAPABILITIES

Jakarta HARIAN UMUM AB in Indonesian 30 Jul 81 p 3

[Excerpts] Of the 275 ships and barges of different sorts and sizes being built in the drydocks of Iperindo [Indonesian Shipping Industry Association] members during 1980-81, 127 should be completed by mid-1982. The rest should be finished at the beginning of the following year.

Soelarto Hadisoemarto, general chairman of Iperindo, said that the order for 275 new ships is significant because it means valuable job opportunities for the Indonesian shipbuilding industry.

According to Hadisoemarto, a large number of orders has been placed because at the end of 1980 the director general of sea communications made an out-of-budget order for 97 ships. Other orders placed include 8 ships for the army's Transport Service, 10 ferryboats for the director general of land communications, 20 ships for Pertamina [National Oil and Natural Gas Company] and 60 vessels for private firms.

Large tonnage vessels that have been built in domestic shipyards for the first time include a 3,000 DWT barge, a 3,200 horsepower tugboat, a 40 ton harbor patrol boat and a 1,030 DWT twin mud transport vessel. In the past Indonesian drydocks have built 2,500 ton lift capacity floating docks, 1,000 DWT freighters and passenger ships, 400 BRT passenger or transport ferries, 950 DWT "white" oil tankers and 1,100 cubic meter per hour suction bore dredges.

Iperindo's secretary general, Wasono N. A., also explained that about 70-80 percent of the basic construction materials, machines and equipment for the ships still must be imported. He said that no import duty is levied on these goods in compliance with the government's wishes for the domestic shipping industry. But quite a long time is needed for the imported items to arrive at the shipyards. That is why Indonesian shipbuilding construction time is still behind that of foreign countries.

Soelarto said further that the director general of sea communications may order 200 ships in 1982-83. If placed in domestic shipyards, the order would represent an excellent opportunity for the development and expansion of Indonesia's shipping industry.

According to Soelarto, it is time for the shipbuilding industry to expand its capabilities and build ships from 1,000-5,000 DWT. Till now the drydocks have been capable of constructing vessels only up to 1,000 DWT.

Members of Iperindo feel that because each kind of ship is to be reproduced a number of times, it would be best if each drydock were to receive orders for only one kind of ship and make use of the "series" method. For instance, one drydock could be given the job of building 3-5 coasters of 1,000 DWT all at once. Another might build 3-5 animal transport vessels of 1,200 DWT all at one time.

MECCA-MEDINA TELEPHONE CONTRACT--A 16.7 billion rupiah extended contract on the Mecca-Medina telephone project between Dong Ah Construction Ltd. and the Consortium of Indonesian Businesses was signed at the end of July in Riyadh, according to a PT Elnusa [Indonesian Electronics Co.] press release on Tuesday. Not many details on the project were given, but evidently Dong Ah, a South Korean firm, landed the telecommunications contract from the Saudi Government. The Consortium of Indonesian Businesses is to be sub-contractor. According to the press report, last year the Mecca-Medina project ran into trouble in meeting construction deadlines. But schedules were brought up to date through the assistance of the Indonesian Government and PT ICCI (Indonesian Consortium of Construction Industries). Part of the project involves construction of a telephone cable network in the Plain of 'Arafat, which will make international direct dialing possible. This means that pilgrims coming to the plain can dial directly to countries outside of Saudi Arabia without having to contact the operator. [Text] [Jakarta KOMPAS in Indonesian 16 Jul 81 p 2] 9792

HELICOPTER SQUADRON REACTIVATION--Gen. Ashadi Tjahjadi, Air Force chief of staff, officially reactivated the 8th Heavy-lift Helicopter Squadron of the 004 Operation Wing at Atang Senjaya Air Base in Bogor Tuesday. During the ceremony the Air Force chief of staff installed Lt. Col. Soeparman as commander of the 8th Squadron. The squadron was first activated on 22 May 1965 with its main strength being the Soviet MI-6 helicopter. But because of political developments and the lack of guarantees for spare parts from the manufacturing country, the big MI-6 helicopters couldn't be used any more and the 8th Squadron was frozen. Now that the squadron has been reactivated, the 004 Operation Wing in the United Air Fighter Command can be restored to its initial strength. The command consists of the following: The 7th Squadron, which has Bell 204B and Bell "Sious" helicopters, the 6th Squadron, which has Sikorsky "Twin Pack" helicopters, the 8th Squadron, with SA-330 "Puma" helicopters, and the 024 Technical Squadron. Tjahjadi said the Air Force is gradually reactivating attack fighter squadrons, fighter bombers, heavy transport planes, helicopters and training systems. EDITORIAL EXPRESSES CONCERN OVER AIR SPACE VIOLATIONS

[Editorial: "A Dangerous Trend"]

[Text] Grave concern will be expressed over the latest incident of violation of Pakistan air space by Afghan jet fighters and attack on a border post in Baluchistan. According to a Press note of the Ministry of Defence, two Afghan MIG-17 aircraft intruded into Pakistan territory on Sunday morning and flew over the Domandi border post for about 20 minutes. They circled over the area four times and in their fifth run strafed the post. Pakistan's ground forces took necessary defensive measures and the post remained unharmed. This is the second time in less than a month that Afghan aircraft have strafed the Domandi post. In the first week of September Afghan planes attacked the area twice, which resulted in injury to two civilians and damage to the building of the post. Pakistan lodged a strong protest with Kabul over this brazen intrusion and also informed the U.N. Secretary-General of the Afghan trangression.

It is clear that Kabul is following a policy of escalating border tension in a deliberate and pre-meditated manner. Unprovoked raids across the border by Afghan forces have been taking place over the past two years, but lately they have increased both in frequency and intensity. Last month Afghan armed personnel along with heavy vehicles penetrated one mile deep into Pakistan territory and harassed people in the village Shahbaz Kili in Baluchistan. The intruding aircraft do not any more make a show of straying by mistake but stay for up to half an hour in our territory in an act of open provocation. The intention of the Kabul authorities seems clear. It is to put pressure on Pakistan and make it abandon its principled stand on the Afghanistan issue. By creating tension along the border the Karmal regime also perhaps intends to divert world attention from the worsening crisis at home and the growing strength of the Afghan resistance. Pakistan has so far acted with exemplary restraint in a bid to avoid any untoward situation developing but, given the increased recklessness on the part of the Kabul authorities, it will have to strengthen its border defences as a safeguard against further intrusions. Secondly, Islamabad must take steps to give wide publicity to incidents of border violation so that the international community is kept properly informed of the dangers to peace posed by the Kabul rulers' deliberate attempt to extend the area of conflict beyond the frontiers of Afghanistan.

NUMBER OF PAKISTANIS SEEKING ASYLUM IN W. BERLIN INCREASING

Karachi MORNING NEWS in English 5 Oct 81 p 3

[Text] Berlin, Oct. 4--A new wave of Pakistanis seeking asylum is apparently breaking upon West Berlin.

Last month 418 Pakistanis put in appeals here for asylum, over 150 more than in August.

Interior Ministry spokesman Hans Birkenbeaul told journalists on Friday that unscrupulous agents bringing Pakistanis to Berlin were clearly renewing their activities.

During 1977 and 1978 there was a strong influx of Pakistanis into Berlin. Over 10000 asylum seekers were registered during the period, some equipped with illegal passports. The authorities managed to stop the swell by large scale deportations.

In September no Tamils from Sri Lanka came here seeking asylum. Twenty-seven Lankans who had arrived during earlier months were officially registered last month, but the big inflow of July had petered out, the spokesman said.

During the first nine months of this year a total of 10.034 asylum seekers came to Berlin, more than during the whole of 1980. The majority were Arabs, mainly Lebanese and stateless Palestinians.

The number of Turkish nationals coming in had, however, fallen off, apparently because of the one-year ban on working permits.

Birkenbeul said between 10,000 and 12,000 asylum seekers were presently living in West Berlin. The number of those entering West Germany from Berlin was on the increase.

Last year the figure had been only nine percent, while during the first six months of this year it had risen to 25 percent.--DPA

EDITORIAL CRITICAL OF INDUSTRIAL POLICIES

Peshawar KHYBER MAIL in English 6 Oct 81 p 3

[Editorial: "Self-Reliance"]

[Text]

This country's acute financial straits though are not due to any temporary tripping down on a short-term policy but due to the cumulative effect of policies pursued from the very beginning and further accentuated during the period 1970-77. The territories of Pakistan were the most undeveloped regions of the South Asian sub-continent. There was no industry worth the name. We had to start from the beginning. It was appreciated from the outset that even a bumper agricultural production cannot do away with the basic poverty of the people. The agricultural layout earns one-twelfth of its industrial counterpart. There is, more or less the same ratio in the prices of the end products of either. For a raising of the standards of living industrialisation was a must. Naturally, there were other considerations which dictated this outlook. So the country had to be industrialized and rapidly too. Rapidly because the availability of consumer and other goods which were the result of an overall industrial machine common to the whole of the sub-continent, had been cut off because of the fresh drawing up of new borders. A complete dependence on its own resources would have resulted in reduction in the standards of living. The first mistake we committed, however, was that in order to build up not only our industry but also our cities and towns and all that they required we took the advice of foreigners. In this we played right into the hands of the imperialists who were switching on from a political colonialism to an economic one. They laid down Master Plans which ensured an enormous demand for requisite paraphernalia which cut deep into our foreign exchange resources, leaving little for industrialisation. For that they offered us financial aid which might not have political strings attached (as was repeatedly claimed but with a doubtful essential), but there were definitely economic strings. If we wanted certain type of machineries, they offered others, and these had to depend heavily on imported spare parts and even certain type of raw materials which we did not have.

Our first concern was the setting up of the textile industry, for which we had the raw material, cotton, but no machinery and dyestuffs. Easy availability of these through so-called "generous" assistance loans, forced us to depend on them for these and no steps were taken by us to set up our own indigenous plans to manufacture them. We, therefore, went for a rapid expansion of the textile industry without caring to organise our own factories for the constant flow of spares and dyes. They had to be imported even now. If we don't, we run the risk of having our textile production to close down. This has resulted in our being tied to their apron-strings for getting them or run the risk of bringing the industry to a standstill. On the other hand we went for other manufactures in order to widen our industrial potential. As a result of the expansion of these industries, we tied ourselves not only to foreign assistance but also depended on raw materials and spares from them. a vestige of a fake prosperity was achieved by a limited section of our people who used it to raising their standards of living very high, making it imperative for the import of luxury items to satisfy them. These include endless fleets of motor-cars, air-conditioners, building-materials, and innumerable little items which add up to a gigantic figure. None of these are produced locally, and a fat slice had to be taken away from our foreign currency bill.

We can take a small lead out of the economic policies of our neighbour, India. They do not import much, and that too when it is absolutely necessary. As a result they seem to live a little austerely, but have no terrifying problems of foreign exchange. The money thus saved they are using to adding more to the expansion of their industrial potential. They may not look prosperous but they have contentment. A start had been made some time ago to set the awry picture right, here in Pakistan. The setting up of the Heavy Machinery Complex, the plan of the Steel Mills etc, were attempts in that direction though they hardly touch the frings of our problems. We have to set up our own dye-stuffs industry, make our own radios and television (not just assemble them), and take to using our cycles instead of flashy motor-cars, as the present regime advises us.

GROW MORE WHEAT CAMPAIGN LAUNCHED

Karachi BUSINESS RECORDER in English 8 Oct 81 p 1

[Text] Islamabad, Oct 7--Minister for Food and Agriculture, Vice-Admiral Mohammad Fazil Janjua today announced a production target of 12.2 million tons of wheat for the coming crop while launching a grow more wheat campaign.

The new target envisaged an increase of 7.2 per cent over the last year's actual production of 11.38 million tons.

Addressing a press conference here today, the minister said there would be no shortage of agricultural inputs including loans, fertilizers and the certified seeds and was confident that the country would have a record crop.

He said the country had become self-sufficient in wheat yet the present growth rate has to be maintained and accelerated to meet the growing demand and guard against natural hazards.

Based on recommendations of agricultural scientists, extension workers and farmers, Admiral Janjua said the grow more wheat campaign provides for increase in per acre yield rather than the area in which no rise was expected. He said farmers will be provided loans to buy agricultural inputs and WAPDA has been instructed to meet demands of tube-well operators.

He said availability of certified seeds was being increased by 20 per cent and fertilizer offtake by 25 per cent.

He thought that with the proper application of fertilizer and seeds the country could easily exceed production targets.

The Agriculture Minister said that President Mohammad Zia-ul-Haq wanted complete coordination among official agencies and full access for farmer to increased crop production technology and agricultural inputs.

The minister said farmers were aware of the significance of the use of certified seeds, proper fertilizers and timely sowing and steps are being taken to streamline the supply of inputs. Already, he said there had been growth in usage of agricultural machinery fertilizer and certified seeds.

Last year, he said 90 per cent of wheat was thrashed by mechanical threshers in Punjab alone. He said the government was encouraging the mechanised farming. He said 20,000 tractors were being imported this year.

Credits

The minister said credit targets have been increased from last year's actual distribution of Rs 4000 million to Rs 5427 million and of this Rs 3699 million were production loans.

Replying to a question, he said that government has been extending interest-free loans to small farmers as a matter of policy. Rs 719 million were distributed last year through commercial banks and Federal Bank of Cooperatives.

About the availability of water, he said it was expected to increase this year due to installation of more tube-wells and measures to assure the supply of diesel oil and to prevent the electric load shedding for tubewell feeder.

The minister said there could be an increase of 15 to 20 per cent in wheat yield by sowing certified seeds and in case of cotton 100 per cent of the area was under certified seeds.

Replying to a question, he said 13.45 lakh maunds of disease resisting seed would be sold to farmers during 1981-82. This was about 41 per cent of the total requirements (33.10 lakh maund) and the balance would be met by farmers through their own seed or purchasing from private sector. He said barani areas, which contributes 12 per cent towards the national production was already 50 per cent under approved seed programme.

The minister was confident that with the timely sowing proper application of inputs and a favourable weather, the country will have a bumper crop this year. APP

RAHIMYARKHAN FERTILIZER COMPLEX--Pan Islamic Fertilizer Complex being set up at Rahimyarkhan in the private sector will go in production in 1985, informed sources said in Karachi yesterday. The complex, said to be one of the largest in Pakistan, would produce 1725 urea and 500 ton dia-ammonium phosphate daily. The plant and machinery for the complex is negotiated from the United Kingdom under the terms of suppliers credit for a 15 year period. With the coming in production of this project, the country would save Rs 940 million annually in the share of import substitution. Rs 1250 million has been arranged by the sponsors as nonrepatriable investment in Pakistan. Till date, the sanctioned capacity of fertilizer units in operation in the country is 1833250 ton urea and 242150 ton of phosphatic fertilizer. The country is annually importing 354.81 n/ton urea and 124.70 n/ton phosphatic fertilizers to meet its requirements.--APP [Text] [Karachi BUSINESS RECORDER in English 8 Oct 81 p 1]

BANK BRANCH IN BEIJING--Beijing, Oct 5--The National Bank of Pakistan has opened a representative office in Beijing, its first branch in China and sixth in the region. It already has four branches in Hong Kong and one in Tokyo. This follows a visit to China by the bank President, Mr Mohammed Nawaz Khan during which he had held talks with his Chinese counterparts for extending cooperation between the financial institutions of the two countries. Need for the representative office of the National Bank of Pakistan in Beijing was felt in view of the growing trade and financial relations between China and Pakistan. To begin with the Bank has opened its representative office in a local hotel and will engage itself principally in liaison work which about a dozen other foreign banks in Peking are also doing. In due course of time it may along with other banks be licensed to do full banking business. Mr Gul N. LENTIL SHORTAGE--The Adviser to the President on Business Coordination and Internal Trade, Sh. Ishrat Ali, in Lahore on Monday remarked that the responsibility of present pulses crisis rested equally on the shoulders of private sector, growers, PASSCO, utility stores and Coops. He was replying to a question as to whether the Government had determined the responsibility of the present crisis. Sh. Ishrat Ali said while the production of pulses last year was about 30 percent less than the preceding year, the growers as well as all the aforesaid agencies also contributed in aggravating the pulses crisis by hoarding pulses in anticipation of enhanced returns. Sh. Ishrat Ali hoped that the situation would ease when the imported pulses reached the market. In reply to another question the Presidential Adviser said that the imported pulses cost about Rs 7.50 per kg at the Karachi Port and that the retail prices in other parts of the country should not exceed Rs 8.50/9.00 per kg. When his attention was drawn to reports about inferior quality of pulses being sold by the PASSCO, he said the Government would take stern action against the PASSCO officials, if the samples taken from the PASSCO store proved of inferior quality.--PPI. CONSUMER RELIEF PLAN--Rawalpindi, Oct 5--The very launching of the Agricultural Marketing and Storage Limited (AMSL), which was aimed at ensuring unhindered supply of eatables to consumers at reasonable rates has been delayed by several months. The AMSL, a subsidiary of the Federal Bank for Cooperatives with the Governor of State Bank of Pakistan as its ex-officio Chairman, was registered in March this year to relieve the consumer from the pressure tactics of market manipulators. The organisation which was to start functioning immediately is however yet to emerge. The delay in its launching is stated to have been caused by the nonavailability of the expertise to run the organisation in accordance with its charter. The new organisation which has been floated with a share capital of Rs 100 million was assigned the task of undertaking necessary measures for supporting and stabilising prices of the agricultural produce of all categories and protect the interest of both the producers and consumers. The idea of setting up this multi-dimensional organisation was conceived in view of the failure of the Pakistan Agricultural Supply and Storage Corporation (PASSCO) and the Utility Stores Corporation which have miserably failed to do the job. RICE MAXIMIZATION PROJECT--Lahore, Oct 4--The Federal Minister for Food, Agriculture and Cooperatives, Vice-Admiral Mohammad Fazal Janjua expressed great satisfaction on the achievements of rice maximisation project which he visited near Lahore yesterday. The project has been launched by the Pakistan Agricultural Research Council (PARC) in 12 villages of the Sadhoke Union Council to demonstrate the results of adopting improved practices with balanced use of inputs for increasing the productivity of rice. The demonstration fields visited by the Minister presented a real good look of bumper crops. Dr Amir Muhammad, Chairman, PARC told the Minister that the expected increase in production in the project fields was in the range of 50 to 70 percent. Addressing a gathering of rice growers in a nearby rest-house, the Minister congratulated those who had adopted the package of new technology for producing more rice. He suggested that other farmers of adjoining areas should visit the demonstration fields in large number and learn the details of improved production strategy from the production teams. The Minister said the government was keen to extend all facilities to the farmers, particularly with small holdings, to improve their lot. Recently, he said, the price of paddy and rice were enhanced keeping in view the cost of production incurred by the farmers. Earlier, the Minister visited the demonstration rice farms of the Punjab Agriculture Department in the Sheikhupura district.--APP [Text] [Islamabad THE MUSLIM in English 5 Oct 81 p 6]

WHEAT INSPECTION TEAMS--Karachi, Oct 4--Special inspection teams have been constituted to check the dispatches and arrivals of wheat stocks, effectively and expeditiously to find out discrepancies, if any. This was stated by a spokesman of the Sind Food Department following reports in a section of the Press alleging that government wheat worth Rs 10 million had disappeared. The spokesman termed the news report as highly exaggerated and misleading. He said, the food department was already carrying out thorough checking of the consignments despatched from various points in the interior of the province. This checking, he said, was done as a routine exercise with a view to tallying the despatches from upcountry with actual arrivals in Karachi. To expedite the checking, the government had appointed special teams, he said, adding that this work is in full swing and will be completed soon. Prompt and severe action, the spokesman said would be taken against the responsible staff as well as the contractor, if any discrepancy or missing stock was detected. He said, the food department had always been vigilant to check any discrepancies in handling of the procured wheat stocks which, he said was a sacred public trust. He said, recently some stocks of wheat were found damaged by rains in Nawabshah and Sanghar Districts due to negligence of the concerned officials. STATUS OF GEN ATHIT EXAMINED AS A RESULT OF ANNUAL PROMOTIONS, TRANSFERS

Bangkok SU ANAKHOT in Thai 27 Sep-3 Oct 81 pp 9-12

[Text] "The basis for these appointments and transfers of officers is that the individuals concerned must be those who will make sacrifices for the common good, be honest and of good character and [is a question of] whether they really do the job." This is the statement of Gen Prayut Charumanee, RTA CINC as he talked to intimates, adding, "There are some senior people who aren't worth a damn."

And things went from there. When the results of the annual transfers of officers were formally announced to the public in the afternoon of 24 Sep, [it was said that] for the various positions in the RTA changes would be based on "knowledge, ability and suitability more than seniority."

"Don't forget that in the RTA there are a total of three people with the authority to make transfers. They are Gen Prem Tinsulanon, prime minister and minister of defense; TRA CINC Gen Prayut Charumanee and Lt Gen Athit Kamlang-ek, First Army commander," said sources in the RTA.

"It is certain that these are really big changes because it is a complete housecleaning of the old staff and an intake of a new team who will be able to work with all three [of the above men]."

"Moreover, it opens the way for Lt Gen Athit to become the next RTA CINC next year and that is for sure," said the same source.

Prem-Athit Holding Positions of Power

The notable aspect in this shuffle of army officers is the creation of a new power base for General Prem in particular. Because regardless of whether it is in the position of Deputy RTA CINC Gen Sak Buntrakun, or RTA Assistant CINC--and it is expected that these will be Acting First Army commander Lt Gen Athit Kamlang-ek, or Army Chief of Staff Lt Gen Pramote Thawonchan and Vice Chief of Staff Lt Gen Patnom Sermsin--they are all General Prem's men.

"Just like Lt Gen Pramote who had been deputy commander of the 2d Army region ISOC [Internal Security Operations Command]; he was Pa's [somewhat pejorative term for Prem] man," said the source in the RTA. "As for General Prayut's man, it looks like there is just one: Lt Gen Seup Aksaranukroh, the new vice chief of staff. General Prayut had been his patron since right after he had graduated from the military academy."

The deputy commander and subordinate slots are filled by people who might be called "friends" or those who really do belong to Lt Gen Athit Kamlang-ek, whether it is 2d Army Commander Maj Gen Phak Minakanit or Lt Gen Han Leenanon, commander of the 4th Army Region or Maj Gen Sin Kertsombun who went from being 9th Division commander to be First Army deputy commander. All of them were in class 5 of the military academy, in the same class with Lt Gen Athit Kamlang-ek.

In this shuffle of troop commanders, those playing a big role were members of class 1 of the military academy and it can be said that they are General Athit's men including Maj Gen Chaichana [?Thamrichat] the commander of the 1st Cavalry Division, Col Sunthon Khongsomphong, commander of the Army Aviation Center, Col Wanchai Reuangtrakun, First Army chief of staff, Col Panya Singsakda, commander of the 5th Division, Col Charuay Wongsayan, commander of the 2d Army circle and Col Somkhit Chongphayuha, commander of the 9th Division who is replacing Maj Gen Sin Kertsombun.

There have been no changes in the commanders of troop units in the First and Second Army regions. Maj Gen Phichit Kunlawanit is 1st Division commander and Maj Gen Prachum Phibulaphanuvat is commander of the 2d Division.

Athit Getting Strong, Thought to Hold Two Slots

That Lt Gen Athit Kamlang-ek has moved up to hold the position of RTA Assistant CINC has made it necessary to move Gen Chamnan Nilawiset, the original incumbent, up to deputy undersecretary of defense. This is generally felt to be a complete removal from Army circles.

"General Chamnan is hardly likely to raise the battle flag because he has said that he must obey the orders of the commander," a colonel not on active duty close to General Chamnan said, giving his opinions after the results of the annual appointments and transfers had become known.

This transfer of General Chamnan had been expected. General Chamnan had known about this before it happened saying that he had no way to climb up to the position of RTA CINC because, aside from coming from the quartermaster corps which is only a combat support outfit, he was still close to and on good terms with the "young turks," especially Col Manoon Rupkhachon.

There are reports that another important figure will receive the command of either the First or Fourth Army region. That is Maj Gen Yuthasak Khlongtruatroke, the commander of the military academy. This must be the case because he was transfered into a "lieutenant general" slot as adviser to the Army. It can be said that this was most unexpected.

"Maj Gen Yuthasak has been in conflict with people from many quarters and so he can't get on General Prayut's staff," said the above-mentioned news source in the RTA, stating that "He is in conflict on almost every matter and so the commander felt that he can't work together with him." The views of the colonel not on active duty are that "Maj Gen Yuthasak has been having problems with Lt Gen Athit since the events of 1-3 April. This is because on 2 April, Maj Gen Yuthasak went with Gen Kriangsak Chamnan to negotiate a peaceful settlement, acting as a middle-man. Then Lt. Gen Athit asked both of them to leave the room, saying that he would be having discussions with the higher-ups. This slighted General Kriangsak and Maj Gen Yuthasak and since then, they have not been on speaking terms."

Therefore, with the appointment of Lt Gen Athit Kamlang-ek as RTA Assistant CINC, those officers not in his clique have lost their opportunity "to compete." It looks like this has made things smoother in the RTA, but they will be even smoother if Lt Gen Athit stays on as acting commander of First Army. This means that he will be in control of two important posts at once.

"I couldn't say who will be the next First Army Commander. You'd have to ask the RTA CINC, because he is my commander," Lt Gen Athit said after he learned of the appointments.

A Green Light All the Way--Waiting in Line for RTA CINC Job

High-level posts in the RTA, which presently include Gen Prayut Charumanee, RTA CINC, Gen Sak Buntrakun, deputy RTA CINC, Lt Gen Phaichit Somsuwan, Assistant RTA CINC will all be vacated by mandatory retirement next year.

"Lt Gen Phaichit Somsuwan came up from being assistant RTA comptroller and although he has no way of becoming RTA CINC, when he reaches mandatory retirement age next year, it will open the way for Lt Gen Athit to move up to be RTA CINC. There will be absolutely no problem," said the colonel not on active duty. "Things will be all set up to open the way free and clear for Lt Gen Athit to hold the power in the RTA next year without doubt."

"In all units, Lt Gen Athit's men are all over," said the aforementioned source, adding that "at this time people with the rank of major are holding down deputy battalion commander slots, lieutenant colonels are holding down jobs from battalion commander all the way to regimental commander. Special colonel types and those belonging to former RTA CINC Gen Amnat Damrikan who passed away have joined up with Lt Gen Athit."

Therefore, it is pretty much certain that Lt Gen Athit Kamlang-ek will be able to rise to RTA CINC. There is no doubt about this. He will be able to hold the slot for 3 years because he will reach mandatory retirement age in 1985.

Conclusion

"Don't ask me to criticize. If the water flows fast, don't make the boat to go against the current. I'd like to reserve comment to see what the media says. We all know what is going on. I'd just like to say nothing." These were the words of Maj Gen Yuthasak Khlongtruatroke who was moved into a "floating" position, that of adviser to the RTA at the same time as Gen Pin Thammasiri, deputy RTA CINC was about to reach mandatory retirement age this month. He said "I don't know the transfers took place like this now that I think about it...but I'd rather not say anything. It would be better not to voice an opinion."

No matter when officers are appointed or transfered, there are going to be voices of approval and voices of protest. It is this way every year.

The voices of approval come from those who got jobs they are satisfied with and the voices of protest come from those who are not happy with what they got. Justice in the RTA is served up by the commander who is more just than anything.

That Lt Gen Athit Kamlang-ek went from 2d Army deputy commander to First Army commander and then up to RTA Assistant CINC in less than a full year shows what the future holds for this man and for the RTA as a whole. Time will tell whether the 1981 military shuffle will lead to unity or divisiveness in the RTA.

POLICY ON FOREIGN STUDENTS, STUDIES ABROAD NOTED

Madras THE HINDU in English 21 Sep 81 p 10

[Text] New Delhi, Sept 20--The Education Ministry, in consultation with the External Affairs Ministry, is now formulating a scheme to regulate and monitor the education of foreign students in India.

The need for this has been felt in the context of the spurt in demand from foreign students for educational facilities. There are at present about 25,000 of them in different parts of the country and every year their number is increasing by at least 3,000.

The presence of such a large number with different cultural backgrounds often leads to problems of adjustment with the local community and sometimes there are unpleasant incidents. Unless steps are taken to prevent this, the students will carry back to their countries unpleasant memories.

Three Categories

There are three categories of foreign students: 1. Those studying on Government scholarships under cultural exchange programmes; 2. those deputed by their respective Governments under bilateral agreements; and 3. those who are called self-financing.

In the case of the first two categories, there is no problem as they are sponsored by the Government and their intake can be regulated.

But in the case of self-financing students, the position is different. Anyone with a valid visa can get admission in a college here provided a seat is available and there is no dearth of institutions to offer them seats as that will bring in more money.

In fact, the mushrooming of capitation fee institutions in cities like Bangalore is attributed to this demand from foreign students, especially those from Iran. Apart from these, private educational institutions have come up which offer on payment certificates and diplomas equivalent to the basic qualification required for admission to a degree course.

First Step

For quite some time now, the authorities have been exercised over this and considering remedial measures. As a first step, the intake of self-financing students has been regulated by stipulating that only those cleared by their respective Governments and having "student visas" can be admitted.

The programme, now being formulated, seeks to ensure that the students have sufficient knowledge of English to follow the lessons and that their progress is monitored regularly.

If any foreign student is found deficient in his basic attainments to pursue the course of his choice, he will be given special coaching. Similarly, in the course of his studies, he will be helped to get adjusted to the local cultural and social environment.

A central agency to implement the programme is contemplated.

Soviet Offer Not Accepted

The growing demand from foreign students for study facilities is regarded as indicative of the extent of facilities available here for higher education. In view of this, the Union Government has been reluctant to allow Indian Students to go abroad for studies, except at doctoral and post doctoral levels.

In pursuance of this policy, it has politely turned down offers of scholarships from foreign Governments to Indians at undergraduate and post-graduate levels.

The Soviet Union, for instance, has been requesting the Indian Government to send students for its five-year integrated courses leading up to the graduate level. It has offered scholarships to these students upto post-doctoral courses.

But the feeling in official circles here is that if this is agreed to, the Indian student concerned will have to spend nearly 10 years in the Soviet Union and will find it difficult to get adjusted when he returns home. It is also felt that scholarships should be availed of only in fields where facilities are not adequately developed in India.

For the past two years, the Union Government has not been nominating any student for undergraduate courses in the Soviet Union.

G.K. REDDY: GOOD ECONOMIC TIES WITH U.S. POSSIBLE

Madras THE HINDU in English 21 Sep 81 p 6

[Article by G. K. Reddy]

[Text] New Delhi, Sept. 20 A conscious effort is being made by India to maintain a reasonably good working relationship with the U.S. in the economic sphere, despite the growing strains in its political dealings with the Reagan Administration.

The necessary steps are being taken to eliminate avoidable irritations in Indo-American relations to the extent possible in the present circumstances, without in any way compromising India's basic positions on issues like Kampuchea and Afghanistan, militarisation of the Indian Ocean and arming of Pakistan.

It is pointed out that the U.S. fixations on such issues, impinging on India's interests in the region, need not come in the way of a more equitable economic relationship between the two countries with an annual trade turn-over of over $3 billions, which has immense potentialities for expansion.

There is a vast grey zone in Indo-American relations where it is both possible and desirable to delink power politics from economic interests.

It is with this object in view that India has started actively exploring the possibilities of keeping up a credible distinction between differing political perceptions of global developments and mutuality of interests in increased economic cooperation.

Haig's Delhi Visit

The External Affairs Minister, Mr P. V. Narasimha Rao, who is due to leave for New York tomorrow to attend the U.N. General Assembly session, will try to persuade the U.S. Secretary of State, Mr Alexander Haig, not to put off his long overdue visit to Delhi to attend the much-postponed ministerial level meeting of the Indo-American Joint Commission.

Though he had agreed earlier to pay this visit some time this autumn, there have been no subsequent moves from the American side to decide on mutually convenient dates for the Joint Commission meeting to review and approve the agreed programmes for increased economic, technological scientific and cultural cooperation.

It has suggested that a final round of talks for terminating the fuel supply agreement should be held in November, before Mr Haig visits Delhi in December, according to the latest expectations.

Now that the U.S. has decided to go ahead with its military and package for Pakistan, there is very little purpose in the Prime Minister concentrating primarily on this issue during her meeting with President Reagan in Cancun.

The present Administration in Washington, with its closed mind, is not prepared to pay any attention to India's apprehensions.

Positive Aspects of Ties

But if the two countries can at least agree to disagree on the nature of the Soviet threat to the region, it should be possible for them to pay more attention to the positive aspects of their residuary relationship which provides enough scope for increased cooperation in non-political spheres.

It is to highlight this opportunity which is still open that India is taking steps to initiate a limited dialogue with the Reagan Administration.

The Finance Minister, Mr R Venkataraman, who left today to attend the annual Fund-Bank meetings, will also explore the possibilities during his stay in Washington.

And the part the U.S. plays behind the scenes in the finalisation of the IMF loan terms will indicate whether it is really interested in this two-dimensional approach to Indo-American relations.

GOVERNMENT SIGNS 1982 COOPERATION AGREEMENT WITH FRG

Bombay THE TIMES OF INDIA in English 24 Sep 81 p 7

[Text] New Delhi, September 23: India will receive DM 360 million (Rs 133.92 crores) as financial assistance for the year 1981-82 from the Federal Republic of Germany under an agreement signed between the two governments here today.

The agreement was preceded by negotiations on economic cooperation which began on September 21, in an atmosphere of mutual trust.

Mr M. R. Sivaraman, joint secretary in the ministry of finance, led the Indian delegation in the negotiations. The FRG delegation was led by Dr Franz Klamser, ministerial dirigent in the ministry for economic cooperation.

Out of the assistance provided by the Federal Republic of Germany, DM 235 million (Rs 87.42 crores) is earmarked for projects. The project aid will be used further to finance agricultural refinance and development corporation's credit project IV., Korba 500 mw turbo-generator set, the Neyveli lignite corporation's second mine cut and power station's expansion project.

The remainder of the assistance will go for import of capital goods, DM 40 million (Rs 14.88 crores) for the industrial development banks. DM 40 million (Rs 14.88 crores), and for commodity aid, DM 45.89 million (Rs 16.74 crores).

In addition, technical assistance in the form of equipment, services of experts and training facilities amounting to approximately DM 36 million (Rs 13.39 crores) will also be made available to India in the current year for the Indo-German technical corporation projects.

During the negotiations between the two governments, it was agreed that greater attention should be paid to rural development, including agriculture and water supply, development of energy resources and elimination of bottlenecks in the economy while selecting projects for Indo-German cooperation.

SUBRAMANIAN SWAMY REPORTS ON TIBET PILGRIMAGE

[Text] New Delhi, Sept 23--On his return here today, ahead of the 15-member party of pilgrims who visited Kailash and Mansarovar, Mr Subramanian Swamy, M.P., said that the Chinese authorities had told him that they would welcome more and more Indian pilgrims.

Mr Swamy suggested at a Press conference that a Kailash Mansarovar Yatra Samity on the pattern of the Haj committee should be formed to coordinate the activities of the various Government agencies involved in organizing the logistics of pilgrims travel.

He said that the border roads organization should be asked to build metalled roads along the Kali river up to Lipulakh at the border. The present trek route goes up and down causing unnecessary strain. Nepal has already built such a road along the bank of the Kali river.

He wanted a passport and foreign exchange office to be opened at Pithoragarh and asked the Government to take up with the Chinese the question of opening up the border trade, and also the issue of visas at Lipulakh or Taklakot.

Mr Swamy said he felt privileged to be the first Indian to reach Kailash and Mansarovar, where Indians could now go again after a lapse of 22 years. He also felt a sense of fulfillment because he was the first to raise the subject of opening the pilgrim route to Tibet in 1978 in course of his conversation with the Chinese Deputy Prime Minister, Mr Ji Peng-Fai, in Beijing. He continued to raise the matter in his subsequent visits to China--including in April, 1981, when he met Mr Deng Xiaoping.

Answering questions, Mr Swamy said when he raised the matter in 1978, "everyone said that the Chinese would never agree to the opening of the route because it was certain ramifications," but he knew it was a question of "creation of an atmosphere of friendship" between the two countries that would make it possible.

Mr Swamy said he believed that the solution of the border question was possible "if we can ensure this atmosphere of friendship." An Indian border team would be going to Beijing in November. There was already the "package proposal" of Mr Deng Xiaoping. The Government of India could also propose "an alternative package."

"Let us not talk on the basis of historical records, when looking at the border problem," he said, adding that even the joint communique (issued at the end of Foreign Minister, Mr Huang Hua's recent visit), talked of "national sentiments." It is this matter of national sentiments that has led to the reopening of the pilgrimage to Kailash and Mansarovar."

Mr Swamy said he had always maintained that the border problem should be settled on the basis of give and take. "Kailash-Mansarovar can come in this category of take." Mr Deng had proposed another package. "If the atmosphere is friendly, a few thousand square miles here and there do not matter."

He said his ideas and suggestions were only "conceptual." It would be for the representatives of Governments of the two countries to sit down, "and draw a line keeping in view their respective geographical or military aspects and interests."

Talking of his journey, Mr Swamy said the Ministry of External Affairs, particularly the China division, should be congratulated for getting the trip organized in a short time following Mr Huang's visit. Praiseworthy logistics support was given to pilgrims by the Indo-Tibetan border police, the U.P. Special Police Force, and the Kumaon Vikas Mandal Nigam, despite very trying conditions and inclement weather.

It took the pilgrims nine days of walking through difficult terrain to reach the Pithoragarh district-Tibet border at Lipulekh pass. This was at a height of 18,000 feet. Throughout the journey, the Indian villages received the pilgrims warmly and gave them refreshments, and presented Mr Swamy with memoranda demanding building of roads and reopening of the Indo-Tibetan border trade.

On the Chinese side, the people were friendly and treated the pilgrims well. "On the bank of the Mansarovar, a Lama ran out of his tent to welcome me and gave me tea and sugared puris. When I asked him what he was doing there, he said that Hindus would be coming to Mansarovar and he was there to give them all tea and refreshments."

ANANDA MARG DENIES HAND IN PLOT TO KILL GANDHI

Calcutta THE STATESMAN in English 24 Sep 81 p 10

[Text] Patna, Sept. 23--The Ananda Marg yesterday denied reports appearing in a section of the Press that it had entered into a conspiracy to assassinate the Prime Minister, reports UNI.

In a statement here, Acharya Shraddhananda, advocate for the general secretary, Ananda Marg Pracharaka Sangh, denied the allegation and said the Ananda Marg had nothing to do with such activities. He said "we condemn such activities if done by anybody anywhere.

"Ananda Marg has always asserted that it is a purely spiritual organization preaching yoga and doing social service to relieve the suffering humanity through education and relief," the statement added.

The alleged plot to assassinate Mrs Gandhi was reported to have been uncovered by the police with the arrest of two youths from Bihar. The police submitted that the two youths along with Prem Shankar Poddar of Calcutta had allegedly entered into a conspiracy to assassinate the Prime Minister at the instance of the Ananda Marg.

Police said the two youths were to carry out their plan during an election meeting at Ranchi on January 1 last year. The plan, however, failed as Mrs Gandhi did not visit Ranchi that day because of bad weather.

The sources said Poddar was a zonal secretary of the Proutist Bloc of India, political wing of the Ananda Marg. The other two also had close links with the organization.

Having failed to execute their plot in Ranchi, the suspects visited Delhi in August. They stayed at an unknown place in the capital for three days and "studied the route and the timings of the Prime Minister's motorcade."

CORRESPONDENT NOTES U.S. POLICY ON IMF LOAN

[Article from N. Ram]

WASHINGTON, Sept. 23.

Mr Donald Regan, U.S. Secretary of the Treasury, said on Monday, in a discussion with journalists on the eve of the annual meeting of the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank, that the U.S. did not think that IMF "should become another IDA", another "soft loan window".

He said this within the context of finding fault with IMF for allowing the conditionality of loans to poor developing countries to become lax in recent years and demanding that the terms be made "more strict".

Mr Regan, a private investment specialist, appeared to be targeting two entities with one stone when he said that.

Dr Beryl Sprinkel, a far-right economist, who is Under-Secretary of the Treasury for monetary affairs and one of the stridently articulate voices of the Reagan Administration, is handling these issues directly.

He went even further than his boss. "There has been slippage in recent years. We want to push the IMF's conditionality to where it was." These remarks came, interestingly, in a published interview.

Rigorous regime

The Wall Street Journal reports that many private financial analysts voice similar concerns, demanding that IMF immediately raise the rigour of its regime as "policeman of the world's monetary system" and trend-setter of conditions that sizable credit arrangements should carry.

It adds that the internal assessment by the U.S. Treasury Department is that the conditionality attached last year to the 1.268-billion SDR arrangement for the Government of Pakistan under the extended fund facility was not rigorous enough.

The absence of sufficient rigour could be seen in the failure to impose a "summary devaluation" on an "overvalued" currency and also in the lack of a specific indication as to "how far its import-liberalisation programme would go".

The report adds that IMF's action on India's application for a five billion SDR loan may be a "test case"—with pressure being applied by the U.S. and other "industrialised countries" on the Fund management to impose conditions harsher than those worked out in the negotiations.

The Treasury Department's "internal" critique of the functioning of IMF, the World Bank and other multilateral lending and development institutions became public even before Mr Regan or Dr Sprinkel spoke out—with the document falling into the hands of the Wall Street Journal.

Thorough scrutiny

At the moment at least, the U.S. Treasury and State Departments are approaching the issues, and especially the business of approving the loan for India, from different angles.

According to sources within the Administration, the Treasury Secretary appears to have woken up to the details of the Indian arrangement quite late in the game—but by no means too late to insist on thorough scrutiny of the scale and terms of the arrangement, applying the rigorous conservative standards spelt out in the critique.

On the other hand, the State Department's specialists on South Asia have publicly welcomed the IMF and World Bank arrangements or initiatives favouring the Zia regime. They have no quarrel whatever with the demand for increased rigour in the "conditionality", or for sharper teeth in the enforceability, of the Indian arrangement.

They are, as much as anyone in Washington is, for pushing the Government of India—using every lever and every means available—in the direction of monetarist, "supply side" oriented economic policies.

These policies mean more concessions to the private sector and to foreign capital, further liberalisation of import policy, tight reining in on money supply and deficit financing, more "realistic" valuation of the rupee, "de-regulation" of price and supply controls, elements of a wage freeze, restraint on "excess" demand conditions, and elimination or reduction of social subsidies.

The State Department specialists note with appreciation that, to a considerable extent, these are the policies and directions that have been prescribed by the Fund for oil-importing developing countries in recent pronouncements and documents.

They would, as much as Mr Regan or anyone else here, like to see IMF enforce more strictly the "conditionality" of its unprecedented loan in terms of these policies and to fine-tune the "performance clauses".

Deal to go through?

But they appear to be inclined, in balance, to let the five-billion-dollar extended arrangement go through at a time when Indo-U.S. relations are marked by serious tensions—and under terms which, after all, express a more conservative orientation in the socio-economic arena.

The conflict of interests that the official Indian delegation will be facing at this annual meeting of the Bank and Fund—having to practise accommodation and compromise nervously in relation to the deal with IMF and being expected to articulate a general stance in the ranks of developing countries critical of the orientation of the two institutions—has not escaped their attention.

And the prospect of India's Finance Minister, Reserve Bank Governor and top officials in charge of economic affairs courting the personages of the Reagan Administration, conservative Europeans, Saudi dignitaries and other forces which make a difference within the Executive Boards of IMF and the World Bank appeals to their sense of how the world should be tending.

KERALA CHIEF MINISTER WRITES TO GANDHI ON CHARGES

Madras THE HINDU in English 24 Sep 81 p 9

TRIVANDRUM, Sept 23

The law and order situation in Kerala cannot by any stretch of imagination be said to be unsatisfactory compared to the rest of the country, the Kerala Chief Minister, Mr E K Nayanar has pointed out in a letter to the Prime Minister, Mrs Indira Gandhi.

The letter was with reference to the statement the Prime Minister had made in Parliament in respect of the law and order situation in Kerala.

Quoting statistics in support of his claim, Mr Nayanar said, compared to other States, "Kerala presents a very peaceful picture."

"Our police", he said, "has always been to discourage all forms of lawlessness. Police action has been taken against offenders irrespective of their party affiliation. Conciliation, and peace initiative have always been made by law enforcing authorities wherever a situation threatens to become violent. In serious situations, myself and the Home Minister have intervened personally to restore peace."

The Prime Minister's statement contained three specific allegations: No one can honestly say that law and order situation in Kerala is all right. Political murders are taking place in large numbers on a scale unprecedented in any part of India, and Congress (I) people and people of other parties are being killed.

The Chief Minister said that he would quote from the statistics given by the Union Home Ministry at the conference of Chief Secretaries and Inspectors General in July to substantiate his claim.

The cognisable crime in Kerala during 1978-80, as per the statement made, was only 176.8 per lakh of population in 1980. This figure was far below the all India figure of 200.3 for the country and 195.8 for all the States.

The crime levels of Bihar, Jammu and Kashmir, Karnataka, Maharashtra, Manipur, Nagaland, Orissa, Rajasthan, Tamil Nadu, Tripura and Uttar Pradesh and all the Union Territories except Arunachal Pradesh and Lakshadweep were all higher than Kerala.

In respect of murders, Mr Nayanar said, statistics showed that Kerala had the lowest incidence in 1977 with 1.9 per lakh of population as against the all India average of 2.9. In 1980, the figure was 1.8 and the trend of statistics in 1981 indicates that the figure will continue to remain at the low level which had been maintained from 1977 onwards. By no stretch of imagination could these figures reflect failure of the law and order machinery.

As for political murders he said in 1980 and 1981, the largest number of persons killed belonged to CPI (M). fourteen out of 39 victims in 1977 were CPI (M) followers and 18 were Congressmen. On the other hand, in 1980 and 1981, only three and six persons belonging to the Congress (I) had lost their lives.

Of the 207 persons arrested in 1981, CPI (M) numbered 115, RSS 44, CPI 24, CPI (ML) 17 and Congress (I) 7.

In 1981, there were nine murders in Andhra Pradesh, 8 in Bihar and one in Kerala. Many extremists had also been killed by police action in many States.

Mr Nayanar wanted the Prime Minister to take such action as possible to repair the damage that had been done by her statement in Parliament.

UK CONSORTIUM WINS PARADEEP STEEL CONTRACT

[Article by G. K. Reddy]

[Text] NEW DELHI, Sept. 23

The British Consortium, Davy International, has won the mammoth contract for the construction of the first phase of the Paradeep liquid steel plant in Orissa involving an expenditure of over Rs. 3,500 crores, in the face of very stiff competition from the West German combine, Demag-Mannesman, with an aid-cum-loan package offer of $ 2.8 billions.

The Cabinet formally approved the award of the contract to Davy International on the eve of the Prime Minister's departure for Melbourne, where she would be meeting the British Prime Minister, Mrs. Margaret Thatcher, during the Commonwealth conference.

The present contract relates to the first phase of the Paradeep steel plant for which Davy International has assumed responsibility for raising the foreign exchange component of $ 2,800 millions through Euro-dollar loans. After deducting the U.K. aid of roughly $ 220 millions, which will be in the form of grant, the foreign exchange outlay of the project would be in the range of $ 2.5 billions.

Shot in arm for U.K.

The Indian decision comes as a shot in the arm for the ailing economy of Britain, which has been making an all-out effort to obtain its share in India's development.

Mrs. Thatcher had gone out of her way to press the British claim for the award of the contract for this liquid steel plant with an ultimate capacity of over three million tonnes.

The British bid was finally accepted because the financial package offered was considered to be more attractive in terms of its grant component and repayment terms for the loans. But the West German combine staked its claim with the plea that the technology offered was far superior, although the British consortium refuted this contention.

As part of his additional charge, the Commerce Minister, Mr. Pranab Mukherjee, had been handling these delicate negotiations.

But in view of the very big outlays involved in the award of this contract, the Prime Minister had kept herself fully informed of the discussions at every stage to ensure that the right choice is made by giving due consideration to both the technical and financial aspects of the British and West German terms.

Apart from Britain and West Germany, France also had been evincing considerable interest in the Paradeep project in the wake of the contract it secured for building the alumina plant in the same State.

But it did not tender independently since as a participant in both the British and West German consortia, it was going to have its slice of the cake in either case.

British answer to F-16

The British Government is immensely satisfied with the Indian decision and Mrs. Thatcher is expected to thank Mrs. Gandhi personally for it. It will encourage Britain to make a similar bid to participate on a bigger scale in the development of the coal, power and transport sectors involving much larger investments.

British Aerospace, with its characteristic tenacity, is not giving up the race for the supply of aircraft for the Indian Air Force. It is sending a delegation in the next few days to canvass for the Tornado as an ideal match for the F-16s being supplied by the U.S. to Pakistan.

It is fighting a bitter rearguard action to convince India that the real answer to the F-16 is not the French-built Mirage-2000 but the Tornado, the successor to Jaguar, which is capable of dual performance in both attack and interceptor roles operating at low as well as high altitudes.

The British delegation is coming to forward its case before the Indian defence team goes to Paris shortly to finalise the Mirage-2000 deal with the French manufacturers, Marcel Dassault.

More Jaguars

After securing the Paradeep contract, Britain is no longer protesting too much over the Indian decision to give up the manufacturing part of the Jaguar programme.

The real profit is made through the sale of fully assembled aircraft or supply of sub-assemblies for final assembly in India, not in the shape of royalties for manufacture under licence.

The purchase of over 100 Jaguars in whatever shape, along with the acquisition of over a dozen Sea Harriers, will involve an expenditure of over Rs. 1,500 crores.

The British Government is, therefore, quite content with the present arrangement under which India will assemble some more Jaguars from imported sub-sections as compensation for abandoning the manufacturing programme.

And it is in this context that British Aerospace is now entering the race with France for the supply of a futuristic aircraft to match the F-16, in the wake of Davy International's success in securing the Paradeep contract.

BHARATIYA JANATA TO MAINTAIN SEPARATE IDENTITY

Bombay THE TIMES OF INDIA in English 24 Sep 81 p 1

VRINDABAN, September 23.

AS the Bharatiya Janata Party is confident that it alone can provide the "national alternative" to the ruling party it has decided to maintain its separate identity and shelved all proposals for merger with any other party.

This was the consensus at the four-day all India study camp organised at this temple town and which ended yesterday. It is a measure of the growing confidence of the party from the small successes it has scored recently.

Among these, the unexpected victory in the Visakhapatnam municipal poll in Andhra Pradesh — a stronghold of the Congress (I) — is given the pride of place. The successful anti-price rise demonstration by women in Delhi is claimed as evidence of growing disenchantment with the ruling party and growing support for the BJP.

But more importantly, its burgeoning confidence seems to rest on what it claims its ability to give a philosophical content to its movement — a "successful" synthesis between its tradition-based nationalism and Mahatma Gandhi's rural-oriented economic programme.

Mr. Atal Behari Vajpayee, who presided over the camp, claimed that the new "Gandhian socialism" expounded by the party could gain universal acceptance. The people were craving for change, he said.

The papers read out at the four-day study camp displayed a fighting mood among the participants. It helped the hardliners led by Mr. L. K. Advani, party general secretary, to carry the day with its opposition to any kind of alliance or merger with any other party. Mr. Vajpayee recognised the merit of this stand and said his party would not go in for any merger talks though it might co-operate with opposition parties on specific issues.

Reflecting the mood of the camp, Mr. Vajpayee said emphatically that his party would now make a bid for power. "We are not power-hungry", he said, "but we want power to change the social structure."

The Congress, he said, failed to accomplish the task of restructuring the social order in its 30-year rule. It had ignored Gandhi's teachings and had now brought the nation on the verge of an unprecedented crisis — moral, social, economic and political.

"It seems to me that the responsibility of translating Gandhiji's ideas into reality has fallen on our shoulders," Mr. Vajpayee said.

The BJP leader said his party was not in favour of strikes. But if the government failed to curb the price rise, the workers had a right to go on strike.

He said the one principal reason for the price rise was corruption. The "Antulay affair" was only one of the instances. The ruling party, unable to tackle the growing crisis, had taken to the path of confrontation with the opposition parties. It is frightened of its own shadow," he said.

U.S. CONNECTIONS UNDERMINE INDO-PAKISTAN RELATIONS

[Commentary by Inder Malhotra: "Pakistan's U.S. Connection Shadow Over the Subcontinent"]

[Text] EVEN at the best of times in recent years this country has found the pursuit of good relations with Pakistan to be the task of Sisyphus, the mythical Greek character condemned to rolling a heavy rock uphill and to begin again when it rolled down. Now, however, the problem has become even more acute. It is not merely that on the road to rapprochement the two countries have run into a bad patch much rougher than those encountered earlier. The trouble really is that Pakistan and the United States, between them, have deliberately chosen to change the entire context in the Indian sub-continent and to bring back to the region the kind of tensions which first started flooding in, to disastrous effect, in the wake of the U.S. military aid to Pakistan in the fifties.

Mrs. Gandhi's plain speaking on the subject, in a series of recent interviews, underscores the gravity of the developing situation from this country's point of view. Those responsible for the defence of India's freedom and frontiers cannot remain indifferent to it.

GLOSS

Strangely, there is clear contradiction between what the Americans are saying about the renewed U.S.-Pakistan military relationship and the gloss that the Pakistanis are trying to put on it. For, according to the Pakistanis, what they are doing is no more than buy arms from the U.S. either on cash payment or on commercial credit. But Mr. James Buckley, the U.S. under-secretary of state for security assistance, has said categorically, in his testimony to the U.S. Congress, that Pakistan has taken a "courageous decision to embark on a qualitatively new relationship with the United States". He has also described the new arrangement with Pakistan as a "strong security relationship" and has gone on to add: "I cannot over-emphasise the importance we attach to this new relationship."

Moreover, neither Mr. Buckley nor any other spokesman of the Reagan administration has made any bones about the fact that the new relationship with Pakistan has been forged in pursuance of the U.S. global strategy to confront the Soviet Union in every region and eventually to re-establish American military superiority over it from the Pacific to the Atlantic. They have added that in their scheme of things, Pakistan, facing 90,000 Soviet troops in Afghanistan, fits in as neatly in south-west Asia as does Israel in west Africa or South Africa in the African continent south of the Sahara.

In the circumstances, what is one to make of Pakistan's protestations that it is not embarked on a confrontation course with the Soviet Union and that, in any case, it does not fear any attack by the Soviet Union? Pakistan's foreign minister, Mr. Agha Shahi, has even gone to the extent of declaring that those who talked of a Soviet military threat to Pakistan were indulging in "slander."

Since even the Americans cannot be so naive as to be unaware of the Pakistani statements, the only logical conclusion one can come to is that these declarations are largely for the public record and that behind the smoke-screen of rhetoric the two sides have a clear understanding of what each expects from the other.

Going by available indications, the U.S. expectation is not that a rearmed and reequipped Pakistani army would mount an expedition through the Khyber Pass against the Soviet troops in Afghanistan but that Pakistan would play the role assigned to it "should the balloon really go up in the Gulf." A visiting U.S. professor indeed said this in so many words to a gathering of intellectuals and journalists in Karachi only the other day.

Afghanistan is but a sideshow. The most the U.S. may want Pakistan to do in this respect is to step up the arms aid to the Afghan rebels so that the Russians remain bogged down in Afghanistan. It is in the Gulf, where Pakistani military presence even today is not insubstantial, that the U.S. needs Pakistan the most.

For its part, Pakistan evidently wishes to utilise the opportunity offered by the Reagan administration's strident response to the Afghan crisis to get from the U.S. Highly sophisticated weaponry in order to increase its military leverage vis-a-vis India, bluntly described in conversations between U.S. diplomats and the Pakistani military leaders as the principal security concern of Pakistan and indeed its "arch enemy."

In this connection, a part of Mr. Buckley's testimony to the U.S. Congress has an ominous ring. For while praising Pakistan for having "courageously" established a new security relationship with America, he has stated that this exposes Pakistan to the "risk of increased Soviet hostility and pressure, including military attack by proxy forces." Since it is inconceivable that Mr. Babrak Karmal's army can invade Pakistan, what is the expression "proxy forces" supposed to mean in this context?

In any case, the F-16 super-sophisticated warplanes, the speedy supply of which as been described by General Zia-ul-Haq as the "litmus test" of U.S. "sincerity", aren't going to be used against the Soviet helicopter gunships in Afghanistan. Nor are the brand new and up-gunned M-48 tanks going to be deployed on Pakistan's north-western frontier.

JOLT

Altogether therefore the India-Pakistan relations have been given a dual jolt. On the one hand, a new military situation has been created to cope with which will mean additional spending on defence, indeed an arms race. On the other, the very basis of the Simla agreement — strict bilateralism in a sub-continental environment free from the tensions generated by superpower rivalries — has been totally undermined.

Islamabad is bound to turn round and point to the presence of Soviet troops in Afghanistan. But then it was open to Pakistan to pursue the policy of seeking a political settlement of the Afghan crisis and thus secure a speedy withdrawal of the Soviet troops from Afghanistan. But it has chosen instead a course which would prolong rather than cut short the Soviet presence in Afghanistan, heighten the conflict and widen the area of tension.

In the circumstances, the kind of efforts that Mrs. Gandhi and Mr. P. V. Narasimha Rao have been making during the last 20 months, despite many ups and downs, to improve Indo-Pakistan relations have become rather difficult to sustain, and this fact is not lost on Pakistan.

In fact, Pakistan has interpreted this country's refusal to allow Pakistan unhindered re-entry into the commonwealth as a sign of Indian resentment against, and displeasure with, the new U.S.-Pakistan military relationship. In spite of this, Islamabad did try, shortly before Mrs. Gandhi's departure for south-east Asia on way to the Melbourne summit of the commonwealth countries, to secure Indian concurrence to Pakistan's readmission into the commonwealth fold. This it did by reassuring New Delhi that it would not use the commonwealth as a forum for raising bilateral India-Pakistan disputes. But this did not take in the Indian policy makers who have had rather sad experience of similar Pakistani assurances in the past, given during the Janata regime, which helped Pakistan to get admission to the non-aligned movement.

No sooner had the Pakistanis got to the non-aligned summit at Havana than its delegation started harping on Kashmir and indeed equating it with the Palestine issue! No wonder Mrs. Gandhi has been driven to remarking that what mattered was not the good things the Pakistanis said in New Delhi but what they really said and did the world over.

The trouble is that Pakistani leaders are adept in saying different things to different people. For instance, they blandly told Mr. Firyubin that when they signed with the Chinese prime minister a joint statement denouncing "hegemonism", Mr. Zhao might be thinking of the Soviet Union but they themselves had only Indian "hegemony" in mind!

CONTRAST

Of a piece with this is the contrast between Mr. Agha Shahi's repeated emphasis on the enduring nature of Pakistan's non-alignment and Gen. Zia-ul-Haq's interview to U.S. News and World Report on Pakistan's "American connection."

Gen. Zia did not offer the U.S. military bases, as the Soviet news agency, Tass, tried to make out by tearing some of his remarks out of context. But what he did say leaves this possibility vaguely open.

For, after declaring that the question of bases had neither been discussed nor was it a good idea "under present-day thinking", Gen. Zia did add: "but once the mutuality of interests has been confirmed then it is up to the two countries to pursue the policies to the ultimate achievement of their interests. Now once that stage arises .... then there are no reservations. Now, I am not saying that if it leads to a stage of no reservations, then Pakistan would offer bases. It does not necessarily follow. All we are now trying to do is bolster up the understanding we have had in the past."

The subject of India-Pakistan relations is vast. There is space only for a fleeting mention of two points. First, a straw in the wind is that the visit to New Delhi by the Pakistani polo team, scheduled for November, has been cancelled.

Secondly, even those in this country who have a soft corner for Gen. Zia have been somewhat embarrassed by his sudden enthusiasm for talks with India on "non-aggression" and "non-use of force." For only last year he had denounced a "non-aggression pact" with India as "not worth the paper it might be written on."

Everyone knows that the offer of talks with India at this stage is addressed to Pakistan's critics in the U.S. Congress, not to the Indian leaders.

GANDHI INTERVIEWED BY 'SYDNEY MORNING HERALD'

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 22 Sep 81 pp 1, 7

[Text]

... SYDNEY, Sept. 21 (Reuter).

PRIME Minister Indira Gandhi has been quoted in a newspaper interview published here today as the United States wanted to establish military bases in Pakistan.

US arms aid to Pakistan was a deliberate irritant to the Soviet Union, and "is the first step to try and get bases or base there," she said in the interview with the New Delhi correspondent of the Sydney Morning Herald.

She accused the US of trying to make Pakistan replace Iran as its policeman in the region and said Washington was hostile to India because 'we do not fit in with their global strategy'.

Washington was 'generally used to people toeing their line and they don't like a country which pursues an independent course,' she said.

Mrs Gandhi said the US had opposed the concept of non-alignment originally and was still not happy with it.

Washington, she added, did not like India's position on South Africa, Namibia or earlier Vietnam. She denied that India might be increasing its dependence on Moscow. 'We are not dependent on the Soviet Union. So there is no question of increasing dependence', she said

Mrs Gandhi said India had diversified its purchases of military hardware, was trying to make as many as possible of its own arms and usually bought from those willing to give it technical knowhow. 'Often when you buy from the United States you do get dependent on them because they do not give the technology'.

She said it was unrealistic to expect Moscow to reconcile itself to an anti-Soviet government in Afghanistan. She did not know what India could do to help bring a settlement there 'because Pakistan does not want a solution of the problem'.

On Kampuchea, Mrs Gandhi said she did not think the Soviet Union was the villain. 'Actually it was China which started it'.

She also thought massive western aid would not end Vietnam's ties with Moscow. 'It is not a question of having ties with any country. They are fiercely independent', she said

UNI adds:

'You know they (the US) are trying to get Pakistan to take the place of the Shah of Iran for them,' she said.

Mrs Gandhi spoke of the 'disastrous consequences' that had happened in Iran and said 'one does fear the same in this case.'

Asked whether she foresaw an attack on India by Pakistan with its latest acquisition of arms, Mrs Gandhi replied: 'That does not seem logical or rational.' But India's experience had been that whenever Pakistan had arms, it had used them against this country.

She drew particular attention to the background to Pakistan's acquisition of arms, 'the tension in the region, the bringing closer to us of global confrontations and great power rivalries.' She noted that for the first time American themselves, at least one official, has been reported as saying, 'well, they can be used against India.'

To a question whether US arms aid was aimed at restoring the 'old balance of power theory' in subcontinent Mrs Gandhi said, 'It does not restore the balance of power at all. It is merely to establish.... Well. I think that it is in a way an irritant tao the Soviet Union. It is the first step to try and get bases or a base in which they may or may not succeed.'

PRO-KHALISTAN POSTERS SEIZED IN POONCH BORDER AREA

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 22 Sep 81 p 4

[Text]

SRINAGAR, Sept. 21 — Chief Minister Sheikh Abdullah today confirmed in the Assembly that pro-Khalistan posters had recently been seized by the authorities in the border area of Poonch.

He added that the intelligence agencies of the State and Centre were investigating the matter in order to determine the source of these posters and also their possible implications.

The issue was raised in special mention during zero hour by the Rishi Kumar Kaushal (Janata party). He said that the appearance of the pro-Khalistan posters in the sensitive border area was a disturbing matter which needed to be tackled immediately. According to him this incident was a spill-over of the Khalistan movement in Punjab.

Mr Kaushal urged the government to take serious note of this incident and nip the mischief before it is allowed to assume more serious dimensions.

The Sheikh informed the House that the posters had been found pasted at different places in Poonch without any indication of their sponsors or the press where they were printed. He said that the intelligence staff of army as well as other agencies of the State and Central Governments were looking into the matter. He assured the members that the State authorities "were keeping a close watch on such activities and nobody would be allowed to create trouble in the State.

Earlier replying to a question during question hour the Sheikh said that the condemned Pakistani saboteur Mohammed Maqbool Bhat was facing another murder charge in the court of special judge trying cases under the "enemy agents ordinance." This case related to the murder of branch manager of the Jammu and Kashmir bank in June 1976.

DETAILS OF BOTSWANA PRESIDENT'S VISIT TOLD

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 21 Sep 81 pp 1, 7

[Text]

INDIA and Botswana on Sunday agreed that forces of freedom and progress in Southern Africa should be given all encouragement and support in the face of the intransigent attitude of the racist regime in Pretoria, reports PTI.

Expressing deep concern over the impasse on liberation of Namibia and increased military incursions by South Africa in Angola and Mozambique, visiting Botswana President Q K J Masire and Prime Minister Indira Gandhi agreed that these were disturbing developments affecting stability and peace in the region.

South Africa's aggression against frontline states of Southern Africa also came in for condemnation from the two countries at a banquet hosted Sunday night by President N Sanjiva Reddy in honour of Dr Masire.

Besides developments in Southern Africa, the international economic situation and bilateral relations also came up for discussion during the 50-minute official discussions without aides between Dr Masire and Mrs Gandhi.

The possibilities of increased economic and technical assistance by India in agriculture and railways were also explored during a meeting lasting over an hour between Botswana Foreign Minister A M Mogwe and Union Agriculture Minister Rao Birendra Singh.

During the talks with Dr Masire, Mrs Gandhi said India would be happy to expand and diversify bilateral cooperation with Botswana in the economic field, according to the spokesman of the External Affairs Ministry.

During the exchange of views on international economic situation, Mrs Gandhi stressed the importance of cooperation among developing countries themselves. Both leaders agreed that self-reliance among Third World countries would make a purposeful contribution to North-South dialogue also.

With four-fifths of its area lying in the Kalahari desert, Botswana is seeking India's assistance in afforestation and crop systems suited to its climate. India has 300 experts in various fields assisting in Botswana's development.

DESPERATE SITUATION

At the banquet President Reddy and President Masire agreed that the majority of the countries in the region did not propagate violence but the desperate situation and the cul-de-sac that political persuasion had reached in the area had left the oppressed people with no alternative but to take to arms.

Presenting the toast, President Reddy warmly praised Botswana for its support to freedom movements in Southern Africa and for fighting shoulder to shoulder with others in the region in opposing racial discrimination.

Dr Masire in his reply praised India for the 'internationally acclaimed role' as strong supporter of the 'struggles for self determination' particularly in Africa.

WARM WELCOME

Earlier on his arrival in Delhi on Sunday morning Dr Masire was warmly welcomed with a 21-gun salute. The Botswana President also inspected an inter-service guard of honour.

President Sanjiva Reddy, who received him at the airport, said his visit would no doubt "initiate a new era of even closer cooperation between the two countries".

Prime Minister Indira Gandhi, dressed in a brown embroidered black Manipuri dress which resembles the African outfit, was also present at the airport to receive the President and Madame G. O. Masire. Others present included Central Ministers, the three Service Chiefs and members of the diplomatic corps.

On Monday, Dr Masire will visit Hissar Agricultural University. Mrs Gandhi will host a lunch in his honour. Later, he will go sight-seeing in the Capital.

On 22 September, he will begin a tour of the country which will take him to Varanasi, Agra, Madras, Bangalore and Bombay where he will visit various industrial establishments.

Dr Masire is scheduled to leave for Australia for the Commonwealth conference from Bombay on 28 September.

BRIEFS

SPRING CROP SUPPORT--New Delhi, Sept 20--The Agriculture Ministry has set apart Rs 111 crores for immediate distribution as short-term loans to States for purchase and distribution of agricultural inputs for the rabi season. The strategy for the rabi crops, evolved recently, aims at augmenting the production of wheat, oilseeds and pulses. The area under wheat will be expanded by exploring the possibility of growing it in Assam and the North-Eastern Region. The Agriculture Ministry has written to State Governments, indicating crop-wise and areawise, the production targets, and the arrangements required for their realisation. The Ministry has streamlined the procedure to expedite financial sanctions for all Centrally-sponsored rabi campaigns without delay. A Central control room is being set up to keep effective liaison with all State Governments to review the progress from time to time, identify the bottlenecks, if any, and initiate necessary measures to clear them. The Ministry has also designated some of the senior officers as "area officers" each of whom will be in charge of one or two States for intensive review of the progress of the agricultural production programmes in the States allotted to him. They will start visiting the States to assist them in various agricultural programmes. [Text] [Madras THE HINDU in English 21 Sep 81 p 10]

CABINET MILITARY WING--The military wing of the Cabinet secretariat is to be headed by a naval officer, Commodore M.B. Kunte, reports PTI. Commodore Kunte entered Britainia Naval College, Dartmouth in 1951 and was the last executive branch officer to be trained in the royal navy. He was commissioned in 1954 while serving on board the submarine depot ship HMS Forth of the Mediterranean fleet under the then Commander-in-Chief Admiral of the fleet, the late Lord Mountbatten. [Text] [New Delhi PATRIOT in English 22 Sep 81 p 7]

USSR OIL MINISTER--Moscow, Sept 21 (UNI)--Soviet Oil Minister N. Maltsev is likely to visit India shortly for discussions with the oil authorities in the country about the programme of cooperation for the period 1981-85, reports APN. Under the new plan of bilateral cooperation, the Soviet Union will assist in introducing mechanised methods of extraction in various Indian oilfields and in putting idle wells to use. Soviet experts are already providing assistance for seismic research in West Bengal and for drilling operations in Tripura. [Text] [New Delhi PATRIOT in English 22 Sep 81 p 7]

SIKKIM CONGRESS-I WIN--Gangtok, Sept 21 (PTI)--Congress nominee Saloman Saring was declared elected to the lone Rajya Sabha seat from Sikkim in the biennial election here today. Mr Saloman Saring polled 20 votes out of his party's total strength of 23 while his nearest rival, Mr Karma Gyampo polled seven votes. [Text] [New Delhi PATRIOT in English 22 Sep 81 p 7]

AJMER MINERAL FIND--Jaipur, September 21--Gold and arsenic deposits have been indicated at Bhugore village about four km from Ajmer. In a written reply to Mr Ghanshyam Tiwan (BJP) Minister for Mines said today that, samples containing 0.1 to 0.12 part per million of gold and 50 part per 1000 gramme of arsenic have been found. The survey work in the area is in progress. [Text] [New Delhi PATRIOT in English 22 Sep 81 p 7]

ENVOY TO ZAMBIA--Joint Secretary in the External Affairs Ministry A.N. Ram has been appointed Indian High Commissioner to Zambia in place of Mr Ravindra Tandon who recently died in New Delhi following a glider crash. Mr Ram, who has served in the Indian missions in New York and Thimpu, had twice been advisor to the Government of Bhutan. His last assignment abroad was as minister in the Indian Embassy in Tokyo. DOLOMITE, LIMESTONE DEPOSITS--Imphal, Sept 21 (PTI)--There is good prospect for large and medium industries in the North Eastern region following discovery of major deposits of petroleum, coal, dolomite and limestone in five States in the region. Geological and mineral surveys have indicated an estimated total reserve of 78 million tonnes of petroleum, particularly in Assam, and current investigation should result in upward revision of these estimates, according to official documents available here. The foot hill belt of Nagaland, Imphal valley in Manipur, Tripura and Mizoram was being explored for oil and gas. The documents urged that modern methods should be adopted for reversing the slow trend of progress of resource surveys, manpower shortage, unavailability of data on industrial testing of raw materials which have retarded mineral and industrial development in the North Eastern region. MEETING WITH FIDEL CASTRO--New Delhi, September 23--President Fidel Castro of Cuba has expressed his great admiration for India and high regard for the Prime Minister, Mrs Indira Gandhi, in his talks with Dr Balram Jakhar, speaker of the Lok Sabha. Dr Jakhar leader of the Indian parliamentary delegation to the 68th inter-parliamentary conference now in progress in Havana, was Mr Castro's guest at a day-long outing on September 20. The Cuban leader personally took Dr Jakhar to a sugar plantation, a citrus fruit orchard, land reclamation sites and an integrated school where dignity of labour is taught while imparting formal education. Mr Castro also spent an hour at a reception hosted by Dr Jakhar at the Indian ambassador's residence. Participating in a debate on "urgent measures for liquidation of vestiges of colonialism in the world and the practices of apartheid in Namibia and South Africa, and safe-guarding ethnic minorities" at the conference, Dr Jakhar called for comprehensive sanctions against South Africa and reiterated India's commitment to the liberation movement in Namibia and elsewhere. TRIPURA BORDER THREATS--Agartala, September 23 (PTI)--The chief minister, Mr Nripen Chakraborty, yesterday said that Tripura was facing serious threats along its 850 km. border with Bangladesh and its 100 km. internal border with Mizoram and the Cachar district of Assam. Replying to a calling-attention motion in the state assembly, Mr Chakraborty said there were reasons to believe that foreign hands were active behind the recent spurt in the influx of Bangladeshi tribals into this border state from the Chittagong hill tracts. He said tribal elements from Tripura were being harboured and trained there "to carry out attacks along the state's international border." AIR VICE CHIEF OF STAFF--New Delhi, Sept 23--Air Marshal T. S. Brar has been appointed Vice-Chief of the Air Staff, at Air Headquarters here. Earlier, he was Air Officer Commanding-in-Chief, Central Air Command.--PTI. [Text] [Madras THE HINDU in English 24 Sep 81 p 9]

SEVERE UNREST AMONG SIKHS--New Delhi, 12 Oct (APP)--Indian officials have reported that many extremist elements have been arrested in connection with the secessionist movement following the hijacking of an Indian airliner. The majority of the arrests were made in the Punjab, where 13 million Indian sikhs live. Soon after the hijacking, 100 sikhs were arrested in northern India. However, the arrests made yesterday involved persons connected with blowing up railway bridges, government buildings and telecommunication systems in Punjab. Two sikh organizations announced on 11 October that they will resist restrictions that have been imposed on carrying karpans [short sikh swords] on airline flights. The Gurdwara administration committee and the All India Sikh Students Federation have announced that the ban on sikhs carrying the karpan amounts to religious discrimination and will not be tolerated. According to JANG's correspondent in Chandigarh, following a recent clash between arrested sikhs and police, the sikhs occupied Jullundur prison and took the warden and other officials hostage. They also planted the free Khalistan flag on top of the prison. During the clash in the prison, more than 50 sikh prisoners and 14 guards were wounded. DK 'CAPITALIST ENCLAVE' NEAR NONG SAMET DESCRIBED

BK040350 Bangkok BANGKOK POST in English 4 Oct 81 p 23

[Article by Jim Gerrand: "The 'Chicago' on the Thai-Khmer Border"]

[Text] Chamka Kor is a sprawl of thatch huts with patches of blue plastic sheeting. The village sprouts on the edge of woodlands just 3 kilometres from Nong Samet camp, the largest of Son Sann's "free market" sanctuaries.

Amongst Thai traders along this blackmarket belt of the border, Chamka Kor has been dubbed "Chi-ca-go." In its thriving market centre, Khmer traffickers buy up cigarettes, cloth and footwear, bicycle bits, foodstuffs and sundry little luxuries that are peddled back along the trails to Sisophon and then fan out to the major population centres in Kampuchea and even through to Vietnam.

But Chamka Kor is not a stronghold of the noncommunist "free Khmers" nor of the warlords and bandits who until this year had fought for power and preyed on the misery of refugees in this wild west fringe of Kampuchea.

No, it is under the aegis of Pol Pot's Khmer Rouge guerrillas that this free-wheeling capitalist enclave has grown to rival the better known markets in the camps at Nong Samet and Nong Chan, north from Aranyaprathet. While all the world remains sceptical of declarations from the government of Democratic Kampuchea that its notorious communist doctrines have been abandoned, at least here at Chamka Kor the Khmer Rouge really have found a soft spot for capitalist enterprise.

With AK-47 rifles or fearsome rocket tubes slung from their shoulders, Khmer Rouge soldiers wander at leisure past the benches of gold dealers toying with their scales, or peer with curiosity at photo studios where 60 baht buys a Polaroid snap shot against a painted backdrop of the famous Angkor temples.

Chamka Kor also boasts two commercial cinemas built of thatch, a pagoda with 10 monks in saffron robes, tailor shops, coffee stalls, fortune-tellers and several sporting rinks where men spend their idle hours engrossed in games of French-style bowls.

Many soldiers have exchanged their Maoist caps for hats from Thailand emblazoned with yellow badges and the words "Black Tiger." Others adorned the butts of their rifles with quaint knitted covers in pastel colours.

"If they carry weapons they must be Khmer Rouge," assured one civilian.

From loudspeakers near the noodle shops, a committee of men in black fatigues appeal for donations to the hospital building fund. The broadcast is interspersed with recorded buddhist chants. One committeeman says that Prince Sihanouk has now joined hands with Khieu Samphan, the prime minister of Democratic Kampuchea, which is something less than accurate.

Seated in a barber's stall with his rifle propped nearby, one of Pol Pot's guerrillas stretches back his head as the razor scrapes for hair on his neck and chin.

Such coexistence would seem incredible--barbers, buddhists and blackmarketeers all flourishing under the benign gaze of their former persecutors.

"The Khmer Rouge soldiers are very disciplined; there is never any trouble here," commented one man selling buddhist posters in the market. "It's not the same with soldiers at Nong Samet," he said.

The poster seller says he fought as a marine on Lon Nol's side against the Khmer Rouge. He carries a scar on one arm where he says he was shot in April 1975 during the final hours before Phnom Penh fell to the communist forces. All of his family died, he believes, during the 3 and 1/2 years before Pol Pot was ousted by the Vietnamese invasion.

Sitha now buys buddhist posters at the Thai border and carries them back to hawk in Chamka Kor. The profit, he says, is 30 satang on each.

Other hawkers complain of the taxes and recruiting by "free khmers" in neighboring camps. But the Vietnamese troops who demand bribes on the trails to Sisophon are the target of much more bitter criticism. Some traffickers claim they had paid up to 300 baht on one trip--all the profits from a bicycle load of cigarettes.

But what of taxing, recruiting and propaganda by the Khmer Rouge?

It simply does not happen, civilians claim in Chamka Kor. From somewhere though, soldiers do have money to spend in the market and yet so far as is known there are still no wages paid to the cadre and troops of Democratic Kampuchea. Perhaps their families earn pocket money from gardening and cottage industry. Or perhaps Khmer Rouge in this one area receive some special allowance.

One civilian says he works for the Khmer Rouge carrying drums of water on his bicycle to the combat zones. His pay is 25 baht per 20 litre drum. In other Khmer Rouge strongholds, women and children have always provided this logistic backup without any dreams of payment.

"This is the soft face of the Khmer Rouge," observes one Western diplomat based in Bangkok who has known of the Chamka Kor phenomenon for some months. Just a short walk further north is Phnom Chhat, a hardcore Khmer Rouge base where troops and supporters live in more spartan conditions with no formal market or other bourgeois trimmings.

It is not that Chamka Kor is staged to impress the outside world. In fact very few foreigners have found their way to the camp--not even international relief aid workers, let alone reporters.

Undoubtedly though, the experiment is very much aimed at domestic political gain and an attempt to salve the distrust of so many Kampucheans who suffered and lost family during the brutal excesses of Pol Pot's ultra-revolution. And while it seems that the Khmer Rouge are not in it for money themselves, presumably there are intelligence benefits as traffickers bring back news of Vietnamese movements in the interior.

"Beaucoup liberte ici" says Sitha, the poster seller, who is still bemused by the freedoms and absence of regimentation in Chamka Kor. He sleeps in the hut of a friend and has done nothing to register his name with camp authorities.

Sitha turns out the lining of his trousers pocket to show the address of a "brother" who made it out last year and has been resettled in Australia. He scrawls out a letter to be carried to Sydney but really his hopes have died for any escape bid across the border to a formal camp in Thailand. He's told there is no more resettlement to third countries from Khao I-Dang and that sooner or later the refugees in Thailand will have to return to Kampuchea.

He owns the clothes he stands in, a small plastic bag and 200 baht from trading. That's all. He has no hut of his own or even a hammock to sleep in. His wife has no coupons for rice distributed by UNICEF at Phnom Chhat. Their baby is 1 year old.

But for the time being, Sitha, like hundreds of other traders is free to come and go on the border trails.

He passes Khmer Rouge guards on the fringe of the camp without being stopped for checking. One soldier stands with the aid of a crutch. He is an amputee who recently returned after hospital treatment at Khao I-Dang camp in Thailand.

"Free Khmer" soldiers at the next checkpoint on the path back to Nong Samet smile and chat and then ask a fee of 5 or 10 baht from the traders on loaded bicycles. A drink seller's crate of soda is lightened by one bottle.

At the next checkpoint too, "free Khmers" are collecting tax. Well in his cups at 10 a.m., one soldier swaggers with a revolver to impress his importance. Smiles appease and the traders pass by.

Note: Uninvited but unhindered, I was able to walk into Chamka Kor on two occasions in a search for three young children who have escaped from Phnom Penh in a bid to be reunited with their mother in Australia. Though the children have still to be found, it is clear that many refugees have indeed arrived in the camp with desperate hopes of sneaking across the border for asylum. Their movements too are unhindered by the Khmer Rouge. Traders showed no qualms at all about asking a foreign intruder to stay overnight in their huts and at no stage did camp officials check papers or identification. This, you'd better believe, has not been typical of Khmer Rouge rule in the past.

SRV Troops Killed by Snares

BK110749 (Clandestine) Voice of Democratic Kampuchea in Cambodian to Kampuchea 2330 GMT 10 Oct 81

[Text] On 19 September the Vietnamese troops stationed on Santuk Hill in Santuk District of Kompong Thom Province launched an operation in the jungle in an attempt to look for and arrest our people who were searching for rattan and trapping wild animals. When they saw wild boars trapped in our people's snares, these Vietnamese bandits rushed in. However, two of them were hit by the other snares, fell and died instantly. Following this event, the other Vietnamese troops from Santuk Hill accused our people of setting snares to kill their colleagues. But our people protested against this accusation and condemned the Vietnamese troops for their crimes and banditry. The people agreed that they would fight back should the Vietnamese troops dare to arrest and torture them.

LAO DELEGATE SPEAKS TO UN CONFERENCE ON UNDERDEVELOPMENT

BK301140 Vientiane Domestic Service in Lao 0430 GMT 27 Sep 81

[Speech by Soulivong Phasitthidet, head of the LPDR delegation, delivered on behalf of Lao Deputy Prime Minister and Foreign Minister Phoun Sipaseut, on 8 September at the UN Conference of the Least Developed Countries held in Paris from 1 to 14 September 1981--read by announcer]

[Text] Mr Chairman, ladies and gentlemen: First of all, the LPDR delegation would like to congratulate you, Mr Chairman, for your glorious election as chairman of this UN Conference on the Least Developed Countries. Our delegation firmly believes that with your rich experience and remarkable ability, our conference will be successful. At the same time, our delegation would like to sincerely congratulate all members of the conference staff.

In addition, our delegation wishes to express warm congratulations and sincere thanks to Mr (Kamani Corea), secretary of this UN Conference on the Least Developed Countries, for exerting efforts in making preparations for this conference and for defending the interests of the least developed countries.

Our delegation would like to take this opportunity to express sincere thanks to UN Secretary General Kurt Waldheim for giving unremitting attention to all the interests of the least developed countries. Our delegation highly praises the various countries and organizations for creating the conditions for this conference. Moreover, our delegation would like to express sincere and deep congratulations to the king of Nepal and other heads of state for their encouraging and circumspect views.

Mr Chairman, our delegation observes with satisfaction that after long and difficult preparations, the UN Conference on the Least Developed Countries is being held in Paris today as scheduled. We are thus now in a vital period. It is during this period that after several negotiations, we will be able to see if the various economically (?developed) countries will hasten to seriously assist in freeing the least developed countries from this serious state of underdevelopment.

The resolution No 122 on complete programs for assisting the least developed countries, adopted in 1979 at the UN Conference on Trade and Development, was a new hope for the people in these countries. Nevertheless, this hope swiftly vanished, because the adopted resolution was not put into practice due to a lack of political intentions. Urgent assistance programs which are part of the above-mentioned complete programs were not seriously implemented. It is regrettable that these programs, compiled with great effort after difficult negotiations for the interest of the least developed countries, failed to achieve good results.

The economic and social situation in the least developed countries has not been improved and, worst still, has deteriorated. The people in these countries continue to pursue a difficult life. The international community is aware that the least developed countries have been actively obstructed by the special conditions of their own structure, and that the daily deterioration of the world economic conditions has affected these countries more seriously.

The various least developed countries in Asia and the Pacific are poorer and weaker economically than the developing countries. As we already know, their GNP is very low. For this reason, the rate of their development is low. It can be said that there has been no developments at all over the past 20 years. Moreover, these countries have encountered great difficulties stemming from their unfavorable geographic locations, particularly regarding the cases of four of the least developed countries which have no access to the sea.

Furthermore, these countries have been constantly damaged by natural disasters. The development of various national economic branches has been seriously delayed by the shortage of development funds and skilled labor. Even though agriculture is the most important sector in the national economy of each country in Asia and the Pacific, the production in food and other agricultural supplies per capita is constantly decreasing, while its industry is at its early stage and contributes less than 7 percent to overall national income. Labor has been utilized at a low rate and thus plays a limited role in the difficult national economy.

Therefore, the various least developed countries, owing to their own specific conditions, are generally in the same situation. These countries have encountered many problems and difficulties, such as low agricultural and industrial output, shortages of skilled labor, insufficient production, the lack of national capital and foreign funds, shortages of imported raw material, the lack of management experiences and specialized institutes, exorbitant prices of products, inappropriate use of technology, the lack of domestic markets, limited goods for export and so forth. All this constitutes an unfavorable factor which limits the development of the economy of these countries.

Owing to the lack of capital and necessary technical knowledge, their natural resources have not been fully exploited. For this reason, no matter how much effort the people in the least developed countries will make, their economic and social development will not achieve results beyond what they can do in their self-sufficient economy and will proceed slowly. The lack of food supplies and utensils for daily use has further worsened the social conditions of these nations. The poorest continue to live on sustenance. In addition, they lack other social services which are important since they contribute to the quality of life. It is regrettable that such services are insufficient and not available in rural or mountainous areas.

Mr Chairman, the serious situation in the least developed countries calls for an urgent and realistic solution. As is already known, the main responsibility rests with the least developed countries themselves. Yet, it is still necessary for the international community to positively cooperate with these countries in their efforts to achieve their economic and social development. This is the duty of all, since the reduction of tension, peace and international security depend on the balanced and rapid development of the poor countries. At present, the international community has acknowledged and deemed it necessary to assist these countries to ease their hardships and completely free them from the state of underdevelopment existing in the past and at present and brighten their future hope in order to advance toward the establishment of a new international economic order. This is also an urgent requirement in the international strategy for development of the United Nations Organization in its 3d decade. It is now time to begin implementing this.

For this reason, to make this UN Conference on the Least Developed Countries successful, the participants must have ways to carry out activities to completely change the economic situation in these countries. The conference has acknowledged the various extremely just proposals advanced by the various least developed countries. These proposals deal with the implementation of the new assistance programs for 1980. This program is a result of long studies and preparations. Regarding this issue, we would like to once again call on the international community to extensively support these countries' struggles for survival.

With regard to this question, we would like to express profound thanks to various UN organizations, particularly the UNCTAD, for making significant contributions to the adoption of this new project. We also thank the groups of high-level experts on least developed countries for, after studying in the Geneva conference, giving creative suggestions for the cause of development of the least developed countries. Therefore, in conformity with the direction stipulated in the 122d resolution of the Manila conference, the new action program for 1980 for the least developed countries is aimed at transforming the structure of social requirements, ways of investments, and urgent assistance. It is, therefore, required that various countries increase their support and assistance to various branches. This support should be given in the form of international support and assistance.

The proposal on the requirements of overall assistance as submitted by the Group of 77 aims to double the value of assistance provided for the least developed countries during the past 5 years. This increase in the value of assistance is to come into effect beginning early this decade. To each of these countries, it is a just, reasonable proposal which can enable them to carry out the transformation of necessary structures. The proposal on requirements of urgent assistance under special conditions is aimed at guaranteeing developed countries provide as much as 0.15 percent of their national revenue to the least developed countries. This provision is to be made in the form of state assistance in the development field between 1981 and 1985. This percentage will be increased to 0.20 percent during the second half of this decade. This proposal is also an appropriate and equitable proposal.

We consider that the above-mentioned proposals are as correct and equitable as the one which is aimed at having each organization which renders aid bilaterally or multilaterally increase its contribution to the overall assistance under special conditions. Specific objectives as well as expectations of capital and assistance are to be set for various least developed countries. Our delegation also deems it necessary to partly change ways of giving assistance. We support the direction stipulated in the draft program of action on the assistance for 1980 that must be implemented by those countries and organizations providing assistance.

We would hereby like to put emphasis on certain points that we consider to be points of great significance. Based on the possibility of actual capital, the LPDR wishes that the assistance willingly provided by various countries should be in the form of gratuitous and unconditional assistance. Therefore, based on the situation in our country on the financial balance, we see that the assistance under this form is very necessary. We also want the various countries providing assistance to agree to shoulder responsibility for the expenses that are needed in carrying out various plans and projects of assistance in the least developed countries. The assistance-providing countries should also take responsibility of the expenses needed in fulfilling the programs of action in those least developed countries. In addition, we support the idea to give top priority to the request for assistance of various least developed countries, particularly the request for assistance on the building and training of managing cadres in the countries given with assistance. This is aimed at serving the implementation of various plans.

We also support all ideas concerning the promotion and restoration of the economic activities of the least developed countries. The monetary and technical assistance or assistance in the form of giving other facilities is also desperate needed by the least developed countries. Until present, although the various least developed countries have accumulated a large amount of their capital to develop the agricultural, industrial, transportation, trading, educational, public health and other branches, they still remain in the condition that they could not profoundly carry out the transformation of their national economy.

We, therefore, would like to call on the various countries with developed economy to provide necessary monetary and technical assistance to the least developed countries so as to help them successfully transform their national economies.

The new assistance program for 1980 should emphasize the specific concerns of the 15 countries in the 31 least developed countries which have no access to the sea. These countries are encountering serious problems with the transportation of goods in transit. We agree with the various countries which have no access to the sea and (?uninhabited) islands in requesting special assistance from the international community.

We support the statement of the UN Conference on the Least Developed Countries proposed by the delegation of these countries which are members of ESCAP and ECWA. The statement was approved by a ministerial-level conference of the members of the two organizations to resolve economic problems in the regions.

We would like to further notify this conference that the various reports and statements adopted by it emphasize the importance of resolution No 3201S6 and resolution No 3202S6, dated 1 May 1974, which deal with a statement and a program of action concerning the establishment of a new international economic order, and resolution No 3281-29, dated 12 December 1974, which deals with the treaty on states' economic rights and duties.

We would like to reiterate that the statement and reports of a conference in Bangkok emphasize the importance of relations between the reduction of arms and development, the planning of state economic and social development and the necessity to eliminate colonialism and neocolonialism. The inclusion of these matters in the assistance program for 1980 will add life to the documents of our current conference.

Mr Chairman, the LPDR, which is one of the 31 least developed countries, realizes the paramount importance of the current conference. Following the adoption of resolution No 34/203 of the UNGA in 1979, the purpose of which is to hold this conference, the LPDR enthusiastically made preparations for it.

Our country, like many other countries, is currently in an underdeveloped state. This underdevelopment stemmed from several decades of occupation and colonization. After this, the LPDR was faced with a war of destruction unleashed by the imperialist aggressors. This protracted war left our people poor and underdeveloped. Following the establishment of the republican system, the LPDR government has made positive efforts to carry out its duties in developing all the national economic branches destroyed by the war. We have gradually been freed from the prolonged state of underdevelopment. Nevertheless, no matter how much effort we have made, we continue to encounter many difficulties causing the continuation of this state of underdevelopment.

As a matter of fact, following the establishment of the LPDR in December 1975, the enemies of the revolution have made use of all opportunities to obstruct our country's normal development work and sought every possible way to sabotage the Lao people's efforts in peacefully making a living and to sabotage our development plans. They have incited and deceived skillful engineers to flee the country and put an end to the transportation of goods and equipment needed for the implementation of the LPDR's development programs.

At present, an economic blockade has been imposed by a neighboring country sharing a 1,500-km border with Laos. The LPDR is a country which does not have access to the sea. It has only one overland access to the outside world from Vientiane. Moreover, they [apparently referring to Thailand] have charged exorbitant taxes and transport fees for goods in transit.

For the sake of the interests of the peoples of the two countries, we call on this neighboring country to implement the joint communique of 1979 signed with the LPDR and observe the international principles on the countries having no access to the sea.

In the face of such a situation, the LPDR is doing everything to develop a new route for transporting goods in transit, particularly via the SRV. The Lao Government is utilizing all its manpower, material and technical knowledge to construct this route, since it is imperative to the exchange of goods and economic development. The construction and repair of other roads is also an urgent and imperative task.

Moreover, our country has been victimized by natural disasters. Regarding this, we completely support the inclusion of this issue in the 1980 assistance program so as to give assistance to the least developed countries in case of natural disasters.

Mr Chairman, the LPDR has begun implementing its first 5-year plan ending in 1985. The Lao people of all nationalities are concentrating on materializing this plan aimed at eliminating the state of economic underdevelopment, boosting national production, transforming and making its society progressive, improving the people's living conditions, efficiently making use of our material and natural resources, manpower and capital and creating necessary conditions for improving production bases. The materialization of this first 5-year plan will help Laos, an underdeveloped country, gradually free itself from the state of underdevelopment. To implement this plan, our government is mainly relying on its own strength. To achieve this aim, we will utilize all our economic strength.

Nevertheless, because of various difficulties, economic and technical difficulties in particular, our government has called for extensive international assistance to aid our national development efforts.

The specific document on Laos, No (Ember)/CP/5, concluding document No A/104/SP2 dated 11 February 1981 compiled by (?UNICEF) and the report on the LPDR published by the consultative conference in Vienna all constitute economic and social development programs and meet our country's requirements for international assistance.

We would like to thank the various countries and international organizations for attending the special consultative conference on the LPDR and hope that those attending this conference will understand our problems and respond to our requirements.

We invite the countries which did not attend the conference to study our documents and, if possible, contribute to our national development.

As you know, the LPDR delegation has always persisted in its positive efforts to cooperate with all countries and all international organizations which intend to assist Laos in its cause of restoring and developing the national economy on the basis of respect for each other's independence, national sovereignty and territorial integrity and for the various principles of non-interference in internal affairs, good neighborliness and mutual interests.

We remember with extreme regret that in the past many countries which are members of the committee for development assistance did not give sufficient assistance to Laos in its economic and social development as our country chose a political and social system which is different from theirs. According to latest statistics on assistance for Laos, it is clear that these countries are not concerned about the development work of the LPDR.

More serious still, the imperialists who conducted a war of aggression to devastate the Lao nation and its people have so far not yet made any contribution whatsoever to the task of reconstruction and healing the wounds of the devastating war in Laos. The international reactionary forces have colluded with these imperialists to pursue a hostile line against the LPDR government and the Lao people.

We would like to express deep gratitude to the SRV, the Soviet Union, other fraternal socialist countries and various friendly countries for cooperating with the LPDR in an all-round manner. We highly appreciate the economic and technical assistance given by them to our country. This assistance is all-round and gratuitous.

We would like to sincerely thank the United Nations and various international and private organizations for giving assistance and support to us.

Mr Chairman, the new assistance program for 1980 which will be approved by this conference is of important significance to the least developed countries. We hope that the ongoing negotiations on this new program of action will achieve concrete results since it concerns assistance for the poorest countries in the world and since it is time for the richest countries to express the necessary political intentions to support them.

In a positive response to the aspirations of these poorest countries mentioned in the various proposals advanced by the Group of 77, we earnestly hope that proposals advanced by other groups will not be aimed at darkening the legitimate objectives of the least developed countries.

The LPDR will do everything it can to comply with the stipulations of the 1980 program of action. Our government has acknowledged this program and will take all necessary measures to implement it by cooperating with various responsible UN organizations.

In conclusion, in the spirit of cooperation, we wish the conference glorious success.

I thank you, Mr Chairman.

TEXTILE GOODS EXPORTS TO U.S.--Karachi, October 3--Exporters of certain categories of textile goods to the United States of America will henceforth need no prior approval from Export Promotion Bureau for the shipment of their consignments to USA. According to an official source the availability of the export quotas of certain categories of textile goods which include shirts, gloves and trousers for the USA has improved following consultations with American Government. Consequently the Bureau has advised all such exporters to arrange for shipment of their consignments to USA without seeking prior approval. Those exporters who have already applied for prior approval for making shipments to USA under the prescribed categories have also been declared free to make shipments if they have confirmed orders or letters of credits irrespective of the fact whether quota has been allocated to them or not.--PPI [Text] [Lahore THE PAKISTAN TIMES in English 4 Oct 81 p 7]

GAS PRODUCTION UP--More than eight per cent increase was recorded in gas productions from Sui field during January-June this year over the corresponding period of 1980, it was learned here. Increased production of gas was mainly on account of high demand by the Guddu Thermal Power Station and the Sui Northern transmission system. BAN URGED ON TRADE UNIONS--Sheikhupura, Oct 3--A ban on trade unions in all autonomous and semi-autonomous organisations and departments which deal directly with the people, particularly WAPDA, has been demanded by the local Markaz Council. Apart from the untold difficulties and problems caused to the people--the taxpayers--trade unionism in these set-ups, the Council stressed is a drain on the national exchequer. Referring to the endless closure of tubewells the Council demanded a thorough probe into the working and affairs of tubewell operators because the closure of tubewells meant a big setback to the national food endeavour. Negligence and deliberate feet-dragging, the Council continued, have become chronic in organisations dealing with the public and if effective steps are not taken expeditiously it may become too late. The Council also slated the nation-building departments of the Government and accused them of deliberately ignoring resolutions by the Council containing suggestions for the welfare of the people. A demand for financial and administrative powers was also made for the execution of welfare projects. [Text] [Lahore THE PAKISTAN TIMES in English 4 Oct 81 p 3]

OPERATIONS OFFICER IN 2ND ARMY DISCUSSES DK-KPNLF BORDER ACTIVITIES

Bangkok TAWAN MAI in Thai 12 Oct 81 p 4

[Interview with Lt Col Chatraphon Khatnophat, assistant chief for operations, 2nd Army Forward Element in 'Invited Guest' Column]

[Excerpt] [Question] What impact will the establishment of operations bases by the Pol Pot-Sihanouk-Son Sonn group along the border have on Thailand?

[Answer] There sure is going to be a problem here. It is obvious at this time that it is a border war, or guerrilla war. So why are things like this? We see it two ways. There is a need to have absolute power over Kampuchea. If those opposition groups go in to stage raids and then flee back onto Thai soil many times, the Heng Samrin forces will pursue them onto our soil and we will have a Non Mak Mun situation or a Non San Khiap situation. Another problem is a foreign relations problem.

[Question] What will happen if Pol Pot-Sihanouk-Son Sonn set up a headquarters in Thailand?

[Answer] If we adhere to the principle of neutrality, then the establishment of a joint headquarters by Pol Pot-Sihanouk-Son Sann would not be correct. But at this time, this is only being discussed and it is not known what form this will take. In terms of diplomatic or political policy, I do not know what they will do. But in military terms, they must make an effort to make the battlefield outside the country as much as possible; this would be good.

[Question] [Are we] giving support to these groups or not?

[Answer] In principle, we are neutral. We are not helping anybody. But in the actual situation...we cannot say. Because we feel that we must make the combat zone outside the country, we push them to fight outside of the country.

U.S. ROLE IN THAI POLITICS DISCUSSED

Bangkok SU ANAKHOT in Thai 4-10 Oct 81 pp 6-10

[Excerpts] The American Embassy--A Legitimizing Force

The great power, the United States, when it confers recognition on an administration or institution, that is tantamount to worldwide legitimization of that administration or institution.

Examples can be clearly seen from the past. The United States announced its recognition of the government of Khuang Aphaiwong, who set up his administration in March, 1948 after the overthrow of the administration of Pridi Phanomyong. The same holds with the U.S. Embassy as it came to play a role in formally recognizing all Thai military leaders as they took power, whether it was Field Marshal P. Phibunsongkhram, Field Marshal Sarit Thanarat or Field Marshal Thanom Kittikhachon up to the events of 14 October 1973.

After that, the U.S. Embassy (and other embassies in Thailand) reduced their role in legitimizing the new governments of Sanya Thammasak and those of subsequent democratic administrations.

After the events of 6 October 1976, the U.S. Embassy did not once again play a role in legitimizing Thailand's new government to the extent it had in the past, but it still gave its approval to the "ruling class" in many other forms.

There are reports that right after the Thanin administration had been established, Ambassador White house turned over five American helicopters to Thanin for use in narcotics suppression. In May, 1977, the U.S. ambassador led the former prime minister and high-ranking military leaders on a visit to the aircraft carrier USS Constellation. Only a month after that the embassy sent a personal letter from President Carter to former Prime Minister Thanin to praise the Thai Government for its strong role in reducing the quantities of narcotics in the region.

From the role played by the U.S. Embassy recently, it may be concluded that one trend of U.S. policy is to generally grant formal approval and support to the ruling classes in Thai society that are "conservative" or those rulers who are able to create order in maintaining the status quo in Thai society.

One result of this is that among Thai military leadership circles, there has arisen basic assumption that they will be given formal recognition by the United States, legitimizing them politically and leading to recognition by other Western nations.

At the same time for the United States, the personal qualities and fame of the U.S. ambassador likewise all play a part in promoting the legitimization conferred on the Thai ruling class at the time. For example: Ambassador William J. Donovan (1953-1954), a close friend of President Eisenhower, had a part in helping to greatly expand the Thai armed forces, especially those of the police by approving and promoting the power of Pol Gen Phao Sriyanon, the director general of the police department at the time as did John E. Peurifoy, who was very anti-communist. He was the one who arranged for Field Marshal P. Phibunsongkhram to take a world tour. During the era of Field Marshal Sarit Thanarat, he was also supported militarily and socially by a close friend of President Kennedy, Ambassador Kenneth T. Young.

American ambassadors who did not achieve the expected success were those like Max W. Bishop who was resisted mightily concerning U.S. military assistance programs during the rule of Field Marshal Phibunsongkhram and William Kintner who was appointed ambassador after the events of 14 October 1973. Although the latter was a political science professor at the University of Pennsylvania, he did not use his knowledge or abilities in promoting Thai political stability at all. Moreover, Whitehouse's tenure which started in 1975 brought great resistance from students and intellectuals especially in the struggle to remove U.S. bases in Thailand.

Catching the Eye of--the Eagle, Political Signs

"The U.S. Embassy simply promotes dictatorship..." is the constantly heard statement which the United States is trying to deny. It has always said that it supports gradual, evolutionary change of a democratic form of constitutional government and that it promotes popular participation in the political process.

An American embassy official stated that "The embassy encourages all political parties that have joined the government and the political forces that are in opposition to the government, but the [embassy] role in the latter category was very difficult at a time when Thailand was ruled by a military dictatorship. When Thailand has been a quasi-democracy, the embassy has gone out to make contact with important opposition figures."

That embassy officer gave an example in the case of the U.S. disagreement with the actions which attempted to destroy the democratic system, such as that period following the 1947 coup. Ambassador Stanton demonstrated his "viewpoint" in that situation. Also, during Thailand's long administration by military dictatorship, Ambassador Martin demonstrated the wishes of the United States concerning political and economic reforms in Thailand. Another time was right after 14 October 1973. Ambassador Kintner formally praised the political reforms that had occurred in Thai history.

"We welcome developments which open the way for the Thai people to participate much more directly in their government.... We congratulate the youth of Thailand who have opened a brilliant new era in the annals of Thai history.

However, the problem with the form which the U.S. attempts to show is that it is suspiciously self-contradictory. Such as during the administration of Sanya Thammasak, the U.S. Embassy, through the operations of the CIA, made an effort to sound out the attitudes of the Thai Government to know whether it would "follow the behind" of the United States. This was don in 1974 by the CIA base in Sakon Nakhon sending a letter to then-Prime Minister Sanya Thammasak claiming to be a communist named "Chamrat." That letter stated that the CPT would be glad to negotiate a cease-fire with the government, requesting that the zones of communist control be broken off and turned over to a CPT administration. It appeared that after U.S. officials were questioned, this was discovered to be the handiwork of the CIA.

It was the same way with the establishment of U.S. military bases in Thailand which they used in the Indochina war and in the Mayaguez incident in which the United States violated Thai sovereignty during the administration of MR Khukrit Pramote. This proved that U.S. actions did not respect Thai independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity.

The Prem Government--Fulfilling Reagan Policy?

After the Indochina War, the United States made a strategic and foreign policy blunder which was the starting point of the U.S. inertia toward Thailand.

"The main thing is that a conflict has arisen between the CIA station chief in Thailand and the American ambassador concerning the security of Thailand. Each one wants approval and so he sits down and writes a report to his superiors. The U.S. Government itself is not certain whose information is right or wrong," the embassy official said. "When a new ambassador comes in, things will probably get better."

The internal problems of the U.S. Embassy are partly to blame for the deterioration in Thai-U.S. relations, especially in the period following the fall of Gen Kriangsak Chamanan's administration in February 1980.

"Shortly after General Prem's administration took over from Kriangsak, the United States did not trust him, because certain high-level individuals in his cabinet leaned toward the Soviets," a source in the U.S. Embassy said, adding "there probably had to be some definite proof, but now for the Prem II administration, everything has changed and one could say that everything has improved in the eyes of the foreigners."

Present Thai Government policies show a tendency to accommodate President Reagan's policies to a great extent. Frank Carlucci, U.S. assistant secretary of defense visited Thailand and called on General Prem from 24-25 September. He said that the United States and Thailand have "an especially close congruence of views" concerning the increased threat from the military buildup and Soviet abusive policies.

"The United States sincerely holds its responsibilities toward Thailand in accordance with the Manila Pact...and is acting to assist Thailand in improving its capabilities to meet those threats," said Carlucci.

However, recently it seems that the clear shape of Thai policy has been more and more pro-U.S. Some Thai officers who were especially close to the United States were appointed to important positions such as Gen Saiyut Kertphon. It can be said that he is the most pro-American appointee to the position of supreme commander.

"The fact that they invited us shows that everything must be getting better. Previously, the United States shunned us, never inviting us because they viewed the government as unstable--a here-today-gone-tomorrow thing. But the invitations we are getting now mean that we will probably make it," a news source close to the Thai Government told SU ANAKHOT.

Another political trend we can see is that the United States, via ex-Ambassador Morton Abramowitz, was very close to Gen Kriangsak Chamanan. "The United States sees that Kriangsak could return. From those close to the leadership, it looks like there have been high-level agreements with the leaders of the important parties not to work with the government until General Prem's term expires 8 months from now. It is certain that General Prem will not enter the political arena, but after that..." a source close to the government said.

Conclusion

Future Thai political trends in the Prem administration are generally headed in a more pro-American direction than they were at the beginning of his administration. Relations that follow this visit to the United States will probably prove that the United States "is paying more attention to Thailand," in the words of Burton Levin, U.S. charge d'affaires in Thailand.

The steady stream of American VIP visitors--senators, congressmen and high-level U.S. Government officials--are for the purpose of making the good relations better than they had been.

Burton [Levin] stated that President Reagan has declared that Thailand and Southeast Asia will be protected and strengthened at all times. This is directly contrary to the declarations that followed the Vietnam War, that the United States would withdraw from the region.

Therefore, it can be stated that from now on, during John Gunther Dean's tenure as American ambassador, the U.S. Embassy will become once again the political "heart" in that it will play a much bigger role in Thailand than in the past.

And in this role, will the U.S. Embassy promote the development of democratic Thai politics or will it lead Thailand back into the dictatorship we have had before? This is something we have to keep close track of.

Whatever direction Thai politics takes depends only on how much the Thai Government fulfills U.S. foreign policy [goals].

EDITORIAL DISCUSSES LOCAL ECONOMY

BK050105 Bangkok NATION REVIEW in English 5 Oct 81 p 4

[Editorial: "We Must First Set Economic House in Order"]

[Text] Trade and foreign investment, as advertised, will figure high during Prime Minister Phem Tinsulanon's visit to the United States and he has already set the targets when he met with Thai ambassadors stationed in Western Europe. The objectives are good but the question will always remain whether Prem's efforts will succeed and, if they do, when. It is a fact that trade exhibitions and export-oriented efforts by our diplomatic missions abroad do produce results, but what Thailand needs is not a sudden upsurge in trade followed soon by a tapering off. Only a steady stream of foreign trade will enable planners to base our economy on predictable figures.

Foreign investment is altogether a different matter and it is an arcane subject that usually confounds experts. The basic principle of securing foreign investment is not only obtaining a large amount of capital but also the attraction of technology in various fields which is not now available in Thailand. A strictly capital-oriented investment will not qualify as foreign investment since capital can be generated locally without the profits having to be shared with investors from abroad.

Foreign investors are highly sensitive persons since it is they who decide to export to Thailand, or for that matter any other country, both capital and technology. If there is some suspicion of "risk" in one country--the "risk" being real or imaginary--there are several other countries which are vying for that investment and foreign investors can pick and choose. Foreign investors study political questions very seriously. For instance, the guerrilla war that is going on in Kampuchea may not have any influence on Thailand but, for no fault of ours, its effect rubs off on us.

Further Thailand does not project an image of political stability, immaterial of what we ourselves may think. During the past 10 years we have had seven prime ministers, two successful coups d'etat, two unsuccessful ones, and one violent overthrow of the government. To a foreigner who is going to invest his capital in Thailand and who is not an intimate scholar of current Thai politics, our political "instability" will definitely be considered a risk for business. He will certainly compare us unfavourably to Singapore or Indonesia. To add to all this, the American Chamber of Commerce is presenting no glowing picture of Thailand.

It may possibly be an understatement to say that the economy of the country is not in good shape. The cost of living has been steadily rising and the government has been forced to increase the minimum wage--which, in turn, means pumping more money into an over-heated economy. The baht has been devalued and the foreign investor will wonder that if he is to invest in Thailand and take away part of the profits from this country, how much his profits will shrink if there is further devaluation. Our balance of payments, our foreign reserves and foreign loans do not present a very healthy picture--at least not healthy enough to disabuse a foreign investor of pessimistic ideas.

We know that Prime Minister Prem will make a strong sales pitch but however ingenious that may be, the first thing he must do should be to convince his audience of the programme he will implement in order to put Thailand's economic house in order. We know that investing in Thailand will be an excellent opportunity for foreign businessmen and business organizations but convincing them will require more than just painting a bright verbal picture.

PRISONER EXCHANGE CALL OPPOSED

BK201022 Bangkok THAI RAT in Thai 20 Oct 81 p 3

[Editorial: "Western Prisoners in Thailand"]

[Text] There was a report that the European Parliament, whose members are the countries in the European Common Market, has passed a resolution calling for a discussion with the Thai government on the repatriation of drug convicts in Thai prisons so that those young Westerners can serve their sentences in up-to-standard prisons in their respective countries.

The resolution, adopted by a majority vote by the European Parliament, constitutes a gross interference in Thailand's internal affairs and is not a resolution worthy of civilized countries. Thailand has never been a colony of any European country, in the past or now. Those people were convicted to serve jail terms in Thai prisons because they committed serious crimes of either possessing narcotics or engaging in narcotics trading. Some of them even belong to major drug trafficking rackets. Their crime is an offense against the health and well-being of other people including those in their own countries.

Recently, foreign drug prisoners at Bang Khwang prison staged a hunger strike demanding an exchange of prisoners between Thailand and their countries. Their strike was called off when no attention was paid to it. Yet, the European Parliament finally adopted the resolution which constitutes an interference in Thailand's internal affairs.

We want the Thai Government to reject any discussion if the European Parliament's resolution is forwarded to it. In addition, we must indicate to those Westerners that their act is an interference in Thailand's internal affairs. We must tell them that if they do not want their people to serve prison sentences in Thailand they must prevent them from committing crimes in this country. Otherwise, they must share the same prisons as Thai prisoners because they are not considered special by being Westerners. They have no right to demand treatment in prisons with better standards than Thai prisons.

EDITORIAL DISCUSSES SUPPORT OF LEADERSHIP

BK151548 Bangkok SIAM RAT in Thai 11 Oct 81 p 2

[Editorial: "A Good Government in the Eyes of the Military"]

Army commander in chief Gen Prayut Charumani said the soldiers will support any good government with honest leadership, dedicated to the cause of the people and which works to bring happiness to the people. We have already seen that a dishonest and corrupt government was the cause of the downfall of the countries in Indochina. The military, therefore, wants a clean and honest government, he said.

The recent military reshuffle was a big event since we have a new supreme commander and new commanders of the three armed forces replacing the former leaders who reached retirement age at the same time. It was appropriate, therefore, for the new supreme commander and the armed forces leaders to issue a statement on their policy and the direction they will take in assuming their responsibilities.

Any change within the military is always of great interest to the people, because the military has been involved in the politics to such an extent that it is said the military and politics are inseparable. It is generally understood that any government without the backing of the military could face the problem of instability and could not ultimately survive.

Since this is the general belief, it is natural to assume that the views of the new military leaders regarding the government are of significance. We agree with the view of the army commander in chief that the military will support a good government with honest leaders, like the present government we have. We have already seen that the Indochinese countries could not survive because they lacked a good government and honest leadership.

Yet, in our opinion, it is not sufficient that a good government be defined only as a government with an honest person as its leader. In the present situation, the role of a government is not primarily its capability to cope with internal and external communist threats and to wage a war to win loyalty of the populace. Rather, it has a bigger problem to cope with, that is, the economic difficulties, the poverty hardships of daily life. A good government, therefore, needs more than just one honest person as its leaders. All cabinet ministers must be trusted by the public for their integrity.

An important element of a government, therefore, is that it must stand ready to protect the interests of the majority. Such a government can only come from democratic elections by the people, and cannot be a government that is democratic only by name.

SOEM RETURNS FROM EGYPT--Deputy Prime Minister Soem Na Nakhon returned this morning from Egypt where he represented Thailand at the funeral of President Anwar al-Sadat. He told newsmen on his arrival that the Thai delegation was accorded an excellent welcome by the Egyptian Government. The Egyptian deputy prime minister for people's assembly affairs met the Thai delegation at the airport. The Thai delegation, on behalf of its government, expressed condolences to the acting Egyptian President on the passing away of President Anwar al-Sadat. General Soem said Egypt has to form a new government as soon as possible to run the country. The Egyptian foreign minister reiterated that there will be no change in Egypt's foreign policy. The deputy prime minister said he talked with Egyptian government officials about bilateral relations, including trade. It was agreed that trade should be increased since the present volume is too small. He noted that Egypt has a food problem, since only 4 percent of its land is arable while the rest is mainly desert. Egypt has to import a large amount of meat for local consumption every year. Asked if he had been told about who was responsible for the killing of President al-Sadat, General Soem said he did not talk with the Egyptian leaders on the matter. He had learned, however, that investigations are being carried out by the Egyptian authorities and that it was a conspiracy among some soldiers and civilians. He said he also learned of extensive U.S. support for Egypt in various areas. Speaking about the security arrangements for President al-Sadat's funeral, General Soem said security was tight and the funeral procession was guarded throughout by soldiers. He said what happened in Egypt should serve as a lesson to us and that we must improve our security system. [Text] [BK150946 Bangkok Domestic Service in Thai 1300 GMT 14 Oct 81]

PREM TALKS WITH ENVOYS--During a meeting with Thai ambassadors to 12 European countries during his stopover in Copenhagen yesterday, Prime Minister Gen Prem Tinsulanon asked the ambassadors to try to hold talks with officials of the EEC countries to preserve quotas for Thai textile products, radio and television sets because these products can well compete in the EEC markets, help Thailand earn more foreign income and generate jobs for Thai workers. The ambassadors were instructed to encourage the countries they are assigned to not to cut quotas for Thai tapioca, although Thai tapioca has met with very strong competition because corn residue and tapioca from some countries are exempted from import duty. Other Thai products such as canned pineapple can also compete in those markets because of their good quality and reasonable prices. The ambassadors were assigned to pursuade the EEC countries to join the international organization for the stabilization of sugar price and to appeal to the Western European countries to support Thailand's application for permanent membership in the general agreement on tariffs and trade. Regarding the narcotics problem, some European countries such as Norway, the Netherlands and West Germany are now giving assistance to Thailand in its narcotics suppression work. Other countries should also be requested to cooperate in this matter because narcotics problems can effect all countries. This morning, the Danish prime minister had breakfast and held personal talks with the Thai prime minister at the Royal Hotel, where the latter was staying. The Thai prime minister and his party left Copenhagen for New York at 1240 today and were scheduled to arrive in New York at 1505. They will stay at the Waldorf Astoria Hotel during their visit to New York. [Text] [BK031308 Bangkok Domestic Service in Thai 1200 GMT 3 Sep 81]

PRC NATIONAL DAY--[Greeting message from the king to the chairman of the National People's Congress of the PRC on the PRC National Day, 1 October] On the occasion of the National Day of the PRC, I would like to extend to you my wishes for your happiness and for the prosperity of the Chinese people. CANADIAN AID--The Canadian Government has given another sum of 625,800 baht as aid to the office of the Narcotics Control Board for use under the Thai-Canadian crops substitution program. The aid was presented to Deputy Prime Minister Gen Prachuap Suntharangkun, in his capacity as chairman of the Narcotics Control Board, on 28 September. The fund will be used for setting up of an Arabica coffee research and experimental station and a cold storage for crop seeds to be provided to hilltribes under the opium substitution program. UNITED NATIONS TECHNICAL AID--The United Nations has granted an aid worth 10 million baht covering a period of 4 years for the expansion of the Ministry of Science, Technology and Energy. The deputy undersecretary of the ministry said the aid is aimed at developing science and technology policy, data collection and equipment. The first group of experts will arrive in December from Korea, Japan and the United States. Thai officials will also be sent for training in those three countries. TAPIOCA EXPORTS--The Foreign Trade Department reports that in the first 9 months of this year, Thailand exported 4.6 million tons of tapioca products worth about 12 billion baht as compared to the export of 3.4 million tons of tapioca products worth 9.4 billion baht during the same period last year. Tapioca products exported to the EEC totalled 4.1 million tons during the first 9 months of this year. [BK081153 Bangkok Voice of Free Asia in English 1100 GMT 5 Oct 81 BK]

OFFICIAL TO SADAT FUNERAL--Deputy Prime Minister Gen Soem Na Nakhon left last night for Egypt as head of the Thai delegation to attend the funeral of late President Anwar al-Sadat. Other Thai delegates who accompanied General Soem include minister of the prime minister's office Lt Gen Chan Angsuchot, secretary to the deputy prime minister Charan Kunlawanit and a representative of the Foreign Ministry. His Majesty the King yesterday cabled a message of condolence to acting president Husni Mubarak and the family of the late president. The Thai ambassador in Cairo will join the delegation at the funeral. The four-member delegation will stop over in Rome to take the connecting flight to Cairo. CORN SALE TO ROK--Thai exports have won a Korean bid to export 20,000 tons of maize to South Korea for delivery around October or November. Phat Itsarasena, director general of the Foreign Trade Department, has disclosed that this export order will be worth about 64 million baht as the winning bid has quoted the FOB price of $139 per ton. The price of maize in Chicago at present is around $133 per ton. [BK220451 Bangkok Voice of Free Asia in English 1100 GMT 17 Sep 81 BK]

OPEC HYDROELECTRIC LOAN--Thailand is to get a loan of about U.S.$21 million at a 1 percent interest rate from the OPEC fund for international development to finance a hydroelectric project in the country. The loan agreement was signed in Vienna on 18 September by the Thai ambassador to Austria and the OPEC fund director general. It has a 20-year maturity period, including a 5-year grace period, and carries a service charge of 0.75 percent per annum to be paid every 6 months. REFINERY PRODUCTION INCREASE--The Industry Ministry has given approval to Esso Standard Thailand to proceed with its scheme to step up the production capacity of its Si Racha oil refinery from 46,000 barrels per day to 63,000 barrels per day. All terms and conditions have been agreed upon by the authorities. It is expected the contract will be signed within 2 months of the terms and conditions being approved by the National Petroleum Policy Committee. CORN ACCORD WITH SINGAPORE--Thailand and Singapore signed a maize trade agreement on 28 September making the first time in the maize trade history of the two countries whereby Singapore will buy between 300,000 to 360,000 tons of maize from Thailand during the 12 months from November. The agreement makes Singapore the third country to sign a long-term maize supply agreement with Thailand this year. Taiwan and Hong Kong have already signed agreements. Based on the present maize export price, the Singapore deal is worth between 1,035 and 1,240 million baht. It was signed in Bangkok by Mr Surphon Atsawasirayothin, president of the Thai Maize and Producer Traders Association and representatives of eight companies from Singaore. CORN ORDER FROM PHILIPPINES--The Philippine Government has, through its National Food Authority [NFA], placed an order for 20,000 tons of Thai maize worth about 71 million baht with the Board of Trade [BOT] of Thailand, according to the executive secretary of BOT, Mr Thapana Bunnak. Mr Thapana, who was a member of the three-man delegation headed by BOT Vice President Pricha Tanprasoet who concluded the deal with the NFA, expressed confidence that the NFA will buy at least another 40,000 tons, bringing the total purchase of Thai maize in the 1981-82 season to 60,000 tons. The agreement for the first 20,000 tons was signed in Manila recently by Mr Pricha who represented the BOT and the administrator of the NFA, Mr Jesus T. Tanchanco. OVERFLIGHT REQUEST TO USSR--Bangkok, 17 Sep --Thailand has asked the Soviet Union to double overflight rights for its flag carrier, Thai International (THAI), a senior Communications Ministry official said today. Undersecretary of state for communications Choengchan Kamphu said he put the request to Soviet civil aviation authorities during a recent visit to Moscow as part of a Thai Government delegation led by deputy premier Praman Adireksan. THAI currently overflies the Soviet Union three times per week on flights to Europe. Mr Choengchan said he expected the Soviet Union to give the greenlight to the request--for about six overflights per week--by the end of this year. Thailand is allowing the Soviet carrier Aeroflot to make about seven overflights per week, he noted. [Text] [Hong Kong AFP in English 0625 GMT 17 Sep 81 BK]

SCIENTISTS' WARNING ON ANTARCTIC TERRITORY

BK140812 Sydney WEEKEND AUSTRALIAN in English 26-27 Sep 81 p 2

[Article by Peter Dwyer]

[Text] Australian Antarctic scientists believe the nation will lose much of its Antarctic territory to the Russians if it doesn't spend more than $100 million as soon as possible to reaffirm its claim.

With the territory would go potentially rich oil and mineral deposits the scientists say Australia has been too slow in trying to prove.

The scientists will meet informally in Canberra next week to begin preparing a submission for the federal government on what should be done about mineral exploration.

They want Australia to get on with the job of exploration and study its environmental effects before the present Antarctic treaty runs out in 1991 and the continent is "up for grabs."

Russia has never recognised Australia's Antarctic territory claim and has built four stations of its own in the zone.

The Russian stations are much larger than Australia's Mawson, Davis and Casey, and much more scientifically effective, according to the scientists.

One of them, the deputy director of the Australian Antarctic Division's headquarters in Hobart, Dr Pat Quilty, said yesterday it was scientific performance that counted in the international Antarctic forum.

He said: "If Australia is to have any credibility in that international forum, it must produce results.

"That's where we're being swamped by the Russians. They're doing good work and a lot of it, and they're getting it all published. They have gone in there in a big way.

"We haven't. We've gone down and scratched around to do a few little things with the logistics we have. We now have to sit down and say if we are going to do things in Antarctica, we're going to do them properly.

"The time has come for the Australian Government to decide what to do with its Antarctic claim. I believe the government does not know what it is doing in Antartica. We are there.

"It is time they found out what they think the Australian people should get out of Antarctica."

The $100 million-plus the scientists say must be spent covers logistics for the Antarctic operation and does not include the cost of resource exploration.

Dr Quilty said exploration in northern Canada and Alaska, similar to that he anticipated Australia should conduct in Antarctica, received an annual budget of between $4 million and $6 million.

The work would mainly involve rebuilding the three Antarctic stations, providing a new ship to service them and building a runway in the ice-free area near Davis station.

The government has already committed $59 million to a station rebuilding program and work has begun, but the Antarctic Division fears the spending would be worthless unless the government quickly allocates more than $50 million extra for the new ship and the airstrip and drastically steps up its rebuilding program.

The Danish ships now servicing Australian stations in Antarctica are considered by the division as being near the end of their days, and division officers say there are not many other ice-toughened ships around.

The division says an airstrip would make regular flights by scientists for short research periods possible. At the moment, they either spend several weeks on a boat getting to and from Antarctica or are forced to take infrequent flights through Christchurch, New Zealand, and the American Antarctica station McMurdo.

Scientists say these logistics matters need urgent attention before Australia can be seen to be conducting significant scientific research in its territory and, as a result, be able to stake an acceptable claim.

Dr Quilty said: "One matter that is rearing its head as a major subject in any treaty negotiations after 1991 is minerals, particularly oil.

"There are some areas of Antarctica that could have very high oil potential and it's oil that the world is going to need.

"We need to know what the oil potential of the Australian territories is. If we could show there were areas of high potential, government policy would probably be to hold on to our territories.

"With the Antarctic territories and the Australian continent, Australia lays claim to about 10 percent of the world's land mass and has only 0.3 percent of the world's population. Somewhere, someone is going to notice that imbalance.

"If we want to maintain that sovereignty over the Antarctic we have to be seen internationally to be responsible for the maintenance of the territories."

ANTARCTIC STATIONS IN NEED OF REPAIR

BK140401 Sydney THE AUSTRALIAN in English 1 Oct 81 p 2

[Article by Jane Ford]

[Text] Australia's Antarctic stations are in such disrepair that questions are being raised on whether Australia can continue its role as an effective Antarctic treaty member.

A government committee has found that buildings at Casey, Mawson and Davis stations have deteriorated so much that continuous maintenance is no longer practical and they have to be replaced.

In a report on redevelopment of the stations the parliamentary standing committee on public works said the rebuilding of three stations, at a cost of $58 million, must go ahead immediately if Australia is to continue scientific research and maintain an effective presence on the continent.

Buildings leaked, non-protected steel was heavily rusted, power shortages were constant and there were serious waste disposal problems. More, safety and efficiency were being affected.

The committee proposed that new buildings be constructed at the three stations over the next 10 years to a new design which would give larger and more attractive living and sleeping quarters, greatly improved generating facilities, better water, waste disposal and fire protection systems, and improved recreation facilities.

The new building system had been field tested in Antarctica and could be prefabricated in Australia and shipped to the continent for erection.

A unique integrated system of sewage and waste disposal had been developed to minimise discharge to the environment. It involved a biological treatment plant, the first to be installed in Antarctica, and a compaction unit for storage of solid waste for removal to Australia.

The committee said there was a need for an urgent investigation into providing Australia's polar stations with air services for travel to and within Antarctica.

A multi-purpose resupply and research vessel was also necessary if Australia was to effectively carry out research into living marine resources.

This proposal, which has been on the drawing board for a number of years, received no funding in the budget and recently the director of the Antarctic Division, Mr C. McCue, told a Senate estimates committee that the division's ship design group had been disbanded and work on the ship had been completed as far as the group could take it. "There is no group and there is no money to pay for it," Mr McCue said.

The parliamentary committee also supported the establishment of a fourth station on the continent and said it should be built in the eastern sector.

"The committee sees the continuing presence in Antarctica as a national commitment, an endeavor in which industry has a very real and vital role to contribute," the report said.

This year's budget allowed just over $1 million for the start of construction work on the stations.

CANBERRA'S 'PASSIVE' STAND ON TIMOR CRITICIZED

BK210911 Sydney THE AUSTRALIAN in English 6 Oct 81 p 3

[Article by David Wilson]

[Text] The Australian Council for Overseas Aid has criticised the federal government's "passive acceptance" of continuing wholesale violation of human rights in East Timor.

The council called on the government to suspend all military aid to Indonesia until there had been "a genuine process of self-determination in Timor."

The council chairman, Mr Richard Alston, who is also state president of the Victorian Liberal Party, told a council meeting in Melbourne that in view of Indonesia's long history of prevarication on events in East Timor it was impossible to accept Jakarta's denials of a major offensive in that area.

The meeting was responding to Indonesian claims that there was no renewed military action in East Timor to suppress the independence movement.

THE AUSTRALIAN published a report by the Act'on for World Development Organisation, a joint Catholic-Protestant agency, that a campaign of "pacification" by Indonesian troops in East Timor threatened a serious famine within the next few months.

The report said East Timorese were being forced to join the forces hunting Fretilin (independence) guerrillas and crop-planting was being affected.

The agency said Indonesian forces were destroying food to prevent supplies reaching the guerrillas.

Mr Alston said: "Indonesia's comments are clearly designed to deflect criticism in the coming United Nations debate on the question of East Timor.

"Even the Jakarta press in recent times has reported renewed Indonesian military operations in East Timor.

"Furthermore several overseas aid agency sources at the council meeting have confirmed that such operations are presently under way and are severely dislocating life in East Timor, and are likely to lead to a new famine affecting the lives of thousands of people."

The council resolved to call on the Commonwealth heads of government meeting and individual Commonwealth countries to condemn Indonesia for its military occupation of East Timor and the denial of self-determination to the Timorese people.

It called also on the Senate to establish a select committee to inquire into all aspects of the federal government's conduct of its policy on East Timor, and reiterated its support for the UN resolution favoring genuine self-determination in East Timor.

The council will:

--Advise the International Committee of the Red Cross in Geneva about the situation in East Timor, urging it to resume its food and medical program and to establish a prison visitation program there and,

--Seek permission from the Indonesian Government for Australian aid agencies to carry out an on-the-spot investigation in East Timor with a view to establishing an aid program there.

BRIEFS

UNEMPLOYMENT FIGURES--After several months of improvement, unemployment in Australia has taken a turn to the worst. Bureau of Statistics figures released in Canberra today show the number of people looking for full time work rose by 25,000 in July to 315,000, which amounts to 5.6 percent of the work force. This compares with 5.1 percent unemployment in June and 5.8 percent in July last year. The state most affected is South Australia. Unemployment there stands at 8.6 percent, 2 percent above the national average. [Text] [BK100659 Melbourne Overseas Service in English 0830 GMT 6 Aug 81]

EEC OFFICE IN CANBERRA--The EEC has opened an office in Canberra to try to improve relations with Australia. The EEC will seek regular discussions with government leaders and officials in attempts to overcome Australia's expressed discontent with the EEC marketing policies. The office has been established following discussions between EEC and Prime Minister Fraser 4 years ago. Deputy Prime Minister Anthony recently said that Australia was having a big battle with the EEC's unfair marketing policy. [BK180957 Melbourne Overseas Service in English 0830 GMT 12 Aug 81]

ENERGY CONSUMPTION--Australia's consumption of petroleum products is continuing to fall. Sales for the 10 major petroleum products in 1980-81 are nearly 3 percent lower than in 1979-80 and the lowest for any other annual period since 1976. The largest percentage reduction has occurred in the use of stationary fuel, such as heating oil, industrial and marine diesel fuel and lighting kerosene. However, petrol consumption has risen slightly. Sales of petrol in 1980-81 are less than 1 percent higher than in the previous financial year, but well below the peak level of annual consumption in 1979. The minister for national development and energy said the overall figures show the success of the government policy of encouraging energy conservation and substitution. [BK180957 Melbourne Overseas Service in English 0830 GMT 14 Aug 81]

MINERAL PRODUCTION--The minister for national energy said the value of mineral production in Australia last year has been estimated at a record A$7,060 million or nearly US$8,000 million. The Bureau of Mineral Resources has also estimated that mineral export reached A$6,800 million last year, about US$7,690 million. Black coal, iron ore and alumina were the major contributors. The value of mineral import last year rose by 63 percent to A$2,131 million or more than US$2,400 million. Crude oil was the major import. [BK180957 Melbourne Overseas Service in English 0830 GMT 13 Aug 81]

BALANCE OF PAYMENT--Australia finished the 1980-81 financial year with a record balance of payment surplus of A$1.15 billion--that is about US$1.3 billion. It was the first annual surplus for 8 years. The main reason for the surplus was the huge capital inflow of more than A$6.5 billion, almost double the previous record inflow in the 1978-79 financial year. This capital inflow more than made up for a record current account deficit caused by poorer trading figures. [Text] [BK180957 Melbourne Overseas Service in English 0830 GMT 12 Aug 81]

ENERGY, EARTH RESOURCES INSTITUTE--The federal government has established an Institute of Energy and Earth Resources with three divisions that will concentrate on energy research. The institute is part of the Government Scientific and Industrial Research Organization [GSIRO]. One of its divisions has taken over the non-nuclear research activities of the Australian Atomic Energy Commission. This division would concentrate on chemical research directed toward development of energy resources, such as the extraction of oil from shale and the exploitation of deep coal reserves. It would also support other GSIRO research into the conversion of coal into oil, energy storage and solar energy. The institute's other energy research divisions would be engineering orientated. This division's short-term objectives would include research into how industries could reduce the use of liquid fuel for heat generation and improvement of the engineering efficiency and mobility of the country's transport system. Its long-term goal would be the development of technology necessary to insure balanced utilization of Austrialia's energy resources. [BK061157 Melbourne Overseas Service in English 0830 GMT 5 Sep 81]

HIGH COMMISSIONER TO CYPRUS--The new Australian high commissioner to Cyprus will be Miss Mary McPherson. Miss McPherson has served in Australian diplomatic services in Europe, the Middle East and Asia since she joined the Foreign Affairs Department in 1937. She is expected to take up her appointment early next year, replacing Miss E. F. Grinwade, who has been acting high commissioner in Cyprus since 1977. FORECAST OF WHEAT CROPS--Canberra, 12 Oct (AFP)--Australian wheat crops of over 20 million tonnes were forecast by Sir Leslie Price, chairman of the Australian Wheat Board, at the launching of the board's new corporate strategy. The forecast of bigger crops was based on projections that wheat plantings would rise from 12 million hectares to 13.6 million hectares in 1985-6. TRADING GROWTH WITH IRAQ--The federal government is expecting a boost to its trade with Iraq. The minister for housing and construction, Mr Mc Veigh, said that in addition to primary products, Iraq was keen to increase its imports from Australia of items such as agricultural machinery, veterinary products, air coolers and medical products. Mr Mc Veigh said Australia's exports to Iraq had grown fivefold over the past 4 years to be worth $226 million last financial year. Mr Mc Veigh has been visiting Iraq as part of a trade mission to four nations and held talks with the Iraqi president, Mr Saddam Husayn. [Text] [BK110909 Melbourne Overseas Service in English 0830 GMT 11 Oct 81]

RECORD QUARTERLY PAYMENT DEFICIT--The Australian Government has announced its highest quarterly balance of payments deficit. A Radio Australia reporter in Canberra says the deficit, which means Australia is buying more than it is selling overseas, may force the government to consider selling Australian goods overseas at cheaper prices. The figures show the deficit for the September quarter to be more than $2.2 billion, that is, more than U.S. $2.5 billion. (Cassidy) says the government was relying on foreign investment as a means of controlling the deficit. Now that this has failed, he says, the opposition economics spokesman, Mr (?Willis), has charged that the government's economic strategy is in disarray. The treasurer, Mr Howard, has told Parliament the deficit is much higher than the government thought it would be. [Excerpt] [BK130936 Melbourne Overseas Service in English 0830 GMT 13 Oct 81]

TRADE BALANCE FAVORS INDONESIA--The resumption of Indonesian oil sales to Australia tipped the balance of trade between the two countries last financial year in Indonesia's favor for the first time in a decade. The assistant Australian minister for trade and resources, Mr McVeigh, said the value of trade between Indonesia and Australia last financial year was almost U.S. $900 million, about $66 million of which was in Indonesia's favor. Speaking in Jakarta at the end of the 2-day visit to Indonesia, Mr McVeigh said the accelerated growth of trade between the two countries was largely a reflection of the resumption of oil sales to Australia. Indonesia's other main exports to Australia were coffee, rubber and tea. Mr McVeigh said Australia's main exports to Indonesia were wheat, zinc, iron, steel, refined petroleum and livestock. COPPER ORE RESERVES--Increased copper ore reserves at the Mount Isa Mines [MIM] are indicated in MIM's annual report released on 19 October. The report says that Mount Isa Mines have an estimated 180 million tons of ore averaging 3 percent copper. Radio Australia finance reporter in Brisbane says the latest copper ore reserves are 60 million tons more than stated in last year's annual report. The annual report also shows for the first time that MIM's silver, lead and zine mine just north of Mount Isa will be brought into full-scale production in the first half of the 1990's. Ore extraction under trial mining conditions at the (Hilton) mine will begin in 1985. [Text] [Melbourne Overseas Service in English 1130 GMT 19 Oct 81 BK]

RURAL PRODUCTION--Canberra, 20 Oct (AFP)--Australian rural production in real terms will decline by 8 percent, according to the Australian Government's Bureau of Agricultural Economics. The bureau, in its official statistics today, said the growth value would show an increase of 9 percent over the drought affected result of last year, but rising farm costs would offset the increase. After allowing for inflation, the net value would decline by 8 percent. Crop production, as against value, would reach high levels. Export returns from major commodities such as wool and wheat will be dampened by the economic recession in industrialised countries. The Bureau of Agricultural Economics released these figures in advance of its normal quarterly review, due in mid-November. [Excerpt] [Hong Kong AFP in English 0631 GMT 20 Oct 81 BK]

FEDERAL POLICE MAIL INTERCEPT POWERS--The federal government may soon give federal police the powers to intercept mail and have access to records for its drug trafficking investigation. The minister for administrative services, Mr Newman, told Parliament today the government was examining the proposal put forward by the (Williams) Royal Commission Into Drugs. But Mr Newman said it was essential to protect the honest citizens' right when working out controls if federal police should be given the power to intercept mail and examine taxation records. KASHMIR CONTINUES PUSH FOR AUTONOMY FROM NEW DELHI

London 8 DAYS in English 12 Sep 81 p 24

[Article by Sundar Rajan: "Kashmir's Lion Bares His Teeth"]

[Text]

SHEIKH MOHOMMED ABDULLAH, the 'Lion of Kashmir,' accepts that the Himalayan state is 'an integral part of India,' but never lets New Delhi forget that it is fundamentally different from India's other states.

He has once again reminded Prime Minister Gandhi that the Kashmiris are determined to maintain the state's autonomous status as the country's only one with a Muslim majority, and to fight for the abrogation of 300 federal laws extended to Kashmir without prior consultation with his National Conference Party.

The occasion was the installation of his 43-year-old son, Farooq Abdullah, as president of the National Conference Party, a post the sheikh held for 40 years. He remains the state's chief minister, but has hinted that he might retire in favour of Farooq after the next elections to the legislative assembly, due in two years. He intends to make sure that the political leadership in Kashmir is in safe hands after his death — he is already 76, and ailing.

Farooq's inauguration is Srinagar was marked by much enthusiasm. The crowds — partly drummed up — and the fiery speeches directed at New Delhi were meant to impress upon the Gandhi government that the sheikh and his National Conference Party alone matter in Kashmir. According to observers, the sheikh does not really expect Gandhi to repeal the 300 laws 'imposed' on his state. Nor does he expect a return to the status quo which prevailed at the time of the partition of the subcontinent, when the Hindu maharajah of Kashmir had yielded to the central government only defence, foreign affairs and communications. But the demand will help Farooq Abdullah rally Kashmiri Muslims behind him, and make up for the fact that he lacks his father's charisma.

A committee of the sheikh's cabinet has prepared a report on what needs to be done to enable Kashmir regain a fully autonomous status within the Indian union. The emphasis will be on negotiations with the federal authorities.

A senior National Conference Party official told 8 Days that if the talks fail, 'the struggle for complete internal autonomy will take other forms.' He did not rule out an open confrontation with the central government 'even if it means the National Conference having to leave office,' and added that the theme of complete autonomy would dominate the next election manifesto.

Gandhi is under pressure from elements in her Congress Party to invoke federal powers and dismiss the Abdullah regime, paving the way for a mid-term election to the state assembly. But she seems realistic enough to appreciate that her party in Kashmir has little hope of winning the election. At the same time, she does not think that the sheikh or his son can afford to court open confrontation.

Though anti-Indian sentiment has grown in Kashmir in the last three years, New Delhi feels that it is in the sheikh's own interests to keep the militant pro-Pakistani elements under control. He clearly does not want to exchange Indian for Pakistani suzerainty. Abdullah's biggest problem is that Kashmir gets nearly 75 per cent of its finances from New Delhi, and would go bankrupt without this money.

USSR MEDICAL TEAM STEPS UP DRUG PURCHASES

London 8 DAYS in English 12 Sep 81 p 25

[Article: "Soviets Buy Indian Drugs"]

[Text]

THE SOVIET Union is stepping up its drug purchases from India, and will give preference to national companies over multinationals operating in the country according to a Soviet medical team which recently visited Indian pharmaceutical factories. India is currently exporting Indian rupees — 400m ($44m) worth of drugs to the Soviet Union, but the share of Indian national companies in this so far is only around 25 per cent or even less, according to industry sources.

Dr Vladimir Lepakin, the leader of the Soviet medical team, said that his country is interested in buying larger quantities of Indian drugs for the treatment of cardiovascular and kidney ailments. Apparently, some Indian herbal medicines had highly impressed Soviet doctors — one which Lepakin specifically mentioned is for the treatment of liver disorders. Interest in this seems to have been sparked by growing alchoholism in the Soviet Union.

Dr Lepakin caterogically denied published reports that the Soviet Union still preferred to import drugs produced under brand names. While admitting that drugs produced under certain brand names offered considerable guarantees of reliability, he said that the Soviet Union was encouraging the use of drugs under generic names, as a matter of policy.

I.A. Modi, managing director of a leading Indian drug firm, said that the Soviet delegation got a firm assurance that the quality of drugs produced by Indian national companies was in no way inferior to those produced by multinationals. He was happy about the Soviet response.

FAR EAST EXPERT ANALYZES CHINA'S ATTITUDE

Jakarta KOMPAS in Indonesia 14 Aug 81 pp 1, 5

[Article: "Dr Lie Tek Tjeng Believes That Relations for 'Political and Morale Reasons Is Stated Honestly; in Politics There Is No Absolute Guarantee"]

[Excerpts] The statement of Zhao Ziyang, prime minister of the People's Republic of China, to the effect that China's relations with communist parties or movements in the Philippines, Thailand, Malaysia, and Indonesia are limited to "politics and morale" is reasonably honest and can be upheld politically.

Since, Dr Lie Tek Tjeng replied in response to a question from KOMPAS on Thursday [13 August], there is no absolute guarantee, of course, in political affairs. "If you play poker, there are rules of the game so the rule for politcal affairs is that there is no absolute guarantee," Dr Kie said. He is an expert on problems of the Far East at the Indonesian Science Institute's National Cultural Research Institute. "According to Einstein, everything is relative; nothing is absolute. One cannot rely 100 percent on the other side," he added.

Prime Minister Zhao, during his visits to all ASEAN [Association of Southeast Asian Nations] except Indonesia, on the one hand said there would be no interference in ASEAN nation efforts to "handle" the communist movements in their own countries. On the other hand he said the PRC still has "Political and morale" relations with communist movements.

According to Dr Lie, Zhao's statement is consistent with the stance taken by the late Prime Minister Chou Enlai and that of the current strong man, Deng Xiaoping. "It is reasonably honest and its honesty, of course, should be respected," he said.

Dr Lie said this is a genuine response and is the maximum endeavor to be made by the Chinese in response to the ASEAN nation request that they relinquish their support to the communist movements in the Southeast Asian region, as was pointed out by Dr Mahathir, Malaysian prime minister. Yet the opposite is true for the PRC. The Chinese are model bargainers. They will grant the minimum possible of that which is demanded by the other side because they, of course, cannot meet the maximum demand.

The reasons the PRC cannot meet this demand, the Far East expert said, among other reasons, is that the PRC fears that if it breaks off relations altogether with communst party movements in these nations, there is a very great possibility that they will change course, turn toward Moscow or Hanoi, which is becoming China's primary enemy.

Dr. Lie believes that what the PRC appeared to be offering ASEAN nations recently is that Beijing no longer will provide logistic or materiel aid to communist movements to oppose the respective local governments. It is not offering this aid because the PRC views state-to-state relations more important than relations with these communist parties. Therefore, ties with communist parties or movements in these nations have been reduced to a level below relations between nation states.

In any case, Lie Tek Tjeng said, the PRC still would like to have a "foothold" in Southeast Asia. For that reason, China persists in aiding the Khmer Rouge regime of Pol Pot which it hopes will become China's foothold in this region of the regime can regain power.

In connection with PRC efforts to seek a foothold in Southeast Asia, Dr Lie remineded his listeners of the need for nations such as Thailand to remain vigilant because the PRC's fullest support to Bangkok in the past, including oil supplies and so on, in the long run can be a "binding" factor. ASEAN's overall position will be made more difficult later with such close ties between Thailand and the PRC. "And of course, Vietnam is aware of this," Dr. Lie reminded further.

If the situation changes in the future, Dr. Lie said, for instance if the PRC becomes reconciled with the Soviet Union, if PRC modernization is successful and therefore China no longer needs the United States or Japan, and further if the next generation of Chinese leaders are members of the radical group, it is not improbable that the aim will be the communizing of Southeast Asia. And in such a situation and under such conditions, Chinese activities will be based on communist movements in the Southeast or ASEAN nations.

"But for now, no, because China fears that if it acts harshly toward ASEAN nations, these nations could be persuaded to lean toward the Soviet Union. Yet, if that fear is no longer present, if China and the Soviet Union are reconciled, the situation and conditions, of course, are also different," Lie Tek Tjeng said.

He added, there is nothing unusual about the "political and morale" relations put forward by Prime Minister Zhao Ziyang. Since they have the same ideology, China's sympathy lies with the ideological movements outside its own country. But having sympathy for them does not have to mean it must provide direct aid. "The same thing could occur if a follower of a religion were oppressed somewhere. It would be natural for followers of the same religion everywhere to sympathize with him but at the same time they did not offer direct aid," Dr Lie said.

JAPANESE OFFERS BUSINESS ADVICE

Jakarta KOMPAS in Indonesian 25 Aug 81 pp 1, 9

[Article: "Japan's Advice: Private Sector Must Be Invited To Help Formulate Economic Policies"]

[Excerpts] Japanese companies in Indonesia are very interested in immediately settling the technology transfer process. By doing so they can rapidly use their expert manpower in their own companies where such workers may be used more profitably. "However government interference is an obstacle to taking care of this matter," Eiichi Hashimoto said. He is the principal adviser of Mitsui & Company and chairman of the Japan-Indonesia Economic Committee made these remarks at the ninth Indonesia-Japan conference at the Hyatt Bumi Hotel in Surabaya last week. The conference was sponsored by CSIS [Center for Strategic and International Studies].

Hashimoto explained that many joint venture companies had sent their Indonesian specialists to Japan for training and apparently many were disappointed when many of these specialists went to other jobs after they returned to Indonesia.

After quoting Industries Minister Soehoed to the effect that Indonesia would experience a shortage of experts in the future because of the very accelerated rate of industrialization, Hashimoto asked whether the statement did not conflict with the Indonesian government's pressure to repatriate their foreign manpower?

Pointing to past experience, Hashimoto said Japan had resolved the problem of transferring its textile industry to other countries and is now studying the possibility of also shifting heavy industry such as the aluminum industry [to other countries]. "Naturally if such an industry leaves, Japan will select a country which has the most potential for creating a good climate for capital investment and one that is politicaly stable," he said.

Hashimoto added, considering the friendly relations between Japan and ASEAN [Association of Southeast Asian Nations], particularly Indonesia, "I feel it would be very advantageous for Indonesia to get capital investment and technology transfers that are adapted to its industrialization policy."

Continuing in the same vein, Hashimoto reminded his listeners that generally private capital investors were very "nervous" and therefore Indonesia needed to negotiate more satisfactory terms to attract foreign investors.

Generally foreign capital investment in developing nations can be planned so that its purposes are clear and can be handled in a businesslike way, for example, by providing marketing information, the technology transfer process, and oversight by an investor of his capital investment. Very unfortunately foreign investors in Indonesia are forced to allocate more capital than planned originally, and they continually are confronted with numerous uncertainties. "I am forced to say that this will destroy the business climate for the two parties!" Hashimoto said.

Eiichi Hashimoto expanded in detail, one after another, on problems that arise for foreign capital investment in Indonesia, categorizing them into six basic problems.

They include, one, the joint venture period of 30 years is too short considering that manufacturing projects are forced to expand their operations as changes occur in the economic situation. In any case, the short time period supports those who seek huge, quick profits.

Second, capital transfer. Aside from the fact that very few Indonesian businessmen invest in joint ventures, the Indonesian government wants the capital transfer to be done jointly. Meanwhile the terms for expanding capital for the respective companies differ and this causes complications.

Third, the technology transfer process.

Fourth, prohibition of reinvestment by joint companies. Reinvestment of capital is permitted in all ASEAN countries but Indonesia.

Fifth, the need to improve the investment climate. Hopes for an improved investment climate include improvement of the infrastructure, the taxation system, and similar factors.

Sixth, the need for a neutral institution for settling labor disputes.

Eiichi Hashimoto said he had submitted a request to the Indonesian government for the very great need to get opinions from the private sector when the government planned a general economic policy. "Of course, this need not be done if sensitive matters are involved," he said.

Hashimoto believes this would be of benefit for the experience as well as comprehension of the private sector, and it would raise the entrepreneurial level. He used the example of the Japanese Ministry of International Trade and Industry (MITI) which consults with the private business sector each time it plans a new policy for the industrial or economic sector.

TEAM FORMED TO PREVENT LABOR DISPUTES

Jakarta KOMPAS in Indonesian 28 Aug 81 pp 1, 12

[Article: "PANGKOPKAMTIB Says Company Labor Union Leaders Must Be Good Men"]

[Excerpts] Labor organizations (FBIS [All-Indonesia Labor Federation]) absolutely must be formed in any private business that employes 25 or more workers because this is important for supporting and guiding the aspirations of the labor force and also for preventing disputes which occur between workers and employers.

PANGKOPKAMTIB [commander of the Restoration of Security and Order Command] Adm Sudomo so clarified when he discussed the formation and mission of TMBP (Labor Problems Assistance Team) in Jakarta on Thursday [27 August].

The PANGKOPKAMTIB said the "Labor Problems Assistance Team" formation was based on a decision of the NAKERTRANS [manpower, transmigration and cooperatives] minister of last May. This new body or institution includes elements of the NAKERTRANS Department, representatives of the FBSI Central Executive Council, PUSPI/KADIN [Indonesian Businessmen's Conference on Social Affairs/Indonesian Chamber of Commerce and Industry], security elements (Central Operation Order Unit), and representatives of a number of other departments whose mission involves labor problems.

The formation of TBMP, he said, in no way competes with or takes over the mission and responsibilities of P4D and P4P (regional and central Committees for the Settlement of Labor Disputes) but is concerned solely with the prevention of strikes, "lock outs" (the closing down of a company by employers as a response against workers who are on strike), or other similar measures. Such disputes will continue to arise and can affect economic stability and national security.

Sudomo stated the P4D and P4P mission to date has been limited to settling strikes or labor problems that have already occurred while the formation and mission of TBMP is by nature preventive, namely, to prevent the occurrence of such strikes or conflicts of interest between workers and employers.

Thus the mission of settling labor problems continues to be and becomes the responsibility of the NAKERTRANS Department (P4D and P4P), and other agencies whose mission concerns labor problems. Only after these agencies and elements are unable to handle the problem will TBMP, headed by Oetojo Oesman, Binalindung [Development of Manpower Protection], director general "interfere" to settle the labor problem.

The PANGKOPKAMTIB clarified that development activities are increasing and the public is beginning to feel the results. To guarantee the continuation of this development, a good climate must be created as a basis, particularly for guaranteeing economic stability and national security.

Therefore, the government does not want and prohibits labor strikes, "lockouts," or other similar measures. "Consequently the government has formed TBMP to prevent conflicts of interest between workers and employers," the PANGKOPKAMTIB remarked.

To date strikes have occurred, he said, because of a lack of harmonious communication between the workers and employers involved. Both sides only looked to their own interests.

Unfortunately also both sides tended to blacken each other after the strikes or "lockouts" were over. This could be prevented or resolved through the principle of discussion and agreement which is at the heart of the HPP (Pancasila Labor Relations) system.

Employers must have an open mind toward their workers. Employers must also pay attention to their workers' welfare including guarantees of social security. This includes wages, family welfare, career building, and so on. All of these matters can be included in the "Company Regulation," industrial cooperative agreement (PKB/CLA), and so on. "Of course, these must be adapted to the actual capabilities of the company," the PANGKOPKAMTIB reminded.

Conversely, workers must also meet the positive attitude of the employers, namely, they must want to work hard to increase production and also have the necessary discipline to do this.

PANGKOPKAMTIB Sudomo seemed to shake his head on hearing reports of a number of FBSI leaders. Essentially they reported that employers in general refused or put obstacles in the way of forming a basic FBSI in their companies or pressured labor by various means that conflicted with the law or regulations in effect.

PROBLEMS IN INSTITUTING MINIMUM WAGE DISCUSSED

Jakarta KOMPAS in Indonesian 25 Aug 81 pp 1, 9

[Article: "Without a Report the Government Doesn't Know How Low Wages Are; Employers Pay on the Basis of Productivity Rather than KFM"]

[Excerpts] Wages in Indonesia are among the lowest paid in other countries. Thus, the government is trying to raise the minimum wage and adapt it to employers' ability to pay such wages. Although capital investment is increasing in Indonesia, it still is not paralleled by increased job opportunities because much of the investment is capital intensive.

Harun Zain, minister of manpower and transmigration, made these remarks to newsmen on Monday [24 August] at the Department of Industries in conjuction with the opening of the national working meeting on the textile industry.

Meanwhile, Drs Frans Seda, member of the Advisory Board of the Federation of Indonesian Textile Industry Associations, believes that Indonesian wages correspond to the rate of productivity. If wages are to be increased, productivity must also be increased.

"Workers who are paid less than the minimum wage should report this fact because the government will have no information without those complaints and employers will care less about the discrepancy," Harun Zain said.

The minister believes there are problems in comparing the low wages in Indonesia with subsistence. For instance, it is almost impossible for a worker's family to live on the daily minimum wage of 600 rupiah in Jakarta. In a number of other areas, for instance in East Java, the minimum wage for someone who makes kretek [clove] cigarettes is only 250 rupiah a day.

However, Minister Harun Zain said, it is difficult to enforce the payment of a minimum wage. Information must be available on the financial level at which a business operates so that the business does not shut down, resulting in unemployment for the workers.

Minister Zain used Bali as an example. When the minimum wage was enforced, businessmen moved their operations to other locations because they could not pay the minimum wage. It is not possible to set one minimum wage because business conditions differ. Therefore the minimum wage is set per area and per sector.

The minister said the government will have no information unless it receives reports from the workers. The government usually handles the situation after there has been a dispute between an employer and his workers. The government, of course, has supervisory personnel to oversee manpower problems, but there are not enough of them to cover all industries now in operation. For instance, there are only 26 government manpower supervisors for the 13,000 industries in East Java.

Agreement on a minimum wage must be achieved through negotiation among workers, employers and the regional government. The minimum wage changes each year in line with needs and the rate of inflation. All sectors and regions do not as yet have a minimum wage.

Minister Harun Zain acknowledged that wages were low in Indonesia because, among other reasons, productivity is low. Low productivity is due to the limited education of the workers. According to he latest census figures, 50 percent of Indonesia's population is in the work force, the majority of whom, or 70 percent, apparently have not graduated from elementary school. With such a large supply of relatively uneducated workers, of course it is difficult to get a high wage.

Drs Seda, who also has a ready-made clothing business, believes Indonesian wages, particularly those in the textile field, already correspond to the rate of productivity. He stressed that this is a separate matter from that of KFM (minimum physical requirement).

He admitted that if one looks at the matter from a KFM aspect, Indonesian wages are too low. However, if an employer must pay wages in line with the KFM, the company will go out of business because it cannot afford to pay at that rate. Businessmen will only pay wages that are based on productivity and not on the basis of KFM. If productivity increases, wages will also increase but higher wages will not raise productivity directly.

"I have already tried to increase wages but apparently this did not raise productivity," Frans Seda said.

SYDNEY WEEKLY ON INDONESIAN CAMPAIGN IN TIMOR

BK140913 Sydney WEEKEND AUSTRALIAN in English 3-4 Oct 81 p 1

[Article by Robin Osborne]

[Text] A campaign of "pacification" by more than 3,000 Indonesian troops in East Timor will cause a serious famine within the next few months, according to church sources in the East Timorese capital, Dili.

Citing a report from there, a spokesman for the aid group, Action for World Development, a joint Roman Catholic-Protestant agency, said Indonesia's tactics in Operation Keamanan (pacification) would be the direct cause of the starvation.

The report says:

--East Timorese conscripted into the Indonesian Army are being maltreated and ill-fed and some conscripts have died.

--Indonesian troops are destroying food so guerrillas of the Fretilin (independence) movement cannot get it.

--There have been mass jailings of people believed to be sympathetic to the freedom movement.

The report says: "In an attempt to eliminate all resistance--which includes supporters and their families--the authorities have conscripted large numbers of Timorese males aged between 15 and 50."

The spokesman said there was a desperate shortage of labor to prepare fields for the planting of corn, the main crop.

He said, "The growing season starts with the rains around November but by then, even if the men do come home from the front line, they will be too weak to work."

The Catholic sources report conscripts are becoming ill while with the Indonesian troops and many have died of malnutrition.

The spokesman said: "The army is using a traditional Indonesian tactic somewhat akin to, say, a grouse shoot. Many men, both troops and conscripts, move in an extended line crying out in an attempt to flush out the resistance."

As they do this, the attacking forces move through villages helping themselves to the locals' food.

The spokesman said: "Although the army is supposed to provide its own food, in fact, the supply lines are stretched and the troops are stripping the land rather like a plague of locusts.

"If the food isn't needed, then it's destroyed so as to deny it to guerrillas. As a result of this, even more villagers are forced to abandon their farms and migrate to the lowlands."

There reports say, the Timorese are either shot as suspected Fretilin supporters or herded into refugee camps.

According to the agency, the situation in the camps has deteriorated since the main aid groups, Catholic Relief Service and the International Committee of the Red Cross, wound up their operations this year.

The aim of Operation Keamanan is the creation of a pincer movement from east and west converging on the plains around the coastal town of Manatuto.

According to a recent letter from a Catholic official, schools and government offices in the district have been closed and most able-bodied citizens aged between nine and 60 have been forced to join the Indonesian patrols.

In addition to the conscriptions, there have been mass jailings of people deemed unsympathetic to Indonesia. There are at least eight prisons in East Timor, the largest being the island of Atauro, off Dili.

The Catholic Church remains a thorn in the side of Indonesia's claims over Timor. Although it has not publicly denounced the takeover, the Vatican's policy is that East Timor is an occupied country.

It is believed the Protestant Churches' Relief Program is also experiencing problems with the Indonesian authorities in Timor and has now restricted itself to Dili.

This latest battle to control Timor was foreshadowed by a major exercise in eastern Indonesia in April involving 35,000 troops as well as ships and aircraft. Australia's defence attache in Jakarta attended the exercise.

EAST TIMOR AGRICULTURAL DEVELOPMENT TO BE ACCELERATED

Jakarta KOMPAS in Indonesian 25 Aug 81 p 2

[Article: "Agricultural Development To be Accelerated in East Timor; Critical Acreage Is Expanding"]

[Excerpts] Agricultural development in the newest province of East Timor is to be accelerated since security is improving there. In the fourth and fifth (final) years of PELITA III [third five-year development plan], agricultural development in that area will be focused on rehabilitating agricultural facilities which were destroyed during the "war". The developmental spirit of the local community will also be aroused, for the people were severely oppressed during the almost 500-year long Portuguese colonial domination.

This information was provided by Dr Eng Achmad Tunggul Birowo, chief of the Planning Bureau of the Department of Agriculture concurrently TKPP (Agricultural Development Coodination Team) chairman for the East Timor Province, to newsman after the "Seminar for East Timor Agricultural Development" was officially opened in the city of Dili last week.

With agricultural development, it is intended that the East Timor Province will become self-sufficient rapidly in the food sector. This includes self-sufficiency in corn, rice, secondary crops, and other foodstuffs. "It is optimistic to feel this program can be carried out because East Timor has a population of only some 550,000 persons," he said.

Other measures consist of rehabilitating and increasing traditional commodity production for export as well as for domestic requirements. This includes coffee, coconuts, cattle raising, hides, and sandalwood production.

The fishery sector, especially sea fishery, also has priority for immediate development in the East Timor region because fishing was never developed during th Portuguese colonial period. The idea was that a population isolated and unable to communicate with people in other areas would be less dangerous to the political interests of that colony.

Dr A. T. Birowo said for the 5 years (since 1976) that East Timor has been integrated into the Republic of Indonesia, the central government has been and is implementing two large programs there, namely, rehabilitation projects and increasing the activities there of directorates general in the Department of Agriculture circles which include the Directorates General for Food Crops, Estates, Fisheries, Forestry, and Animal Husbandry. In the Bobonaro (Maliana) Regency, located on the border between East Nusatenggara and East Timor, it is carrying out unified agricultural projects (food crops and animal husbandry).

The central government had budgeted about 2 billion rupiah to support both of these big programs, he said. This was realized through providing thousands of cows for breeding as well as the construction of irrigation projects around Maliana to create about 100,000 hectares of wet ricefields and dry land.

The development packages which have and will be carried out in the East Timor region are created as unified projects, for instance, agricultural development is tied in with development of training, health facilities, and so on.

With such programs it is expected that development of the East Timor region can be accelerated so that by the end of PELITA IV socio-economic conditions and other aspects of East Timor will equal those in other provinces or at the minimum will be the same as those in the East Nusatenggara Province.

In an earlier speech, Dr Sukotjo described a study made by Pakuan University in Bogor using aerial photography. The study showed that the environment and natural resources of the East Timor region are "seriously damaged." For example, forest acreage there is rapidly diminishing; there is considerable land erosion; and the slash-and-burn system in the forests is still being used for cultivation by much of the population in the interior.

He also said the acreage of critical land is expanding; moreover, of the scores of rivers in the East Timor region, water can flow throughout the year in only five. Further in a number of rivers the flow is blocked or is absorbed into the barren earth before it reaches the sea.

CONSTRUCTION, SHIPPING AGREEMENTS WITH SOUTH KOREA

Precedence in Construction Projects

Jakarta KOMPAS in Indonesian 23 Jul 81 p 2

[Text] Indonesia will give precedence to South Korean firms whenever bids are open to the international community on projects supported by the national budget or financed through international organizations, that is whenever civilian projects call for cooperation between foreign concerns and Indonesian contractors.

For its part, South Korea is to provide study opportunities in South Korea for managers, engineers, technicians and other skilled workers from Indonesia. Every year for the next 5 years South Korea will provide teachers and facilities for Indonesians who travel to South Korea for study. Indonesia will pay for transportation expenses.

So stated an agreement, in part, between Indonesia and South Korea, that was witnessed by Purnomosidi, minister of public works, during his visit to South Korea last week. The contract itself was made between Park Tong-kyu of the Overseas Construction Association of Korea (OCAK) and Edi Kowara of the Indonesian Contractors Assodciation (AKI). Nam Duck-woo, South Korea's minister of construction [sic] also witnessed the contract-signing ceremony.

Moreover, the agreement states that South Korea will give precedence to Indonesian construction firms (i.e., the Indonesian Consortium of Construction Industries) as partners in Middle East contracts. South Korea also agrees to provide on-the-job training opportunities for Indonesian workers in the Middle East.

According to Edi Kowara, when bidding is opened on a contract for a liquified natural gas refinery, the Indonesian Government will give precedence to South Korean firms as the main contractors. Bidding on the $2.8 million project will soon begin.

In another matter, Indonesia is now making arrangements so that South Korean contractors can become the sub-contractors in some large projects valued at $4 million. The United States and Japan are providing most of the financial backing for the projects, which constitute part of the Third Five-Year Development Plan.

Indonesia and South Korea has cooperated in quite a few construction projects in the past. For example, the Jagorawi toll road was built by South Korean contractor Hyundai. Several South Korean contractors are currently working on other road-building projects, such as a number of branch roads in Sumatra and part of the Jakarta-Merak toll road.

But the two nations have long cooperated with each other, beginning with projects in the Middle East, in an effort to expand construction services to foreign countries. Most Indonesian contractors operating in the Middle East are sub-contractors of South Korean firms. The total value of the Middle East contracts comes to about $700 million. The contracts are the largest ever made by Indonesian firms up till now.

Cargo Dispute Settled

Jakarta SINAR HARAPAN in Indonesian 25 Jul 81 p 11

[Text] The fate of an Indonesian-South Korean shipping agreement, which was scheduled to go into effect 1 September 1981, was brought into question in connection with a misunderstanding that occurred last June. The dispute occurred when th South Korean Government made it difficult for Indonesian ships to transport South Korean exports to Indonesia.

These efforts on South Korea's part caused Indonesia to counter with similar measures. South Koreans found it difficult to transport good from Indonesia to their own country. Yet, South Korean ships headed for other countries with Indonesian exports on board encountered no difficulties at all.

SINAR HARAPAN's source said South Korea made shipping procedures difficult on the basis of the Shipping Promotion Law, which requires that South Korean exports be transported by national carriers, unless foreign carriers have received special permission.

The fast-growing trade relations between Indonesia and South Korea, which have stimulated national lines to transport South Korean imports, have come into conflict under the Promotion Law. Faced by that regulation, the director general of sea communications together with the Indonesian National Shipowners Association (INSA) called for discussions with the Korean Maritime Port Authority and the Korea Shipowner Association (KSA).

In April, 1981 a shipping agreement ("Liner Agreement") was reached. It will go into effect on 1 September 1981. Before that date, KSA will see that INSA carriers will not need special permission to transport goods. INSA is to assist South Korean ships transporting goods from Indonesia to South Korea.

It was reported that the South Koreans apologized for any difficulties encountered by Indonesian national carriers. By July service was back to normal for the Indonesian lines.

Whether the misunderstanding would have an effect on the Liner Agreement, the spokesman only said that he hoped it would not.

SINAR HARAPAN's source said South Korea probably made things difficult for Indonesian lines because of the joint directive of three ministers which placed a limit on timber exports (logs) to several countries. South Korea is one of the nations on good terms with Indonesia that has imported large amounts of Indonesian timber for its plywood industry. But there was a drastic reduction in shipments of logs to South Korea after the joint directive went into effect. Several South Korean plywood factories almost had to close down. At the same time, Indonesia began to emerge as one of the chief exporters of plywood in the world. Till now South Korea has been the foremost exporter of plywood.

COAL SHORTAGE PROJECTED FOR 1984, FOLLOWING YEARS

Large Imports Predicted

Jakarta SINAR HARAPAN in Indonesian 22 Jul 81 p 11

[Excerpts] Indonesia will have a 22,000 ton coal surplus in 1981 according to estimates based on comparisons between production and consumption. In 1982 the surplus will decrease to 17,000 tons. But in 1983 the surplus is to leap to 376,000 tons.

Drs. Hardjoko Saputra, public relations spokesman for the Department of Mines and Energy, said to SINAR HARAPAN that the 376,000 ton surplus in 1983 is the highest amount that can be reached because in the following years Indonesia will face quite large production shortages.

According to projections for 1984, Indonesia will experience a coal shortage of 289,000 tons in the supply to cement factories, PLN [State Electric Company], tin smelting industries, PJKA [railway system] and private users. The shortages will occur because it is felt the increase in production will be far smaller than the increase in consumption.

Beginning in 1984 the government must import large quantities of coal in order to overcome the shortages. Imports are expected to jump to 2.6 million tons in 1985 and to double that figure (to 5.3 million tons) in 1988. According to SINAR HARAPAN's source, large amounts of coal will probably be imported from Australia and be located on Batam Island.

In response to a question, Saputra said that although unmined Indonesian coal reserves are now quite large, future needs will also be great. In the not too distant future Indonesia will be forced to import coal in order to satisfy increasing consumption.

Saputra explained that the General Policy Design in the Field of Energy now being compiled by the government emphasizes the point that national energy policy will be directed toward decreasing dependence on oil and replacing oil as an energy source with other sorces, such as coal, geothermal energy, hydroelectric power and natural gas.

According to Directive No 506/1981 by the minister of mines and energy concerning unmined coal reserves, the state has discovered and surveyed coal reserves in regions of North Sumatra, West Sumatra, Riau, Jambi, South Sumatra, Lampung, West Kalimantan, Central Kalimantan, South Kalimantan, East Kalimantan and Irian Jaya and Special Area Aceh, and, therefore, the aforementioned regions are reserved exclusively for the state and may be exploited only by the state, in accordance with chapter 66 of Government Regulation No 32/1969.

Nevertheless, he said, the government has not shut off the possibility for Indonesian private businesses, together with the State Coal Company, to exploit and develop the coal reserves in the areas set aside for the state. The government is giving national private businesses the opportunity to develop coal reserves in several regions of Java, South Sulawesi and elsewhere that were announced previously.

Coalfield Development Contracts Initialed

[Excerpts] Three foreign companies--ARCO (United States), the ARCO/Utah Consortium (United States) and Rio Tinto (United Kingdom)--have initialed contracts for coal exploitation in Kalimantan together with the State Coal Company. "But parliament and the government still need to officially confirm the contracts," said A. H. Sazili M., head of the public relations section of the State Coal Company, to ANTARA Tuesday.

In addition to negotiating with the three American and British companies, the State Coal Company is also holding discussions with AGIP [National Italian Oil Company]. AGIP is interested in mining the East Kalimantan coal reserves. According to surveys, South and East Kalimantan reserves are though to contain as much as 1 billion tons of coal.

"The foreign companies will have to be involved in the whole coal mining process in Kalimantan, from exploration to exploitation," said Sazili.

The initialed contracts were written on the division of profits system whereby the government receives 32.5 percent of production profits and the contractor receives 67.5 percent. Under this system contractors have certain obligations, like paying taxes.

It is expected that the Kalimantan coal mine will be in production by 1989.

Apart from South and East Kalimantan, areas of Tanjung Balit, Jujuhan, and Senamat in the Bungo Tebo District of Jambi also contain quite large coal reserves. Based on surveys made by the Rio Tinto company, regions of Bungo Tebo District are thought to contain coal deposits of 70 million tons. But the British company apparently is not too interested in developing the mine. "One reason is that transport is very difficult in that area," said Sazili.

The State Coal Company itself is expected to tap Jambi's coal potential in the future. But just when Jambi's coal reserves can be exploited remains indefinite, according to Sazili, because a large amount of money is needed for such a project. The State Coal Company is now prioritizing an increase in production of the Ombilin and Kalimantan mines.

The government has agreed on $100 million in export credits for the first stage of increased production of the Ombilin mine in order to raise production from 205,000 tons (1981 production plans) to 750,000 tons in 1985. The production increases will be made in stage, with the goal of adding more than 1 million tons each year from 1986 to 1990.

Sazili said the Ombilin mine will produce enough coal to satisfy local needs, like the Indarung cement plant (West Sumatra) and the planned Lhok Nga cement plant in Aceh.

There will continue to be domestic shortages of coal through 1989. In 1985 coal consumption will reach 3,940,000 tons while production is estimated to reach 3,272,000 tons. Based on projections for regular production increases at Ombilin, Bukit Asam and other mines, Indonesia is only expected to be self-sufficient in coal in 1990, witha possible coal surplus at that time.

THAI SUPPORT FOR KHMER OPPOSITION REPORTED

PM161409 Paris LE MONDE in French 15 Sep 81 p 5

[Dispatch by Jaques de Barrin: "Kampuchea: Thailand Agrees to Attempts To Form Opposition Government Taking Place on Its Territory"]

[Text] Bangkok--Thailand has just agreed that the ad hoc committee formed during the recent Singapore summit by the three main Kampuchean opposition groups with a view to forming a coalition government can meet on its territory. "I will convene it in a few days' time," Mr Son Sann, chairman of the Khmer People's National Liberation Front [FNLPK] told us, although the Khmer Rouge have not yet appointed their representatives to this committee.

"It is important to start the process of unifying the Kampuchean resistance before the start of the UN General Assembly meeting in mid-September which is to discuss Kampuchea's representation, in order to prove to the international community that the joint declaration signed in Singapore is not a dead letter," some official circles stress, specifying that: "Everything depends on China."

In addition some people apparently hope that Son Sann, in his capacity as prime minister appointed by former head of state Prince Sihanouk and Khieu Samphan, Khmer Rouge prime minister, might head the Democratic Kampuchea delegation at the next UN session. The efforts to achieve this have not yet been successful. Furthermore, nobody has any illusions about the possibility of forming a coalition government in the short term. "It will take at least 1 or 2 years," ASEAN members state.

Once their UN seat has been saved, will the Khmer Rouge not be tempted to raise the stakes? Whatever happens, Son Sann will not compromise. "How can I head a government unless I have the majority of portfolios?" he explained. On the other hand the number of Khmer Rouge condemned by him to exile in China, and which ones they will, is negotiable. The FNLPK chairman, in view of the weakness of his military means, is at present doomed to take an intransigent attitude or else he will be swallowed [words indistinct]," according to Kuala-Lumpur.

Some ASEAN members think that it is necessary to create a third nationalist force in order to avert the Khmer Rouge danger. In this connection the disagreements between Prince Sihanouk and Son Sann are not insuperable, according to them, although the latter is still demanding that this grouping should be organized under the FNLPK banner.

The needs of the moment make it necessary to form a coalition government with the Khmer Rouge, but nobody in ASEAN fails to realize that the vital dialogue with Hanoi will be impossible as long as Pol Pot's men are in the forefront. Now, according to them, the creation of a third force is the only way of opening the debate with the "other side." "This is the signal which we must send to Vietnam to show it that a solution is possible," Malaysian Foreign Minister Ghazali Shafie told us.

Although Son Sann for his part refuses to "forecast what will happen since the main task at present is to liberate Kampuchea," he nonetheless recognized "the need to start thinking now about building good-neighborly relations with Vietnam since we must live side-by-side."

In the view of some ASEAN members, the important thing at present is to give the nationalist groups the means of realizing their ambitions in the knowledge that, as Ghazali Shafie pointed out, "The Soviet Union's support for Vietnam will not waver." In this connection it is probable that China will do nothing which might ultimately upset the balance of forces to the detriment of the Khmer Rouge.

Therefore, most support must come from the "free countries" and especially from the United States. So far the United States has made do with giving moral support to the Kampuchean resistance. Will the Reagan administration decide to go further out of a concern to contain Soviet influence? "American opinion is not ready yet," Son Sann remarked. His front has started receiving humanitarian aid from Washington; in addition he hopes to obtain financial help to increase the number of information bureaus in foreign countries. As for military aid, the White House is waiting for ASEAN to adopt a common approach in this direction before deciding," the FNLPK chairman explained.

Some ASEAN circles suggest that the "main reason" for this American reservation lies in the fear of arms supplies being diverted. The United States would like to be sure that the military equipment sent to the nationalist forces will not be "confiscated" by Thailand en route since it would have to pass through Thailand to reach the Kampuchean border. Thus on-the-spot studies are being carried out to establish the safest ways of conveying possible supplies to the right destination, the idea being to give Malaysia or Singapore responsibility for transport and delivery. Will Bangkok be offended by that?

AUSTRALIAN NEWSMAN ON POISONOUS GAS USE IN LAOS

BK280251 Bangkok POST in English 25 Oct 81 pp 6, 7

[By Nicholas Rothwell of the Australian: "Death From the Sky"]

[Text] Slowly, a cloud of yellow rain began to fall from the sky. It was a fine morning in May 1978, and the small village of Ban-non Po in Central Laos was about to be eradicated.

The assistant chief of the village of Hmong Tribesmen, Yong Mang Yang, had heard the drone of an aircraft minutes before but had scarcely looked up from his work. As part of the Pathet Lao Government-controlled sector, his people had nothing to fear.

He heard no explosions as the Mig-21 fighter circling above him dropped four brown rice-sacks from its belly, then turned and headed northwards. The bags split, releasing another cloud of yellow fumes.

In the windless spring morning, the cloud dropped silently towards the houses of the village. Minutes later, Yong Mang Yang saw his people beginning to die.

There were only a few families in the village, a loose collection of houses huddled in a hillside clearing. Moments after the yellow rain touched them, the women and children began vomiting and blacking out, followed seconds later by the men.

Yong Mang Yang could smell nothing, but could not breathe through his nose, which ran and itched. He staggered through the cloud, feeling as if sand was in his eyes, crying tears of blood, realising he was blinded.

Minutes after the rain cleared, he himself began vomiting, his stomach ached and he felt a crushing sensation in his chest. Gradually, he began to sweat, his skin turned reddish and small black spots formed all over his body--even beneath his clothing.

Those who survived the attack tried to apply traditional Hmong remedies to their wounds--but smearing opium pastes on their skin or blowing smoke from raw opium into their bloodied eyes proved pathetically inadequate, the wounds festered, and the weakest villagers died.

Within hours, the skin of the bodies turned black, and began to peel off in strips. A thin whitish pus ran from the mouths and nostrils of the dead.

Ban Non Po was attacked by the yellow rain four times within the next year. Scores of other villages in the rough hill-country in Central Laos, inhabited by Hmong tribesmen, were also attacked by government planes unleashing clouds of toxic, bright-coloured gas.

After the last attack, which was also the most severe, 14 villagers, Yong Mang Yang, as assistant chief, composed a letter to the area hospital at Bon Don for emergency help. Days later, a messenger reported that a medical team would be sent to the village to "check into the matter."

Several weeks afterwards, a six-man Lao medical team arrived and diagnosed the villagers' illness as "fever" rather than the after-effects of chemical warfare. The Pather Lao District leader, Taseng Mai Chank, told Yong Mang Yang what to do.

"If you are attacked again, shoot down the plane for proof," he said.

Tales of gas attacks, of concerted chemical warfare aimed at the genocide of the Mong tribesmen, have been filtering out of Laos with the perpetual stream of refugees that have fled the Communist Government since 1976.

Yong Mang Yang's story is one of 40 separate accounts of gassings over the past three years which have been collected by refugee workers at the Ban Vinai Camp on the Thai-Laotian border.

Samples of the poison gases have been obtained. Exact dates, places and even a log roll of the names of Hmong people killed by the attacks are known. But it has taken a full three years since the first wave of systematic gassings for Western leaders to prove that the Laotian Government has lived up to its promise to "exterminate the Hmong."

Chemical warfare has hardly ever been used before, even though all the major powers have had nerve gas stockpiles since before World War II to understand how such a blatant breach of international law was permitted to continue in the face of over whelming evidence--the scared and pitted bodies of hundreds of refugees--we must know the history of the Hmong.

For 30 years, Laos has been a battlefield, part of French Indochina, then an independent kingdom. It was overrun during the '60s by the Communist Pathet Lao guerrillas who gradually wrested control of the country from Western-backed forces.

A vital part of the Ho Chi Minh trail supply line for the Vietnam War, Laos was inevitably part of the sphere of influence of Vietnam--a "sideshow" in Indochina if there ever was one. But the collapse of the American position in South Vietnam doomed tens of thousands of Laotians who had resisted the Pathet Lao forces.

Several clandestine groups had been mobilised in the '60s by the United States to fight the Pathet Lao. The most famous of these was the CIA's "secret army" of Hmong tribesmen, led by the charismatic General Vang Pao. The fall of Vientiane to communist forces did not end their struggle, largely because they knew their past resistance had already marked them for reprisals.

Vang Pao, who has been resettled to a farm in Montana, now claims the first gas attacks against Hmong villages were made in early 1976. But it is certain systematic campaigns were not mounted until the next year, when Pathet Lao soldiers began to encounter organised military attacks made by Vang Pao's men.

The first reports were discounted as tall stories. Since the evidence came from the Hmong, who were associated with Vang Pao, it was automatically disregarded by many Western authorities. As reports became more frequent in the late '70s, events in Laos were overshadowed by the tragedy of Kampuchea.

The other major difficulty was that the United States under President Carter was eager to counter Soviet influence in Vietnam by improving its own relations with Hanoi. Anything to do with the after-effects of the clandestine role played by U.S. intelligence in the Vietnam War rankled.

The few American State Department employees, Australian relief workers and Western correspondents in Thailand who first heard of the gassings found their efforts to alert the public were scarcely encouraged by the American administration.

Regular gassings had been under way for two years when a U.S. House of Representatives Subcommittee on Asian and Pacific Affairs held a hearing on "the use of chemical agents in Southeast Asia since the Vietnam War."

Even though the hearing provided detailed evidence that systematic poison gas attacks on the Hmong people were taking place, the subcommittee concluded that evidence of Soviet involvement in the gassings was "circumstantial."

It was not until last month when the Reagan Administration produced chemical analysis of foliage affected by the apray of "yellow rain" that U.S. officials even suggested the poisons had been supplied by the Soviet Union.

But documents in the possession of the Australian newspaper show that American intelligence knew more than three years ago that Soviet personnel were managing the gassings.

The Soviet Union rejects allegations that it prepared the poisons used to kill the Hmong tribesmen and says the United States is trying to blame Moscow for what it did itself in Vietnam.

"The world public knows the extent of American chemical warfare during the U.S. intervention in Indochina," a Novosti press agency statement released last April to rebut the new American allegations said.

So sensitive to the agent orange issue is the United States that even the subcommittee which gave the first airing to the charges of gassing in Laos referred to the matter, linking this problem of public opinion to the fate of the Hmong.

"We reject the charge that since the United States used a chemical agent as a defoliant--however ill-advised or brutal that may have been--we have no right to attempt to halt the use of overtly deadly chemical agents at this time," subcommittee Chairman Lester Wolff pointed out.

Even as the subcommittee held its hearing on 12 December 1979, American diplomats were presenting the Soviet Union with the detailed reports of their evidence that the Lao Government was gassing the Hmong.

This was done at the request of congress, since the Soviet Union, "as the principal sponsor of Hanoi, particularly in the military sphere, had special responsibility to join with the United States in seeking permanently to outlaw the use of chemical agents in warfare."

American diplomats in Thailand, who had been directly exposed to the horror of the refugees' stories, decided that only firm evidence--sample of the poison gas--would convince public opinion.

This step led to a quest for hard evidence, in the form of trees and clothing charred or partly destroyed by the unknown gas. Odd samples had already been brought over the border by Hmong refugees, but were in such poor condition they could not be chemically analysed.

The yellow rain was in fact not one but many different chemical agents. A rainbow of toxic gases had coloured the skies above Laos. Soviet and Vietnamese supervisors had been seen, according to refugees, checking the effects of the poisons.

For two years attempts to isolate known chemical poisons on the foliage collected proved fruitless. Because the clouds had been described as "yellow rain" the experts tested for mustard gas, soman and other nerve gases.

Eventually, a journalist, Mr Sterling Seagrave, pointed out the reported symptoms of the yellow rain sprayed in Kampuchea, Laos and Afghanistan coincided with those caused by a class of chemical known as mycotoxins.

A specific poisonous mycotoxin group, trichothecene, derived from the grain fungus fusarium, has been frequently reported as a naturally occurring poison in the Soviet Union.

The tricothecene mould isolated on foliage sprayed by the poison gas could not occur naturally in Southeast Asia, and could not grow naturally anywhere in such heavy concentrations. This was the "compelling but preliminary" evidence presented on 14 September by U.S. Secretary of State Alexander Haig.

But was it less "circumstantial" than the information given American intelligence three years before--in the middle of the gassing campaign--which was kept secret for want of proof while thousands of Hmong continued to suffer and die?

The Hmong made perfect targets. Their villages were small and isolated. Their reports of the attacks tended to be exaggerated. Their regard for detail did not match the needs of Western officials looking for "hard evidence." It was next to impossible to draw up an accurate picture of the military operations being conducted against them.

But despite these difficulties, the role of the Soviet Union in the coordination of the gassing campaign, and precise details about how it was being run, its clandestine centres, and its ultimate aims, were all known to U.S. officials in Thailand by the end of 1978.

Refugee accounts suggest the gassings continued in Laos throughout 1980, and are still being carried out by Vietnamese and Soviet troops in Kampuchea today. The campaign of gas attacks carried out against the Hmong people in the central hill country of Laos between 1977 and 1980 were well documented by interviews conducted in the Ban Vinai refugee camp in Northern Thailand.

But in addition to these interviews carried out by U.S. State Department personnel and later presented to the congress, another set of findings was assembled, based on debriefings of Laotian Government defectors.

Collected together in an amorphous intelligence assessment, some of this information was presented in State Department reports on chemical warfar, without disclosing the organisation which conducted the studies.

One underlying aim of the U.S. inquiry into the gassings was to establish beyond any doubt that American herbicides left behind in Vietnam at the end of the war, such as agent orange, were not being used in the attacks on the Hmong.

"I hope we will be able to put to rest any fear that those lethal agents used in Laos are captured American stocks left over from the war," Representative Lester Wolff said at the outset of the December 1979 congressional hearing.

Another congressman closely involved in the inquiry, representative Jim Leach, said he was convinced the poisons came from the Soviet Union and had been given "persuasive corroboratory evidence" to this effect.

"Our intelligence agency has determined for national security reasons that this evidence should not be made public," Mr Leach said.

This information, which gave details of Soviet involvement in the gassings, was not presented to the congress--and this may have been because the details it gave implicated captured U.S. weaponry in the gassings.

Most of the critical information had come to U.S. intelligence from two defectors, both pilots who had flown on the gassing missions. They provided chapter and verse on how the operation was run by the Soviet Union.

The first narrative is the story of a Laotain people's liberation army pilot, who began flying chemical warfare operations against Hmong resistance strongholds in 1976.

The missions, "specifically intended to dispense toxic chemical agents on Hmong villagers" in the vicinity of Phou Bia--the highest mountain in Laos and one of the chief hide-outs of Vang Pao's secret anti-communist army--began in April or May 1976.

They were flown in Soviet-built Hyushin L-19 "Ravens" or in converted T-41 Cessnas as part of a co-ordinated operation between the Laotian army and the People's Army of Vietnam.

The first sign that a special campaign was to be mounted came when two Laotian helicopters were flown from the Phonsavan airfield in Xieng Khouang Province, to Long Tiang on a series of missions that transported rockets back to Phonsavan for storage.

The entire operation was mounted within the hills of Central Laos. The backbone of the country is a series of steep ridges and valleys, covered in jungle. The area is impassable to conventional troops.

It was these hills, the territory of the Hmong, that the Laotian army had decided to target. Their bases were strategically located within striking range, and any resistance soldiers trying to flee to Thailand would have to cross enemy lines at least once in a month-long trek.

Between June and August that year, the Laotian Air Force Ravens mounted several attacks on Vang Pao's troops in the same area, concentrating on the redoubt of Bouamlong.

Rocket attacks were made, but the crews responsible for loading rockets on the attack aircraft were told that the special ammunition moved to Phonsavan should not be used--even though Phonsavan was much nearer the target zone of Bouamlong than was Long Tiang, where the aircraft rearmed.

These conventional attacks on Bouamlong went on for three months, until the dry seasons began. Then, the special rockets were brought from Phonsavan to a depot near the Ban Xon airfield and were fitted onto special external arms racks on the L-19s.

The pilot claims he flew some missions using American-manufactured warheads which came in two parts, with tip and canister separated for storage, and had to be joined together before being loaded onto the aircraft racks.

But all the special rockets loaded at Ban Xon were already joined. Part of the pilot's routine pre-flight check called for him to examine the tip portion of the new rockets. Most of these he saw, were loose at the point where tip and canister joined, unlike ordinary explosive-type rockets.

In late 1976, in preparation for air strikes against two Hnong strongholds--the villages of Phou Bia and Ka Si--Laotian pilots began to fly reconaissance missions.

Piloting a Cessna, the Laotians would take two or three Vietnamese army staff officers at a time on detailed overflights of Hmong villages. Then the first attacks began.

Initially, only Laotian officers accompanied the pilots on the airstrikes, but a fortnight into the campaign, Vietnamese officers began riding in the rear seats of the L-19s and alternating missions with the Laotinas. All the Vietnamese spoke excellent Lao, and would go over situation maps of the target areas with pilots before the mission, just as the Laotian commanders did.

The pilots knew nothing about the targets until they were told what to attack at the pre-flight briefings. A different Vietnamese officer was assigned to each strike. They never communicated with Laotian ground officers during the flight.

Before every mission which carried the special rockets, the L-19 pilots were warned by Laotian commanders to fly at higher than normal altitudes when firing the rockets, otherwise the operation could prove hazardous to the crew.

The pilot could see the rockets which he was firing at the Hmong were little more than smoke dispensers. Unlike ordinary ground-burst explosive shells, they detonated in the air, some producing a mixture of white and blue smoke, some red and yellow.

Before each mission, the pilots were given a pep-talk by their commander, they are told the purpose of firing the rockets was to "cause the Hmong people to die out completely." This type of operation would "wipe out" the reactionary Hmong people.

The pilots were also warned to keep the smoke rocket missions secret. During the two years that the pilot flew these missions, he learned from the Laotian people's liberation army officers who flew with him that there were two types or rockets.

The CIRT kind, the smoke rockets, could only be fired at targets far away from combined Laotian and Vietnamese troops. But the second kind, conventional close support rockets, could be fired near friendly troop positions.

The L-19 raids at first carried five conventional rockets and three smoke rockets. But later only four rockets, normally all smoke ones, were carried.

At the end of every strike in which smoke rockets had been used, the pilot was returned to a "rest house" at Phonsavan where an army doctor and nurse would give him a physical examination. By 1978--the year when the most serious effects from the gassings are reported--the pilot was being given a very thorough physical check by the doctor, and being "closely watched" by the nurse.

Gradually an elite corps of pilots who flew the L-19s on the special missions formed. They were allowed privilege unheard of in the Laotian army. In addition to the standard pilot's salary of 12,500 kip monthly, they received a bonus of 3,700 kip daily as additional "flight pay," and free meals at Phonsavan.

This special treatment continued until late 1978, when a squadron of Mig-21 fighters supplied by the Soviet and Vietnamese air forces took over the attacks on Phou Bia.

Coincidentally, U.S. intelligence also received some of the most detailed information given about the gassings from Hmong refugees who were driven into Thailand by the same series of repeated attacks during 1978.

This makes it possible to piece together just what effect the raids carried out so clinically by the L-19s had on the "enemy" tribesmen below.

Hmong from the same central highlards of Laos described a bewildering variety of different coloured clouds of gas, all producing deadly symptoms.

Rockets fired from small aircraft had released yellow powders which contaminated water supplies and produced "harmful gasses." Anyone who drank the water began to vomit, their eyes turned red and they died within the hour.

The immediate symptoms of the gassings were vomiting of blood, bleeding from the mouth and nose, and unconsciousness. The gas was dangerous for a week unless washed away by rain. Those badly affected died within 24 hours.

Scores of corroborated reports of separate attacks began to build up a picture of saturation attacks on any village suspected of harbouring members of the resistance. American intelligence believes more than 10,000 Hmong were killed directly by the gassings between 1976 and 1980.

Reports have even been received of accidental attacks on friendly villages by aircraft with Vietnamese markings, which dropped chemicals that led to the death of 300 Hmong, mostly children, who has sided with and even sheltered the communist troops.

Confirmation of the report by the Laotian pilot was received from another pilot, who defected in 1978 after service in the Lao People's Democratic Republic (LPDR) air force.

He provided information about the attacks on Phou Bia, and said chemicals had been dispensed from light aircraft by Lao People's Liberation Army (LPLA) units in a concerted campaign beginning in May 1978.

From his account, the American report of the gas operation was compiled, it read:

"The LPLA unit responsible for the chemical warfare rockets is a special LPDR air force unit to which is attached a Soviet expert. In Vientiane there are three persons, led by a Socialist Republic of Vietnam expert, who are responsible for putting the chemicals into the heads of U.S. manufactured 2.75 rockets.

"At Phonsavan there are two persons responsible for this activity along with four Soviet experts. In Savannakhet Province, there are two other persons responsible for Southern Laos."

Other reports collected by American intelligence officers indicated that 50 Soviet civilians were permanently stationed at Phonsavan. Their precise duties were not known, but they were "connected with" chemical warfare.

More than three years after this information became known it still has not been acted on. Villagers continued to die while American diplomats presented to the Soviet Union their limited knowledge of the gassing.

They asked Soviet officials to "use their influence" to stop the attacks, even though the intelligence community already knew--and had intimated to some congressmen--that Soviet experts were running the campaign.

The information was gathered in late 1978. The large-scale gassings went on until at least May 1979 in Laos, and hundreds of Hmong men, women and children suffered or died while international diplomacy took its course.

For five years between 1976 and 1980, the Laotian Government waged a clandestine campaign of chemical warfare deep within its own country, killing thousands of men, women and children of Hmong tribes.

But a steady trickle of refugees who survived the attacks made their way from the central uplands of Laos across the border with Thailand, where they were housed in camps and then resettled to foreign countries.

More than 100,000 Hmong--almost half the total population--now live outside Laos, and some 200 of the refugees from the yellow rain have reached Australia.

Eye-witnesses of the gas attacks, their testimony throws a new light on the statistics Western diplomats have compiled as evidence to unmask the campaign.

Chi Lee Vue, mother of a Hmong family, now lives in the Sydney suburb of Carramar, just two years ago Sho had never left the Phou Bia mountain area in the central uplands of Laos.

Chi Lee Vue, her 28 year-old Son Ying Li, and her three other younger children survived ten gas attacks by Laotian army light planes and fighters during their 18 months on the run from the Pathet Lao Government.

In that time, her husband was killed by government troops, she saw scores of children die a slow death from the yellow rain, and was forced to survive on starvation rations while moving from hide-out to hide-out in the mountain forests of Phou Bia.

Chi Lee Vue says Hmong people began to leave Laos when the Pather Lao assumed control of the country in 1975. The Hmong had been associated with the American-organised resistance to the Pather Lao, led by General Vang Pao.

Vang Pao's former troops fled or went into hiding when the general left Laos late that year, but the majority of the Hmong, who had not been associated with the resistance, stayed, assuming they would be safe.

"The poisoning began in 1976, when the authorities began bringing salt, which was very hard to come by then, to the Hmong," Chi Lee Vue said.

"The bags of salt they brought were poisoned, so anyone who ate the salt was affected. First it had the effect of eating into your gums, making them swollen and black, then the teeth dropped out, and it was very painful.

"Children who ate the salt would die within four days--but for older people it took 20 days to a month."

The Hmong found that if they lit the salt it would burn with a green flame, before turning reddish-brown and leaving a sticky residue.

The first gas attack on her village, Muong Cha, came in April 1977 when a light aircraft dropped a load of yellow powder over a wide swathe of the houses in the area. At that time, none of the villagers had heard any store is about the gassings, and so had no idea what to expect.

They stood and watched as the gas fell. Only when it touched their skin, when it burnt their eyes or made their noses bleed did they run for cover.

By then it was too late. More than 100 children and older people died in the first attack, as well as most of the farm animals. The people soon decided to abandon the village.

"The planes which dropped the first clouds were small aircraft just like the ones which we see flying from bankstown airport," Chi Lee Vue said.

The villagers took refuge on their outlying farms on higher slopes, and in caves, where government troops and plane could not spot them. Then they split into groups to go on forays, hunting for food, and the different groups lost contact.

Soon the planes began spraying another chemical which polluted the water used by the Hmong, in an attempt to flush them from their hiding places. A yellow spray. It left a red deposit on the surface of water.

Anyone who drank water which had been contaminated would bleed from the mouth, vomit, have diarrhoea, fall drowsy and soon die.

For months the villagers survived, moving from place to place to avoid the Pathet Lao. They saw gas sprayed directly from planes, gas released from rockets on impact with the ground, gas scattered by rockets which bust in the air, showering them with pellets of iron shrapnel.

They came across sprays which were yellow, green, blue, white--and every gassing would be followed by a ground assault. Not even crowded religious shrines were spared from attack.

Chi Lee Vue's husband, Fay Yao, was shot in one of these raids in early 1978. "At that time we never knew whether we would survive from one day to the other," she said.

Ying Li was suddenly in charge of the family and the loose group of 23 villagers who had stayed together. Without animals or food, they survived in the forest. Meanwhile, in a village near their own, the Pathet Lao killed a young Hmong couple, thrust their child alive into a rice husker and cudgelled the baby to death.

While the Hmong survived in the hills, temperatures dropped to freezing level. The forests were covered in cloud, and the rains were falling. They eventually decided to risk the journey to Thailand, across unknown territory held by the Pathet Lao.

None of the people who undertook the journey knew what they were headed for. Each villager, wrapped in warm winter cloaks, carried only a small supply of rice and a blanket. All their other possessions were abandoned.

They crossed the Mekong three weeks later. Of the entire village, only their group reached Thailand. Chi Lee Vue's eldest son, Ge Li, had already emigrated to Australia, so, only a few months later, the refugee family arrived in Sydney in time for Christmas 1979.

"I will just live here day by day--we cannot return to Laos because the same thing will happen again, and the Pathet Lao will try to wipe out our people everywhere," she said.

The Hmong believe they are natural victims of the present government, ever since they gave support to the anti-communist resistance.

"We would like people in other countries to know about what has happened to us, but they were far away and we were in hiding in the forests while this was going on, so there was nothing we could do," Chi Lee Vue said.

She stresses the gassings only began after Vang Pao left Laos. As long as the regular resistance army was active, civilians were never victimised.

Vang Pao visited Muong Cha several times, and was close to the chief of the village. He made a strong impression on the people, mainly because he always brought supplies with him when he arrived, either by jeep or by plane, in the Hmong strongholds of Phou Bia.

"When he left he promised he would return within the year, but now hope has faded," she said.

Doubtless the general also impressed the villagers by his habit of always wearing a Western suit when he came to visit them. "All the Hmong believe in him, and trust everything he says--he is their leader."

In Australia, the Hmong have made a quick adjustment to their new life. Chi Lee Vue has nothing but praise for the Australian Government programme which has helped her to make the change from life in remote farmlands to the strange new world of Sydney.

But there are still moments when she finds it difficult to understand the fate which has swept over her people in the last few years, since the end of the Vietnam War.

"Because of the Americans our lives changed completely, but there is nothing we can do about it and no one we can tell."

With the flight from death of the Hmong, one of the last, and least-known chapters of the West's adventure in Indochina has come to its end.

BRIEFS

WORLD'S LARGEST TIN MINING COMPANY--The world's largest tin mining company came into being in Kuala Lumpur on 11 October following the unanimous approval by shareholders of a merger between two of the largest mining companies in the country, the Malaysian Mining Corporation [MMC] and the Malayan Tin Dredging Company [MTD]. The merger of the two companies was approved by shareholders at a meeting on 10 October. The new group will have a capital of $1.1 billion and net profit of about $370 million. It will produce nearly 18,000 tons of tin a year. [BK141235 Kuala Lumpur Domestic Service in English 1130 GMT 11 Oct 81]

STATE BANK ISSUES ANNUAL REPORT FOR 1980-81

BK26114 Karachi Domestic Service in English 1005 GMT 26 Oct 81

[Text] The annual report of the State Bank for 1980-81, which was released in Karachi today, says the economic situation in the country during the year was characterized by increases in the Gross Domestic Product, savings and investments. It showed improvement in budgetary and balance of payments position and deceleration in the monetary expansion.

The report says the Gross Domestic Product in real terms increased by 5.7 percent broadly in line with the annual plan target. Although the rate of growth was 1.3 percent lower than the previous year, it was better than the average of all the non-oil developing countries and was nearly twice the growth rate of the population.

In the agricultural sector, the production of wheat reached a new peak of 11.34 million tons during the year showing an increase of 5 percent over the previous year. Sugarcane crop set a new record with an increase of 16.9 percent during the year while the cotton output stood almost unchanged at last year's level of about 4 million bales.

The production of rice, however, declined by 4.7 percent to 3.97 million tons.

The manufacturing sectors recorded a growth of 9.2 percent during the year, slightly lower than the preceding year.

Cotton yarn, refined sugar, fertilizers, vegetable ghee, cement, chemical, paper board and chip board, jute goods, [word indistinct] steel products, cigarettes, safety matches and cycle rubber tires and tubes were the major industries which achieved increases in the production.

The report says the ratio of gross investment to GNP was 16 percent and of national savings to GNP 12.9 percent. The government's budgetary position showed an improvement due mainly to higher revenue receipts and large foreign resources inflow.

The monetary and credit policies during the year continued to be basically oriented to checking inflationary pressures and resulted in considerable deceleration of the rate of monetary expansion from 18.5 percent in 1979-80 to 14.7 percent in 1980-81.

The price pressure, however, increased during the year because of the stiff rise in the prices of the imports particularly oil and industrial raw materials.

The report described the export performance of the country as creditable and said exports rose by over 25 percent during the year. Marked increases were recorded in the exports of raw cotton and rice, which accounted for a 36.9 percent of the total exports.

EXPORT EARNINGS HIGHER IN AUGUST

Karachi DAWN in English 16 Oct 81 p 5

[Text]

Pakistan's export receipts during August, 1981 amounted to Rs 1479.6 million (148.0 million dollar) as compared to Rs 1976.1 million (199.6 millions dollar) in the previous month and Rs 1405.7 million (142.0 million dollar) in the corresponding month last year. According to figures released by State Bank of Pakistan the earnings from exports during the month were higher by Rs 404.2 million than the average of Rs 1075.4 million for this month over the past five years.

Export proceeds during the first two months of the current fiscal year (1981-82) aggregated Rs 3455.7 million ($349.1 million) as against Rs 3103.3 million (313.5 million dollar) during the corresponding period last year. The monthly average rate, therefore, works out to be Rs 1727.9 million (174.5 million dollar) which compares with the corresponding two months average rate of Rs 1551.7 million (156.7 million dollar) for 1980, Rs 1330.4 million (134.4 million dollar) for 1979, Rs 972.3 million (98.2 million dollar) for 1978, Rs 786.7 million (79.5 million dollar) for 1977 and Rs 951.7 million (96.1 million dollar) for 1976.

MAIN COMMODITIES

The commodity-wise trend of exports reveals that rice which fetched the highest foreign exchange of Rs 209.1 million registered a decrease of Rs 164.4 million over the previous month. Cotton fabrics was the second biggest foreign exchange earner and export earnings on this account indicated an increase of Rs 13.5 million to stand at Rs 191.5 million as compared to Rs 178.6 million in July, 1981. Export proceeds from articles of textile materials and textile yarn and thread at Rs 141.6 million and Rs 141.0 million showed decreases of Rs 54.9 million and Rs 26.3 million as compared to Rs 196.5 million and Rs 167.3 million respectively in the previous month. Receipts from petroleum and petroleum products and floor coverings and tapestries were also lower by Rs 114.3 million and Rs 23.9 million respectively during the month. Proceeds from clothing, leather, cotton, scientific instruments, crude vegetable materials and fresh fruit and fresh/dry nuts at Rs 87.0 million, Rs 73.7 million, Rs 56.7 million, Rs 20.5 million, Rs 18.4 million and Rs 16.6 million depicted declines of Rs 10.2 million Rs 0.9 million Rs 1.6 million Rs 2.4 million, Rs 96.2 million and Rs 8.8 million respectively as compared to the preceding month. However, earnings from non-cotton woven textiles, fish and fish preparations, railway vehicles and toys, games and sporting goods at Rs 61.8 million Rs 48.8 million, Rs 26.0 million and Rs 24.6 million recorded increases of Rs 12.0 million Rs 15.0 million Rs 26.0 million and Rs 1.0 million respectively during the month under review.

PROMINENT BUYERS

As regards the destinational pattern of exports, Japan was the most prominent buyer of Pakistani merchandise and paid an amount of Rs 133.9 million mainly for cotton (Rs 45.6 million), textile yarn and thread (Rs 36.8 million) and fresh and simply preserved fish (Rs 26.0 million) The second biggest buyer was USA that lifted goods worth Rs 129.9 million. The main items of export to USA were cotton fabrics (Rs 30.4 million), articles of textile materials (Rs 29.6 million), clothing (Rs 18.3 million) and floor coverings and tapestries (Rs 17.2 million). Some of the other notable countries in descending order of magnitude of amounts were Kuwait (Rs 119.7 million), Singapore (Rs 112.6 million), Saudi Arabia (Rs 103.7 million), Hong Kong (Rs 82.1 million), UK (Rs 75.1 million), West Germany (Rs 70.4 million), Iran (Rs. 52.4 million), People's Democratic Republic of Yeman (Rs 51.9 million), USSR (Rs 48.3 million), UAE countries (Rs 41.5 million), France (Rs 40.4 million) Italy (Rs 39.8 million), Bangladesh (Rs 35.0 million) and Cameroon (Rs 30.9 million).

EXPORTS TO RCD

Export to RCD countries totalled Rs 139.8 million (14.1 million dollar) during the first two months of the current fiscal year (1981-82) forming 4.0 per cent of the total exports as compared to Rs 261.8 million (26.4 million dollar) during the same period last year. The main items of export to RCD countries during the period were rice (Rs 36.2 million), cotton fabrics (Rs 35.9 million) articles of textile materials (Rs 28.9 million), paper and paper board (Rs 6.0 million), medicinal and pharmaceutical products (Rs 5.2 million), leather (Rs 5.1 million), other inorganic chemicals (Rs 4.2 million) and unmilled barley (Rs 3.5 million).

BARTER DEALS

Pakistan's export under commodity exchange agreements stood at Rs 137.4 million (13.9 million dollar) or 4.0 per cent of the total export proceeds during the first two months of the current fiscal year. Barter exports decreased from Rs 72.4 million in July, 1981 to Rs 65.0 million in August, 1981. The principal trading partners under commodity exchange agreements during the month were USSR (Rs 22.2 million), Czechoslovakia (Rs 15.7 million), Hungary (Rs 10.4 million), Sweden (Rs 6.5 million), People's Republic of China (Rs 4.3 million), Bulgaria (Rs 4.2 million), North Korea (Rs 1.3 million) and Poland (Rs 0.4 million).

The main commodities exported under commodity exchange agreements during August, 1981 were clothing (Rs 17.1 million), cotton fabrics (Rs 13.9 million) articles of textile materials (Rs 10.5 million) textile yarn and thread (Rs 9.3 million), leather (Rs 6.1 million) and medicinal and pharmaceutical products (Rs 1.9 million). The remaining commodities jointly contributed for Rs 6.3 million during the month under review.

EXPORT HOUSES TO BE SET UP

Karachi DAWN in English 13 Oct 81 pp 1, 10

[Text]

The Government has, for the first time, introduced a scheme to set up Export Houses, duly registered by a competent Federal Authority, to systematise the procedures in respect of designing, production, salesmanship and marketing of the country's exportable goods.

With exports growing at the rate of 30 per cent during the last four years and now touching the 3 billion dollars' mark, it has now become imperative to sustain the export momentum through "a sophisticated, well-groomed mechanism", official sources explained.

They cited the case of Japan, where nine or 10 Export Houses operate 55 per cent of that country's international trade.

The Export Houses scheme has been enforced under the Registration of Export Houses Order, 1981, under which a statutory notification has been circulated among the related agencies with an offer to apply for registration as an Export House.

Conditions of eligibility for registration are that a trading company should already be registered under the Companies Act, 1913, and also as an exporter under the Registration (Importers and Exporters) Order, 1952. Besides, it should have or should undertake to establish, within a specified period, an office abroad and that its export performance in the past should be of the amount of not less than Rs. 20 lakh immediately preceding the year in which the application is made.

In view of a large number of small-and medium-size export-oriented industries, a facility has been offered to the trading companies to seek registration as an Export House in the form of a consortium.

The registration of an Export House shall be valid for a period of one year and may, on application, be renewed from year to year — subject to satisfactory export performance.

PRINCIPLES

The Registration of Export Houses Order lays down that while granting registration, the Federal Authority shall satisfy itself with applicant/trading company's managerial capacity, technical, financial and service resources, testing facilities and quality control arrangements as well as its ability to provide assistance to the supporting manufacturers in the matter of the availability of imported inputs.

The Federal Authority, constituted under the 1981 Order, comprises the Vice-Chairman of the Export Promotion Bureau as its Chairman, and the Joint Secretary (External Finance) Ministry of Finance, and the Director, Exchange Control Department, State Bank of Pakistan, as its members.

The Export House, so registered, will be entitled to import against RMR and BMR facilities on behalf of individual or a group of importers. It will be treated at par with the recognised industrial units for the purpose of advance BMR licences and will be allowed one per cent of incremental foreign exchange earnings in respect of the exports of cotton textiles and cotton yarn and 2 to 5 per cent in respect of other products.

An Export House, under the Registration Order, shall maintain proper accounts of imports and exports and submit to the Federal Authority a pre-audit annual return and a statement of exports which, inter alia, will specify the exports made on behalf of each supporting manufacturer.

Officials said that with the pace of industrialisation, particularly in regard to the exportable engineering goods, a mechanism like the proposed Export House is needed to locate new markets, promote aggressive salesmanship, ensure production in accordance with the specific design and also to cater for the after-sale service.

INCREASED EXPORT OF GARMENTS URGED

Lahore THE PAKISTAN TIMES in English 9 Oct 81 p 6

[Text]

Ready-made garments have in the last few years emerged as an important export item. The earnings from garment exports have gradually been climbing and stood at 74.29 million dollars in fiscal 1980-81. This marked an increase of about 40 per cent over the preceding year's figure of 53.87 million dollars. An idea of the annual percentage difference can be had from the fact that in 1978-79 the income from this source was a paltry 38 million dollars. In other words, the sales have almost doubled in value in three years' time. In view of this rising trend the current year's earnings are projected at 133 million dollars. Although on the face of it, Pakistan's progress in the field appears satisfactory, our exports are extremely small in the context of the growing worldwide trade in ready-made garments, particularly in relation to many Third World countries' income from this item. In some cases they are 10 to 15 times the earnings of Pakistan. Our relative backwardness in this sector is rather anomalous. With a strong cotton base and developed textile industry, the logical expansion should have been towards the production of garments. Among the many reasons why this has not happened, one is that garment manufacture and export is much more exacting than similar undertakings in other areas and calls for a high level of organisational and managerial skill and marketing expertise. Another reason is the absence of an adequate fabric base for this fabric-intensive industry. There is a singular lack of standardisation and quality control which makes it difficult to execute large orders and ensure the requisite finish. Two other debilitating problems are dependence on costly imported synthetic and blended fibres and the lack of trained manpower.

The Werner report on Pakistan's garment industry made a number of important recommendations to revive the sector. The report said that Pakistan could not increase its share of the world garment market unless the industry modernised itself in terms of management expertise, production methods, productivity and quality levels, training programmes and marketing techniques. It recommended the adoption of modern garment technology in place of the simple lockstitch and overlock machines. It also pointed out that joint ventures with foreign countries would be an inexpensive way to ensure a quick inflow of improved technology and marketing know-how. A related need is to encourage expansion of existing uneconomic units with liberal Government assistance. The Small Industries Corporation, for example, could set up special programmes to impart training in garment-making. Another measure of support for the industry would be to declare it a cottage industry so that it can function unhampered by small cumbersome levies that don't amount to much and discourage investment in the sector.

INCREASED PRESSURE ON ECONOMY CAUSING SHORTAGES

Karachi DAWN in English 15 Oct 81 p 7

[Article by Sultan Ahmed]

[Text]

SUDDEN shortages of essential commodities seem to upset us just as much as a small surplus or illusory abundance rings the alarm bells.

If we had an acute shortage of sugar and severe rationing last year, we are told we have a sizeable exportable surplus now. And if we had vanaspati shortages in some parts of the country sometime or the other last year, we are alerted to the presence of an exportable surplus now.

We exported 7000 tons of pulses last year under the mistaken notion that we had a surplus of pulses in the country. May be it was a case of misplaced zeal for exporting as much of our products as possible. So we are now importing pulses at a far higher cost, and on an emergency basis.

The same situation may arise in respect of cement at some point when because of the very high cost of construction the private building boom eases.

In an agricultural economy surplus and shortages are not uncommon. They are common not only in the developing countries but also in economies as varied as those of the U.S. and the Soviet Union. But if our planners and officials can anticipate the shortages and cover the gap they would be able to handle a surplus, too, with equal facility as long as it is not too large.

But whether it is the result of the pressure exerted by the mighty farm lobby in Pakistan, or the agitation mounted by the exporters, or it is the outcome of both, a small surplus soon assumes crisis proportions as much as a sizeable shortage does.

The country is faced with such a crisis, real or manipulated, from time to time, as our official economists, planners and senior men in the economic ministries collectively have not been anticipating or estimating the available supply or the aggregate demand on a realistic or reliable basis. So when the estimates of total demand and available supply are unrealistic, the market forces exploit the situation promptly. The shortage there becomes more acute, prices shoot up, and the crisis becomes unmanageable.

Under-estimation

Too many of our difficulties in this area spring from under-estimation of the aggregate demand for goods and services in the country. That under-estimation applies to commodities as varied as sugar, and meat, cement and pulses, vegetables and dairy products and even onions and potatoes.

All that begins with the easy official approach to the money supply in the country that generates the demand and pushes up the prices whenever there is a shortage, real or wilfully created. This is the age in which the quantification of money supply has moved away from the traditional M 1 to M 2 and even M 3, and even to the inclusion of "near money" as Paul Samulson calls it, to determine the overall money supply and aggregate national demand for goods and services.

Under the pressure from the International Monetary Fund we now treat not only the currency in circulation and the demand deposits in banks but also the time deposits in banks as components of money supply in Pakistan. That certainly is a distinct improvement over the earlier M1 position of adding together only the currency in circulation and demand deposits in banks to determine the overall money supply in the country.

But the pressure on demand in the country is built up not only by this officially accounted money supply but also the invisible inflow of money from abroad. That money comes in the shape of about Rs. 500 crore sent home through non-banking channels by our emigre workers and consumer durables worth about Rs. 500 crores sent to Pakistan to be sold at higher prices and converted into cash for current consumption and marginal savings. Together they constitute about 10 per cent of the over-all money supply in the country, and that is not a small figure.

Even more significant than this non-official flow of money into the economic mainstream are the changes in the consumption pattern and the variations in the nature of the bigger consumers in the country. Demands for higher consumption are coming from large new areas which did not exist before.

Transfer of resources

There has been a progressive transfer of resources to the country-side from the towns and cities. That has been happening following the steady increase in the procurement prices for wheat, rice, sugar and cotton compared to the largely static prices of the 1950s and 1960s. When wheat prices increase by about three times within about ten years, or the basmati price rises similarly, or there is a sharp rise in the price of sugarcane, regardless of the yield, more and more money has to become available in the villages.

In addition to the steady rise in the procurement prices, there has been a tremendous increase in agricultural output as well. When wheat production rises from 7.6 million tons in 1974-75 to 11.3 million tons, rice production from 2.3 million tons to 3.07 million tons, or sugarcane from 19.9 million tons to 32 million tons in the current year and cotton production, too, increases abruptly, a lot more money has to go into the villages.

Clearly, when industrial growth in the country lags behind the agricultural growth over a long period more of the finance resources of the country have to be transferred to the rural areas, although it may be said that the big beneficiaries are not the real beneficiaries as much as the rich zamindars, waderas and neo-sardars.

And that has to spur the demand for goods and services particularly when many of those in the villages are able to grow much of their own food, including vegetables, and raise their own chicken for eggs or cattle for milk. Through this means they are able to reduce the impact of inflation on them.

Compared to the villages, wage-earners in the cities do not have such cushions to shield them from inflation. They take on additional jobs, if available, to make both ends meet. It is difficult to quantify the transfer of resources to the villages through this means, or the increase in the aggregate demand; but it is very much there.

Secondly, the pressure on the demand for essential goods and services created by the over three billion dollars that come into Pakistan through banking and non-banking channels, or as clear money and goods to be converted into cash, is very substantial. This is the demad of a new rich class willing to spend easily and increase the aggregate demand, although it may be said that the inflow of the emigre workers' earnings is only about six per cent of the Gross National Product.

The Third factor that increases the demand for goods and services in the country is the money that is afloat in the underground sector or parallel economy of the country. That is the large income of the hoarders, profiteers and like groups, the income from the construction boom in the country, money collected by those who indulge in forgery and fraud, produce fake passports and visas and send hundreds of persons abroad for jobs for a high fee, the bank staff who rob their own banks clandestinely, and all the elements who indulge in corruption and crime of profit in the country.

The number of persons involved in such operations now is very large, and so is their gross earnings. It is almost impossible to quantify this money; but surely what is too easily earned is too readily spent. The impact of such spending on the economy is bound to be large when big time corruption in Pakistan is often a corporate deed and seldom an individual act. When one officer in National Savings Organization can rob his organization of Rs. 2.3 crore, and another of Rs. 80 lakh the amount of money that can come into the consumer market through such means can be visualised easily.

Usually our planners and economists would not give great importance to these factors as agents for increasing demand, sustaining greater consumption and causing larger shortages. Therein lies the setbacks to our successive five-year plans, the sudden shortages that arise and the alarm bells that ring all around.

Conventional approach

The previous government nationalised some of the means of industrial production, but could not ensure larger supplies or manage the consumption levels. While production did not increase appreciably the consumption increased substantially. In fact, the demand for goods was artificially increased through the state TV and radio. As a result, prices shot up. That trend has been sustained all through these years.

A part of the difficulty of the officials in comprehending what is happening may arise out of their physical isolation and the improbability of their becoming victims of the shortages themselves. And traditionally, they have tended to understate problems they are not familiar with or factors that do not impinge on their lives directly. If that kind of conventional approach does not give, way to a more realistic and rational approach to the real demand and actual supply in the country sudden shortages will continue to exasperate us and small surpluses embarrass the officials.

REPORT ON PAKISTAN, U.S. JOINT VENTURES

Karachi MORNING NEWS in English 12 Oct 81 p 4

[Text] The Federal Industries Ministry has finalised the exercise of preparing feasibility studies of 60 specific industries for possible joint venture collaboration with American investors.

Informed sources told PPI yesterday that these feasibility studies would soon be despatched to the Pakistan-American Economic Cooperation Council in USA for circulation among the American investors.

They said that American investors who are keen to join hands with their Pakistani counterparts in setting up of joint venture industrial units in Pakistan would study these reports before coming to Pakistan next November, when an American investors' mission is due to pay a visit.

These feasibility reports they said would give sufficient information about the availability of raw material, manpower and technology and possible assistance from American investors in implementation of specific projects and marketing prospects for products both within Pakistan and outside.

The sources said that once the American investors identify industrial project of their interest, the follow-up negotiations could be held with relevant Pakistani entrepreneurs and a more detailed and comprehensive report for the selected project could be prepared.

They said that the Government had assigned a number of financial institutions and public sector corporations to prepare such feasibility reports.

These institutions include Bankers Equity Limited, Pakistan Steel and Investment Advisory Centre of Pakistan which were involved in exercise of preparing the blue prints for possible joint venture collaboration between Pakistan and American investors in specific fields.--PPI.

GROUND RECEIVING STATION NEAR COMPLETION

Karachi MORNING NEWS in English 19 Oct 81 p 5

[Text] Plans are in an advanced stage for the construction of Pakistan's first permanent ground receiving station for satellite pictures and data beamed to earth from outer space.

Mr Salim Mehmud, Chairman Pakistan Space and Upper Atmosphere Research Commission, said here that negotiations for the construction of the ground station were currently underway with the American National Aeronautics and Space Agency (NASA).

He said a draft memorandum of understanding arrived at between NASA and SUPARCO had been forwarded for approval to the Federal Government and once official permission was forthcoming, a final agreement would be concluded between the two agencies.

The ground station will receive pictures and other information direct from the US "Landsat" series of orbiting earth resources satellites.

These satellites are designed to photograph selected parts of the earth and collect other data relevant to mineral resources, agriculture, flood control, meteorology, weather forecasting etc.

The SUPARCO Chairman said that heretofore, Pakistan received some pictures and other information gathered by the Landsat satellites on request from NASA, but this procedure involved delays.

The procedure was that the Landsat satellite was instructed by NASA ground control to take pictures of Pakistan at certain times and store this data in its recorder.

Later on, NASA ground stations received these pictures and other relevant data from the Landsat recorders, and the Agency passed them on to Pakistan. (Such data is also received from other countries).

However, Mr Salim Mehmud explained there were three drawbacks in this procedure, namely, the delays involved; secondly the loss of picture quality in the recording process; and thirdly, NASA's inability at times to provide the required pictures due to its other commitments.

The SUPARCO chief pointed out that with a permanent ground receiving station, far greater details of all areas of Pakistan could be obtained through Landsat satellites, and these would be especially helpful in exploration, exploitation and management of natural resources.

He said some of the equipment for the ground receiving station would be fabricated by SUPARCO within Pakistan.

With assistance from NASA, the ground receiving station will be built by SUPARCO itself, he added.

He said the three-year project will cost about 10 million US dollars (around Rs. 100 million).

He stated that if the draft proposals are approved by the Pakistan Government, work on the ground receiving station will start towards the end of next year.

In conclusion, Mr Salim Mehmud said that it was tentatively planned to locate the ground receiving station in Islamabad.--APP

OPERATION OF CLANDESTINE VISA MARKET DESCRIBED

Karachi DAWN in English 16 Oct 81 p 1

[Article by Shaheen Sehbai]

[Text]

With almost every Pakistani youngman aspiring to go to one oil-rich State or the other, there is a boom in the clandestine visa market – despite tight government restriction. The latest to join in the racket are European companies, for the illicit trade in manpower has now turned into big business.

To obtain that precious boarding card, one has to pass through numerous check-points and meet tough conditions set by the government but the clever recruiting agents – OEP (Overseas Employment Promoters) in official terminology – and their more shrewd foreign allies have invented scores of methods to render the checks ineffective.

That visas for all Gulf States, Saudi Arabia, Libya and Iraq are bought and sold in the open market is common knowledge. The procedure adopted by the OEPs is such that no one can trace whether a person who has obtained a visa is a genuine candidate for the job abroad or whether he has bought it, irrespective of the fact whether he qualified for the job or not.

The agents have made a mockery of the rules and regulations and it is in their hand to send anyone to any country they like, depending on the deal they strike with the individual.

Ironically, everyone who buys a visa through the OEPs has to undertake before the Protector of Emigrants that "he has not paid any amount to anyone except the fees of the Protectorate and that all other expenses including the passage has been paid by the company." This is the last para of the Foreign Service Agreement which is signed by the employee, the Overseas Employment Promoter (Recruiting Agent) and the Protector of Emigrants.

A formality

That in most cases this undertaking is merely a formality is taken for granted. In practice, it hardly takes an employee between three and five minutes to obtain his Foreign Service Agreement after all the other formalities have been completed by the OEP.

The employee has to appear before the officer at the Protectorate, sign the FSA and take a copy. He is rarely informed of what he is signing far less what rules and regulations he has agreed to. (The agreement is in English except for the last para)

In almost hundred per cent cases, the employee is never bothered about the conditions, neither is he worried about the fact that his undertaking absolves the Protector of Emigrants of all responsibility regarding the terms and conditions of his service and his rights. He knows only one thing, he has paid the agent for the visa and he should fly to the country he wants. Rest is immaterial.

While all papers processed by the Employment Promoters are according to the rules laid down, it is the business of "Azad Visas" (Free Visas which allow a person to go and work anywhere) that brings big money. This business is absolutely illegal and in many ways goes against the interests of Pakistan as well as it negates all the principles on which the tall order of government restrictions has been laid.

Genuine or fake employers in host countries send their demand to the registered employment promoters in Pakistan, the number of whom has been constantly under review. This OEP registers the demand with the Protector of Emigrants and obtains a number which entitles him to advertise the posts. Applications are received in hundreds and sometimes even thousands but none or very few are looked into. Jobs demanding highly technical qualifications or professional experience are an exception.

The selection is made by the agent and a representative of the employer on the basis of who comes first and pays the price set by the agent for each visa. Different rates are current for different countries. The Saudi (free) visa is the costliest ranging between 15 and 20,000 rupees. Others in demand are Abu Dhabi, Kuwait, other Gulf States, Libya, and Iraq ranging between 10-15,000 rupees. For a successful bidder, relevant certificates are easily forged, either by the candidate himself or by the agent if he does not qualify for the post.

The papers then go to the Protector of Emigrants who countersigns the Foreign Service Agreement between the employee and the recruiting agent on behalf of the employer.

Having passed through these formalities (and they are just formalities as nobody ever bothers to check or verify any of the requirements or conditions as lavish tips are a routine), the emigrant is allowed to proceed.

At this stage, in case of "Azad Visas", the recruiting agent, in collusion with the employer or his agent, hands over a "release document" to the employee which states that he has been released from the job and he is free to undertake any other job. This document is kept highly secret and is virtually smuggled into the host country by various methods.

This, then, completes the scandal. The employee (of none) reaches the country he bought a visa for, the agent makes several thousand rupees per visa, so does the employer or his representative who leaves the country immediately after all his visas are sold.

While this business goes in the favour of job seekers in the case of countries like Saudi Arabia and the Gulf states, in others like Libya and Iraq this could prove to be disastrous and even sometimes tragic.

In Libya, for example, anyone who lands without a job is a lost soul. The NOC he has in hand is undated and, therefore, if it is found on his person by the Customs or other security authorities at the airport, the m[illegible] immediately deported.

If he succeeds in smuggling it in, he might be twice unlucky. For upto one year he cannot take up a regular job which provides him facilities of a legal residence permit, a bank account and a contract which allow him to remit 60% of his salary.

In the absence of a regular job, his duration of stay well expire and he will become an illegal resident. According to Libyan laws, the original employer has to grant him permission for an exit visa. This he cannot obtain as he is no longer in employment and in some cases there is no employer at all.

The poor chap is so stuck that he has to work on any wage that may be offered to him as he is continuously on the run from Immigration authorities and he is in no position to do bargain. He is exploited.

'Bekar Bagh'

Having stayed in Libya for about seven years, I have witnessed scenes in the centre of Tripoli where several hundred Pakistani labour and educated workers used to sleep for months in a public park and wait for Libyan contractors to come and give them some job, at least to meet their food requirements.

The park was known in the Pakistani community as "Bekar Bagh" (Unemployed Park) and it was a great boon for those Libyan contractors who did not wish to go through the cumbersome process of recruiting Pakistani labour through regular and official channels in Pakistan.

Here was a several hundred strong force readily available to them on much cheaper rates and with no attached obligations. They would just pick up as many as wanted, hoard them into a truck and take them to the site of work. Getting only half or reduced wages, these helpless people could not register even the slightest of protest. They could not return home as they could not buy a return ticket and the original employers who gave them the entry visas were no longer traceable and so the Libyan authorities would not give them the exit visa.

In late 1977 and 1978 the traffic of such people from Pakistan to Libya was at its peak and it was this period when those ignorant of rules and regulations and desirous of seeking a foreign job, fell prey to the dubious practices of recruiting agents and their foreign allies.

During this period in Libya there used to be frequent "gheraos" of the Pakistan Embassy in Tripoli with scores and hundreds of Pakistani workers pressing the Embassy to help them obtain exit visas from Libya.

Most of these unfortunate people had sold all their valuables and put their entire assets at stake to travel abroad. Several had nervous breakdowns while quite a few even attempted suicides, as horrifying news of their wives and children being in pitiable condition back in Pakistan, reached them since they could not remit even a single penny for months.

New rules

When the situation became critical, Pakistan introduced new rules and regulations and the role of the Protector of Emigrants was introduced who would check the credentials of the employers and see to it that none of those leaving for foreign jobs are cheated. Things changed but not much.

The clever agents and their foreign friends soon found ways and means to dodge the new system. They introduced new and more sophisticated methods to obtain visas and bypass the Protector or just get through him without being caught.

Their latest technique was detected by this correspondent in a case processed by a Rawalpindi Employment Promoter for Libya. In this case, five Islamabad villagers were chosen to proceed to Libya after paying the agent 15,000 rupees each which included their single journey air ticket to Tripoli.

The visas issued by the Libyan People's Bureau were in the name of an Italian company which is supposed to have its branch in Obari, near Tripoli. This in itself is a new dimension to this racket as hitherto the employers were either local companies in host countries or fake companies with no existence at all.

These five got the visas and also obtained their Foreign Service Agreements duly countersigned by the Protector of Emigrants in Rawalpindi. Lastly they were handed the letters of release in Arabic language and they flew to Istanbul on July 30 last from Karachi on their way to Tripoli.

In this case, these five will now face a different kind of music, since they travelled on a visa issued by a foreign company which illegally released them even before they had boarded the plane.

Libyan laws do not accept the Agreement signed in Pakistan and all employees have to sign another agreement, which is only in Arabic language, before their papers can get processed for residence visas, remittances etc. In this particular case the employer has already released them from service so this is not possible.

That an Italian company is involved proves that the scandal has attracted Europeans as well. It could just be possible that the Italian managers of the company are not aware of the scandal as all paperwork in Arabic language is processed by Libyan liaison men who could have joined hands with the Pakistani OPE to earn big money without any loss to the company.

Here the role of the Labour Attache of the Pakistan Embassy in Tripoli comes in because he is the person who verifies the credentials of a company seeking recruitment of labour in Pakistan. Some questions need to be asked from him as I know of one such official who played havoc with the name of Pakistan by allowing thousands of labour to reach Libya without provision of any jobs.

Some questions need to be asked by concerned agencies in Pakistan as well. One of these five had a passport showing 'Labour' as his profession. He signed the Foreign Service Agreement with the Italian company as a 'Tile Mason'. This agreement was signed in the presence of the Protector of Emigrants whose signatures also appear on it. The company gave him the "Release Letter" (in Arabic) which said he worked as a 'labourer'. All this appears dubious.

This correspondent obtained photo copies of all the documents belonging to one of these five unfortunate men who are now in Libya. The copies were shown to other OEPs in Karachi, the Protector of Emigrants in Karachi and other agencies involved. The unanimous verdict was that the OEP involved was guilty of a grave misconduct.

A formal complaint with the Protector of Emigrants would, all agreed, lead to immediate and automatic cancellation of the promoter's licence as well as forfieture of his security deposits of Rs.100,000.

How can these malpractices be eliminated and a fool-proof system of manpower export created is a big issue that must be tackled.

Experts believe if all the requirements from abroad are registered with the Protector of Emigrants, directly by the host countries and if the Protectorate maintains a register of professional and technical as well as non-technical personnel on the basis of a set standard of qualifications for each cadre, then the middle man or these recruiting agents can be eliminated.

The manpower export programme of other countries as Bangladesh, Philippines, Korea and even India could well be taken as an example. From India no one can take up a job directly or through any agency. Every case is processed through their manpower export department and details are made available to every embassy so that each person who goes abroad is kept track of and looked after by the Indian Government.

INSTITUTE OF TRAINING IN ISLAMIC LAW DESCRIBED

Karachi MORNING NEWS in English 16 Oct 81 p 6

[Article by Dr S. M. Haider, professor of law and director, Institute of Training in Shari'ah and Legal Profession, Islamic University, Islamabad]

[Excerpts] October 17, 1981 marks the beginning of a new era in the sphere of in-service training in Pakistan when a new experiment is being launched for the in-service training of District and Sessions Judges as well as Prosecuting Deputy and Assistant Superintendents of Police at the Institute of Training in Shari'ah and Legal Profession of the Islamic University. The concept received recognition, support and blessings of the President of Pakistan, General Muhammad Zia-ul-Haq, and was put into operation by the rector of the Islamic University, Mr. A. K. Brohi.

The establishment of the Institute constitutes a significant milestone in the process of Islamization and it will go a long way in consolidating Islamic legal norms and in presenting a model for the entire world of Islam to emulate. The first course is being inaugurated by the Chairman of the Federal Shariat Court, Mr. Justice Aftab Hussain.

Rule of Law

The Institute of Training in Shari'ah subscribes to the view that an active judiciary is vital for the sovereignty of the rule of law and dispensation of justice. The Institute will prepare judicial officers, police officers and legal practitioners always to reflect the aspirations of the people and to symbolize the moral values of an Islamic society. The Institute is embarking on the uphill task of promoting Islamic law through the training of judges, and public prosecutors. The Institute is concerned with the promotion of Shariat-i-Islamia.

Islamic Law

The Institute of Training in Shari'ah and Legal Profession will promote a knowledge of Islamic legal system and will relate the particulars to the fundamental rules. The trainees will be helped to study its features and directions with interest and with depth of perception. While projecting the Shari'ah framework of legal profession, the Institute will seek to establish justice in the whole of the Islamic world through the methodology of in-service training.

Thus the Institute will have direct relevance to the growing needs of the Muslim World.

Quran as Source

In the training programmes of the Institute, explicit attention will be drawn to the Quran as an authoritative source of law. References will be made to the paramount authority of the Quran to resolve the conflict between the materials bearing on legal questions. It has been pointed out, for instance, that pronouncement about what is Halal (lawful) and Haram (unlawful) should be based on categorical Quranic verses. The Institute will serve as a barrier against the intrusion of non-Islamic elements in the process of instruction in Islamic law.

In this connection it would be helpful to bear in mind that the prime motive which has actuated the in-service training activity at the Institute is a practical one: the necessity to transmit and diffuse Shari'ah norms relative to actual legal situations. One of the major concerns of the Institute is to emphasize the soundness of Islamic legal doctrines.

UNEMPLOYMENT AMONG MEDICAL GRADUATES NOTED

Karachi MORNING NEWS in English 18 Oct 81 p 4

[Text]

Pakistan Medical Asociation (Karachi branch has expressed concern over the increased unemployment among medical graduates and has urged upon the Federal Health Ministry to take appropriate measures warranted by the situation.

The asociation's President Dr. Badar Siddiqui in a Press statement yesterday said the problems faced by the junior doctors have assumed serious proportions with the rapid expansion in the facilities for medical education.

During the last 10 years, the number of meical colleges went up from 6 to 16 and enrolment capacity from 900 to 4,000 While the number of doctors qualifying from these medical colleges each year is estimated to be aroun 3,500 to 4,000 job facilities has not been increased to accommodate the growing number of fresh medical graduates

Dr. Siddiqui also said the problem of employment has further aggravated with the unfavourable development in the western countries and the middle East culminating in the limited acceptance of Pakistani medical manpower abroad. In few months, another batch of 4,00 doctors will be ready and thus may further aggravate the employment problem.

He said it is imperative to solve the problem of unemployment and utilization of highly skilled manpower for the betterment of the common man otherwise the consequences may be disastrous he said.—PPI

U.S. SCHOLAR'S VIEWS CRITICIZED

Lahore THE PAKISTAN TIMES in English 11 Oct 81 p 4

[Letter to Editor: "Area Specialist"]

[Text] In a recent talk on Nationalism and Ideology at the Institute of Strategic Studies, Area Specialist Dr. Lawrence Ziring of the West Michigan State University put across what could be termed Brahmin geopolitician Subramaniam's viewpoint--with whom, incidentally, he had a dialogue earlier. Dr. Ziring's theme was full of forebodings. Half a dozen times he stressed the 'great-Power' position of India, hinting, by implication, at Pakistan's poor situation; indicated difficulties of American help from 'that' distance, should the Russians advance southward; stressed crucial nature of the 'coming three months' with expected Russian moves; indicated unlikely return of the Afghan refugees, hinting at Russian calculation about the situation; advised Pakistan to enter into a sort of regional co-operative arrangement with India (presumably on latter's terms), implying thereby that American support was conditional on that; reminded his audience of Russians' faith in their ideology and scientific system and their belief that history was on their side; referred to Russian thinking and calculation on the regional trends in parts of our country.

He was upset when questioned about some American books (including his own) fanning regionalism. The gamut of his talk, and much that could be read between the lines, appeared to be timed and calculatedly conforming to Indo-American thinking. It would be surprising indeed if these soundings, aimed presumably at creating fear-complex, were not officially motivated.

If the Russians think history is on their side, so does every nation, and very rightly, so. That concept has nourished communities and nations throughout history. Muslim dialogue and dealings with the Russian Slavs date back to the time when Pilgrim Fathers had not yet crossed the Atlantic. As regards India being a great Power, Americans need not play Alice in Wonderland. India was a great Power long before the British came to the Sub-Continent and the U.S. appeared on the world map. Difficulty of distance is a curious argument. It could well be asked: Did that distance not exist when CENTO and SEATO were formed under U.S. cover?

Fear-charged pontification of American scholars and politicians is a bad policy, and worse strategy. Dr. Ziring's suggestion of commonness of culture and economics between Pakistan and India betrays lack of appreciation of the historical forces operating in the Sub-Continent. That one regarded as a specialist on Pakistan who has also authored some books, should think the way he does is rather surprising. His audience, composed of academicians and administrative elite, would have been happier had he sounded less awesome.—K. A. HAMID, 98-A, Satellite Town, Rawalpindi.

APPEAL TO SETTLE GRIEVANCES OF NEWSPAPER INDUSTRY

Karachi MORNING NEWS in English 15 Oct 81 p 5

[Text] The All Pakistan Newspapers Employees Confederation (APNEC) appealed to the Government to settle the grievances of the newspaper industry and provide needed facilities in keeping with Islamic justice, according to a Press release.

Mr Usmani, Chairman (APNEC), who lately returned from a tour of the country, urged all newspapers to implement the Wage Board decision since the Government had not put any restrictions on advertisements or the receiving of newsprint.

Mr Usmani said that he met the Federal Information Minister on October 4 and apprised him of conditions in the newspaper industry. He said, "members of the national airlines and the railways receive concessions when travelling abroad but this is not the case with members of the newspaper industry."

He also stated that conveyance allowance for members of the trade unions was inadequate. He also said: "a just policy in the allotment of plots for the members of this industry is an imperative need. These factors are causing much disillusionment in the industry."

Mr Usmani stressed the need for a policy, based on Islamic justice and equality regarding the settling of problems in the industry and providing facilities that are the right of its members.

The Chairman of the APNEC appealed to the Government to take immediate and appropriate measures to eliminate growing demoralisation in the Press and thus create congenial atmosphere.

The newspaper industry, he added, would work for an Islamic society along with the Government.

RISE IN KARACHI CRIME EXAMINED

Islamabad THE MUSLIM in English 9 Oct 81 p 6

[Text]

KARACHI, Oct. 8. The Deputy Martial Law Administrator Karachi presided over a meeting on Monday to assess the prevalent law and order situation and the reported increase in crime rate.

Addressing the meeting which was attended among others by the Commissioner Karachi, the DIG Police and the Deputy Commissioner and Superintendents of Police in Karachi Division, the Deputy Martial Law Administrator compared the crime figures of the year 1980 to those of of 1981 and highlighted the areas where crime had shown an upward trend.

Referring to the activities of anti-social elements in the Division, the DMLA said despite some successful raids conducted by the Martial Law teams and the Police against these elements, the evil still persisted . He opined that a concerted effort on a regular basis was necessary to curb these elements.

He stressed upon the concerned officials to launch an intensive drive against these elements especially the organisers, to wipe them out completely. In this regard he directed the concerned officials to make the Crime Control Committees more effective He advised the SHOs and the SPs to take all measures necessary to make the functioning of satta dens and sale of narcotics in their respective functional areas impossible. He said that he will judge their performance by their effectiveness in this regard.

Drawing their attention towards the increased number of fatal accidents, the DMLA pointed out that effective measures should be taken by the DIG Traffic to prevent accidents. He futher directed that special efforts should be made to expedite prosecution of defaulters as a deterrent to potential law breakers.

Speaking on the conduct of the government functionaries he stressed the need for examplary behaviour by officials at all levels to infuse confidence in the public. The DMLA directed that a strict watch over the functioning of the subordinate staff must be maintained by the district and divisinonal heads.

Speaking on the accessibility of the officials to the public, the DMLA pointed out that open kutheries were not being held regularly by vrious officers in the required usefullness of such contact as a source of information reflecting true state of affairs in a administrative unit was indisputable, he said. He directed that the DCs and SDMS must hold open kutheries in their respective areas regularly so as to listen to the problems of the general public and redress their grivences where ever possible. He further said that where redress of grievances is beyond their scope, the problems should be refered to Martial Law authorities for further action.

Regarding encroachments, the DMLA directed that once an encroachment had been removed it was the responsibility of the local police to ensure that it did not reappear.

MEASURES TO END LAWLESSNESS IN INDUSTRY

KARACHI DAWN in English 13 Oct 81 p 3

[Article by Ghulam Dastgir]

[Text]

SHAIKHUPURA, Oct 12: The Federal Labour Minister, Mr. Ghulam Dastgir Khan, has said that special measures are under way to eliminate those disturbing industrial peace or creating lawlessness. He hoped the pace of industrial growth would accelerate after adoption of these measures.

Talking to PPI, the Federal Minister said encouraging results had been achieved after suitable guarantees were given to the private sector.

He said a survey was under way about the nationalised units and those running in loss. They could be handed back to the previous managements.

Answering a question, the Federal Minister said recruiting agencies indulging in malpractices or irregularities had been given a stern warning to desist from such activities.

He said that in future if any complaint was received against a recruiting agency or an agent, he would be tried in a summary military court and given an exemplary punishment.

Replying to a question about the activities of a Pakistani firm in Libya, Al-Murtaza, the Federal Minister said a special team would leave for Tripoli in a few weeks to look into this affair and those found guilty would be dealt with an iron hand.

He said renewal of recruiting licences was not being undertaken for the time being and this ban would only be lifted after necessary amendment in the rules.

He said licences of about 750 recruiting agencies had been cancelled for indulging in illegal activities or perpetuating fraud on the innocent Pakistanis.

Regarding the new labour policy, he said its draft was almost complete. He hoped it would be placed before the Federal Cabinet at its forthcoming meeting at Lahore for final approval.

The Federal Minister said implementation of the new labour policy would consolidate the Islamic system of economy in Pakistan as it protected the rights of both the employer and the employee.—PPI

TCP TO OPEN OFFICES IN KUWAIT, SAUDI ARABIA

Islamabad THE MUSLIM in English 9 Oct 81 p 7

[Text]

KARACHI, Oct. 8: The Chairman of the Trading Corporation of Pakistan (TCP), Aftab Ahmad, said here today that they planned to open Corporation's offices in Saudi Arabia and Kuwait initially to boost the export of Pakistani products in those countries.

In an interview with the APP, he said that feasibility study was underway for opening the TCP offices in other countries also.

The Chairman said, the TCP was now making all endeavours to enter the export market in a big way. He said that the government also expected the TCP to explore all avenues to boost the export of the country side by side with the commercial exporters.

Mr. Aftab said, the TCP channellised the export orders and charged 2 to 2/12 per cent commission from the suppliers. The TCP was exporting on competitive basis enjoying no monopolistic control.

He said, the main items exported by the TCP were towels, bed sheets, nylon blankets, bed covers etc. to China, bed Sheets, pillow cover to Italy, spices to Sri Lanka, dry dates, crude drugs and rock salt to India etc.

He said, the total export figures of the TCP during 1979-80 were worth Rs 70 million and during 1980-81 worth Rs 120.50 million. He added that during July and August this year the figures stood at Rs.10.113 million the exports are increase, he added. The items exported during July and August include prayer rugs, towels T-shirts, rock salt, crude drugs, terry towels, bed sheets, ready made garments and embroidered vallets.—APP

PAKISTAN WOOING OIL PROSPECTING FIRMS

Karachi DAWN in English 11 Oct 81 p 10

[Text]

MONTREAL, Oct 10: Finance Minister Ghulam Ishaq Khan has called upon Canadian oil prospecting firms to come forward and invest in Pakistan, as also in mineral and forest development fields in which Pakistan can benefit from inflow of both technology and capital.

Inaugurating the Canada-Pakistan Economic Council here yesterday he said, investment in manufacturing areas, particularly export-oriented industries was also welcome.

He pointed out that because of its close proximity to the booming Middle East markets, the Export Promoting Zone at Karachi provides handsome opportunities to multi-national corporations in establishing competitive production facilities.

"After the completion of the steel mills project," he added, "bulk of the investment in coming years will be channelled through the private sector."

"Even for industries which form a major part of the public sector such as cement, sugar and heavy engineering Government of Pakistan is willing, indeed keen, to encourage foreign private investment."

Mr Ghulam Ishaq Khan elucidating Pakistan's industrial policy said the aim is to encourage simultaneously private investment and public sector efficiency.

To attract private foreign investment he pointed out, the Government has promulgated a law guaranteeing repatriation of principal as well as interest, with no currency restrictions on such repatriation.

Praising Canada's contribution to Pakistan's economic development at government-to-government level, the Finance Minister said: "There is need to establish an equally strong link at the private sector especially with the current revival of private enterprise".

According to our special correspondent Ghani Erabi, the Canada-Pakistan Economic Council's inaugural session was attended by as many as 75 of Canada's top entrepreneurs, underlining the widespread interest aroused by the World Bank and IMF reports recording the progress made by Islamabad in imposing fiscal discipline on the country's economy and giving fillip to its argicultural and industrial development. Those present included representative of the "Bombardier", Westing House, General Motors, General Electric and Dominion Engineering and they elected Mr Gaston as president of the Canada-Pakistan Economic Council.

Summing up the progress made by Pakistan, Mr Ghulam Ishaq Khan said in the three decades since its independence, the GNP of Pakistan has quadrupled in real terms, agricultural production has doubled and industrial production has grown eightfold. The pace of growth and economic performance has had its ups and downs. The last four years have witnessed a welcome revival from a prolonged drought to self-sufficiency in wheat and sugar has been achieved and exportable surpluses in rice and cotton as well as other farm crops have registered considerable increase.

Earlier, Mr Ghulam Ishaq Khan paid tributes to Canada's contribution to the economic development of Pakistan, particularly in the establishment of infrastructure, the construction of the Warsak Dam and the training of technicians, launching of the oil exploration programme and the reclamation of land hit by waterlogging and salinity.

"The assistance provided by Canada has been of such solid character" he concluded, "that it should be termed as model transfer of real resources from the developed to the developing world."

The Council has the blessing of the Canadian External Affairs Department and Canadian International Development Agency and of the Embassy of Pakistan. But it is a private organisation, consisting of Canadian and Pakistani business firms, and is designed to provide a framework for closer ties, including joint enterprises. So far 31 Canadian firms have joined the Council.

Mr Ishaq Khan said: "I believe that the Council can play a significant role in promoting economic cooperation through dissemination of information about our investment strategies, through organizing exchange of visits of bankers, industrialists, and traders to Pakistan and Canada and through bringing together enterpreneurs of the two countries in organising joint ventures and mutually profitable investments." —PPI/APP.

RESOURCES TO BE MOBILIZED TO BOOST WHEAT OUTPUT

Karachi DAWN in English 11 Oct 81 p 4

[Text]

ISLAMABAD, Oct 10: Vice-Admiral, M. F. Janjua, Federal Minister for Food and Agriculture on Thursday said the Government will mobilise its best available resources plus quality seeds, fertilizers and latest technology to meet this year's wheat target of 12.2 million tons which is 7.5 per cent higher than the last year's wheat production of 11.34 million tons.

The Minister told newsmen about various positive steps which the Government are about to take for better wheat production.

He said the President, General Mohammad Zia-ul-Haq has directed the other relevant Government bodies to cooperate with the Ministry concerned. The President has also asked the Food Ministry to provide the growers with scientific knowledge on harvesting

Mr Janjua said that a sum of Rs 542.7 crore has been fixed as credit target for loan scheme as compared to Rs 400. crore of the last year. Out of the total amount, Rs 369.4 crore will be released to growers for seeds and fertilizers

He said the present wheat requirement of the country is about 10.5 million tons, which, he said will increase gradually with the passage of time Therefore for yielding better wheat output the Government has decided to take more positive steps in regard to basic strategic elements such as water fertilizers, certified seeds modern technology and ofcourse timely sowing of crops.

The Government, he said, will import 20000 tractors to make vorgin soil cultiveable. The farmers who utilised thrasher and other equipment during harvesting, got more benefit than those who did not, in the past, the Minister said.

He said the problem of water shortage for irrigation will be dealt with more effectively in collaboration with WAPDA.

He said that quality seed gives about 15 to 20 per cent higher yields. The ratio of wheat seeds to be distributed among the farmers this year will be 20 per cent higher as against the last year which was 10.80 lakh maunds, the Minister said

EDITORIAL ON WHEAT TARGET, STRATEGY

Karachi DAWN in English 15 Oct 81 p 7

[Editorial: "Wheat: Target & Strategy"]

[Text] The production target of 12.2 million tons set for the coming wheat crop by the Federal Government envisages an increase of 0.82 million tons over last year's actual output of 11.38 million tons. This will add up to a 7.2 per cent rise in output which is higher than the rate of increase in the population. During the coming year, the targeted production is expected to leave a marginal surplus after meeting the country's food requirements, but the achievement of the target will depend as much on inputs as on natural factors, especially the weather. For the last four years, various food and cash crops have been showing a progressive trend in production, which is due in part to favourable weather conditions. The production of rice and cotton already leave a surplus after meeting the internal demand. This, together with the attainment of near-self-sufficiency in wheat, can be regarded as a major breakthrough. For over a quarter century Pakistan suffered from a wheat deficit which was a grave blow to the national economy. Self-sufficiency is going to be a great blessing for an oil-importing poor country like Pakistan. But like all other crops, wheat is vulnerable to natural conditions, and the only firm guarantee of self-sufficiency lies in producing a sizable surplus.

The present rate of growth in wheat production is no doubt satisfactory, but from a longer-term point of view, it needs to be accelerated for several reasons. First, the trend towards higher consumption of wheat has been accentuated by urbanisation. Secondly, an increase in the per capita consumption, coupled with the high rate of population growth, will keep the internal demand for wheat on a rising level in the years to come. These factors, coupled with the susceptibility of the crop to natural hazards and the vagaries of the weather point to the need for a sizable increase in output from year to year. This will make it possible to build up and maintain sizable buffer stocks as an insurance against a poor crop. All this implies advance planning, and it is reassuring that the Government agencies are taking appropriate action on a number of related fronts. The measures include arrangements for easy availability of agricultural inputs and credit and the long-tern endeavour towards increasing per acre yields. The Federal Food Minister has announced that the availability of certified seed is being increased by 20 per cent and that of fertiliser by 25 per cent. Availability of water is also expected to increase this year as more tube-wells are being sunk and the Government has promised steady supply of diesel oil for power pumps. An important factor has been the growing push towards mechanised farming. This year again, 20,000 tractors are being imported. The use of locally manufactured mechanical threshers has also found favour with the farmers. Last year, according to official figures, mechanical threshers were used for processing 90 per cent of the entire wheat output in Punjab. It is encouraging that farmers are slowly realising the benefits of modern inputs. To help them further in this direction, the supply of these inputs has to be streamlined, especially for the benefit of small farmers who till the bulk of the farmland.

A major factor in the agricultural operation is the adequate and timely availability of credit facility. By the present reckoning, the outlook seems bright. As against last year's actual disbursement of Rs. 4,000 million, the target set for the coming crop is Rs. 5,427 million. One hopes that a larger share of the total amount of credit will be provided to smaller farmers. Last year, interest-free loans totalling Rs. 719 million were disbursed among small farmers and it is hoped that this year the quantum will be increased further.

The basic drawback of low productivity on the farms is yet to be tackled in a vigorous way. It is reassuring, however, that the Government has decided, as a matter of strategy, to enforce measures to increase the per acre yield, rather than relying on an increase in the area under cultivation, to achieve the target of wheat production. A comprehensive research project has been completed recently. As a result, it has been discovered that in spite of efforts towards the popularisation of modern farm technology, the farmers' average yield under normal farm conditions is very low. A major reason appears to be that rich and large landowners manage to pre-empt a disproportionately high share of the improved inputs and credits, thus leaving the bulk of the farm land, owned by small owners, untouched by modern farming strategy. Small farms are also generally ignored by extension services which concentrate on big farms to show better results. These are some of the problems and shortcomings that need to be looked into carefully, so that proper remedial action can be taken without delay. In addition, attention has also to be given to the results of research work done within the country and to recommendations made on their basis. This is how it will be possible to achieve a productivity level, comparable at least to the standards of minimum achievable output set by international farm research for developing countries.

POWER STATION NEAR GILGIT--Gilgit, Oct 10--WAPDA will soon undertake the construction of a 360 million rupees 10-megawatt hydel power station near Gilgit under the directions of President Gen Mohammad Ziaul-Haq. Details about the project were discussed at a high-level meeting held in Gilgit recently under the chairmanship of the Martial Law Administrator, Zone 'E', Maj Gen Imtiaz Waraich. Later, it was disclosed that the project will be completed in two phases, in four years' time. In the first phase, half the capacity of the power station will be completed to meet the urgent needs of Gilgit city. Chairman, WAPDA, said that the site for the power station had been selected after extensive survey and it was hoped that the construction of the dam on Gilgit River, a few miles from Gilgit, would start soon. Maj-Gen Waraich stressed the need for accelerating the pace of work on the site. He assured WAPDA of all possible help. [Text] [Karachi DAWN in English 11 Oct 81 p 4]

BID FOR PARTIES' ALLIANCE--Fresh efforts have been initiated for the formation of a broad-based alliance of pro-Islam and pro-Pakistan political parties with Pir Sahib Pagaro and Maulana Shah Ahmed Noorani playing a leading role in it. According to reliable sources, a meeting of the defunct Pakistan Muslim League (Pagaro group), to be called shortly by the party chief, will discuss this issue. The sources added that certain sections are opposing the entry of defunct Jamaat-i-Islami into the proposed alliance. Similarly some other quarters are taking plea to keep the defunct PPP out of the new alliance. By and large, other parties are willing to cooperate with the leaders who are currently engaged in the formation of the new alliance. Maulana Shah Ahmed Noorani, chief of the defunct JUP, has held a series of meetings with several leaders recently and exchanged views on this subject.--PPI. FOODGRAIN GODOWNS TO BE BUILT--Faisalabad, Oct. 15--The Federal Government has chalked out a plan for constructing a number of foodgrain godowns in the country with the help of the World Bank and the Asian Development Bank said here yesterday. Disclosing this here yesterday, the Vice-Chancellor of the University of Agriculture, Faisalabad, Mian Mumtaz Ali said, it had also been decided to associate the private sector in the project. The Government, he said, would provide 60 per cent of the total cost as loan to private parties and would acquire these godowns on rent for 10 years. The Vice-Chancellor was inaugurating a training course on pest control and protective measures for stored foodgrains losses at the University campus. He said that at present the Government had godowns with a capacity of 2.5 million tons while new godowns with 1.1 million tons capacity were planned to be completed by July 1982 to meet storage requirements of the next Rabi crop. The training course, he said, had been sponsored by the University at the request of the Punjab Government for 500 Assistant Food Controllers and Food Inspectors. They would be trained for protecting stored foodgrains and avoiding losses during storage. Training course for these officers would be completed before the next wheat harvesting so that they might be able to control pests and take preventive measures on scientific lines to avoid foodgrain wastage in godowns.--APP. SUGARCANE ADVISORY COMMITTEES--Lahore, Oct. 15--To sort out the problems of growers and devise ways and means for the development of sugarcane in zone areas, advisory committees were set up for all the sugar mills in the province. These committees were formed after the Sugarcane Control Board met here yesterday under the chairmanship of Mr. Rafiq Haider Khan Leghari, Provincial Food Minister. Since the crushing season is starting this month, these committees have been asked to hold their first meeting in the first week of next month and these bodies should meet once every month. The ex-officio chairmen of these committees would be the Assistant Commissioners. In case of their absence, the General Managers of the respective mills will preside over. The Representative of growers who is also member of the Sugarcane Control Board and chairman of the respective Marakiz Council will be the permanent member. The Chairman of Marakiz Council of zone area of the mills will also be the member. The Board discussed at the meeting the viewpoints of the growers and mill managements threadbare and decided to establish 20 more purchasing centres. The mill managements were asked to arrange payment to growers within a fortnight and the staff posted at purchasing centres should be liable to transfer after a year. Moreover, the sugar mills will provide two rooms for the use of growers as rest-houses. It was disclosed at the meeting that in view of the bumper sugarcane crop, the sugar production will rise to about five lakh tons as compared to last year's production of 4.08 lakh tons. A subcommittee comprising three members each from growers and mill managements was also formed to suggest amendments in the existing Sugar Factories Control Act/Rules.--APP. FORGED 'TAX STICKERS' ARREST--The FIA has arrested an employee of a foreign airline in connection with the sale of 'tax stickers' to Haj pilgrims. The employee was identified as M. Ilyas who was found in possession of 150 forged stickers of 100-rupee denominations. Meanwhile, the FIA is trying to locate one Abdul Qadir Sain for questioning about this 'illegal' trade. The FIA sources maintained that Sain is a former Assistant Traffic Supervisor of PIA who supplied the forged stickers to his accomplices after bringing them from Hong Kong. Inquiries revealed that Qadir Sain was once convicted in Hong Kong for forgery and was dismissed from service. [Text] [Karachi DAWN in English 16 Oct 81 p 18]

WHEAT PROCUREMENT PRICE--Lahore, Oct. 15--Vice-Admiral M. Fazil Janjua, Federal Minister for Food and Agricultural, today said that the Government was making every effort to provide inputs to the farmers on time to increase per acre yield side by side ensuring that they got better return for their agricultural produce. Speaking as chief guest at the first session of All Pakistan Kisan Board Conference here, the Minister said that during the last three years the Government had increased the procurement price of wheat from Rs. 37 per maund to Rs. 58 per maund to ameliorate the lot of the small farmers, who formed the backbone of the country's economy. He said that whereas the new sowing season had started the Government was again considering whether to increase the procurement price of wheat. However, he added, as the country was on the threshold of self-sufficiency in wheat production and might soon be able to export wheat, the Government would have also to take into account the price structure in the international market.--APP. SEED PROCESSING PLANTS--Islamabad, Oct. 12--The Government is setting up four seed-processing plants--three in the Punjab and one in Sind--to meet the requirements of quality seeds. Of these, one plant in the Punjab and one in Sind are expected to become operative by the end of this year or in early 1982. The total capacity of these plants is estimated at 16.5 lakh maunds which would meet about 50 per cent of the country's total requirements of wheatseeds for the coming crop. The provision of quality seeds is an important part of the Government's farm policy as quality seeds give about 15 to 20 per cent higher yield and are resistant to diseases. For the coming wheat crop the Punjab would require 23.76 lakh maunds of seeds, Sind five lakh maunds, the NWFP 3.49 lakh maunds and Baluchistan 85 thousand maunds of seeds. The balance requirements are to be met by farmers through their seeds or by purchasing them from the private sector. However, the Government has asked farmers not to buy substandard and uncertified seeds.--PPI. [Text] [Karachi DAWN in English 13 Oct 81 p 10]

GWADUR PORT FINANCING--Japan has backed out from its commitment to finance the mini-port at Gwadur, some 300 miles west coast of Karachi, it was learnt in Karachi. The Japanese International Consulting Agency (JICA) had completed the feasibility of the project and spent nearly one million dollars for the job which was completed recently by a team of six experts. The Government of Pakistan, in view of the economic viability of the project, would now seek help from other countries and aid giving agencies, sources said. The Japanese Government had pledged 30 million dollars for the project as grant-in-aid. The mini-port was primarily meant for improving the fish catch and to fully develop the fishing industry. A small jetty has been built recently some five kilometres from the proposed site of the port. [Text] [Karachi DAWN in English 15 Oct 81 p 1]

INDIAN TRADE FAIR PARTICIPATION--Pakistan is going to set up a pavilion at the International Trade Fair being organised at New Delhi from Nov. 14, to Dec. 4, 1981. MARCOS URGES ALL-OUT PARTICIPATION IN LIVELIHOOD PROGRAM

HK030125 Manila FEBC in English 2330 GMT 2 Oct 81

[Text] The president has urged all-out participation of both the private sector and the cultural communities in the Kilusang Kabuhayan at Kaunlaran [KKK] program. Mr Marcos said he will step up the movement upon his return from the summit meeting in Mexico. The president pointed out before the Malacanang newsmen that his main concern was to strengthen the domestic condition. Our problems are more domestic than anything else. Unless we strengthen our domestic situation, nobody will help us.

He indicated that when the rainy season ends, he expects to travel around the Philippines to see the other sectors of the citizenry and explain to them the KKK program. It is your program, you had better participate in it. President Marcos said that he did not intend to go to the mainland of the United States because he wanted all the big industrial projects launched properly and without delay to sustain the KKK livelihood program.

President Marcos also created yesterday the Kilusang Kabuhayan at Kaunlaran marketing coordinating center to ensure viable livelihood projects. The president issued Executive Order 737 creating the KKK coordinating center to link up foreign and local buyers with Kilusang producers. The center also aims to work out comprehensive marketing information including demands from both foreign and local markets for Kilusang participants. The president also ordered national food administrator (Jesus Vantiago) to work with other ministries and agencies in providing the marketing components of the movement. Mr Marcos said that the Kilusang marketing center will also set up closer links with the private and government sectors taking part in the Kilusang program.

The center, the president added, will coordinate marketing strategies, particularly the setting up of marketing outlets, for various Kilusang products.

DENDRO PLANT OPERATIONAL IN JANUARY 1982

Manila PHILIPPINES DAILY EXPRESS in English 27 Sep 81 p 3

[Article by Leonardo V. Micua]

[Text]

BOLINAO, Pangasinan – The Philippines' first dendrothermal plant will be operational in January next year, setting a new dimension in the nation's march to progress.

The dendro-thermal plant will be the first of its kind in the world to use firewood in generating electricity for the homes and industries.

The dendro-thermal plant is located in Bolinao, some 70 kilometers northwest of Dagupan City.

It is being built by the Pangasinan Electric Cooperative (PANELCO) at a cost of P44 million.

THE DENDRO-THERMAL plant will be capable of producing a minimum of 3.4 million megawatts of electricity. The power is more than enough to meet the needs of over 30,000 households in Western Pangasinan.

With only the boiler and other mechanical components remaining to be installed, the project is expected to generate power for electric consumers in Western Pangasinan by late January.

The timetable for the completion of the project was set by the National Electrification Administration (NEA), World Bank and Asian Development Bank (ADB) which loaned the amount to finance the project.

PHASE ONE of the project, which is about 80 percent complete, consists of the planting of over 15 million fast-growing ipil-ipil trees in Panelco's 1,400-hectare plantation area in Cape Bolinao.

Tree planting started in March 1980 following the designation by the Bureau of Forest Development (BFD) of wide suitable lands in Bolinao for the massive propagation of ipil-ipil on a cooperative basis.

To bring the social and economic benefits of the project down to the grassroots level, PANELCO signed an agreement with 100 farmer-cooperators to undertake the planting of ipil-ipil.

The cooperators will sell their products to PANELCO for use in the dendro-thermal plant. After 25 years, when the PANELCO loan shall have been fully paid, the cooperators shall become co-owners of the plant.

THE FINAL phase of the project, to start by early December, will be the installation of giant boilers, a cracker and chipper, turbines and an aerial transport systems between the plant site and the ipil-ipil plantation.

PANELCO General Manager Arnulfo Cabrera left recently for Europe to shop abroad, possibly France, the mechanical requirements of the dendro plant.

Based on plans the ipil-ipil trees produced in PANELCO'S plantation areas will fuel the broilers to produce steam energy. The turbines, adjuncts to the plants, will convert the steam to electric energy.

Of the P44 million loaned to PANELCO, P30 million were earmarked for the purchase of much-needed plant equipment. The rest of the amount will finance the establishment of ipil-ipil plantations, and infrastructure facilities. (PNA)

MISUARI OFFERED SAFE CONDUCT PASS

Manila PHILIPPINES DAILY EXPRESS in English 8 Oct 81 pp 1, 6

[Text]

DEFENSE MINISTER Juan Ponce Enrile renewed yesterday a government offer for a "safe-conduct pass" to Middle East-based rebel leader Nur Misuari to enable him to move freely in Mindanao and see the conditions there.

Misuari can now travel anywhere in the South and the armed forces will not touch him, Enrile told five visiting journalists from Saudi Arabia who called yesteday at the defense ministry.

The newsmen were: Abdul Majid Shobokshi, editor-in-chief of Al Bilad and father of the Saudi Arabian ambassador to the Philippines; Shamsuddin Asari, city editor of Arab News; Khalid Abdulrahim, deputy editor, Saudi Gazette. Randal Palmer, chief of reporters. of the Gazette; and Othman Al Omeir, managing editor, Al Jazirah.

"He (Misuari) should see for himself if he still commands following in Mindanao contrary to what he is flaunting in Middle East circles," Enrile said.

LATEST WORD was that Misuari is still in Libya, his sanctuary for years, and where he is reportedly regrouping other self-exiled leaders of the Moro National Liberation Front.

Enrile revealed to the visiting newsmen that Misuari is attempting to form a new group but did not elaborate on what relations the new organization will have with the crisis-plagued MNLF.

At least three groups – one led by Misuari, another by Hassim Salamat and the other by rebel commanders in Mindanao who rejected the MNLF's secessionist moves – are known to be in the midst of a power struggle that has disorganized MNLF operations in the South.

BUT EVEN as Enrile reiterated the invitation to Misuari, Mindanao-based MNLF leaders who met the visiting newsmen yesterday expressed doubts on whether Misuari will go back to Mindanao.

MNLF commander Jamil Lucman, alias Jungle Fox, who helped Misuari form the MNLF, said the latter no longer has a place in Mindanao.

"He is a traitor," Lucman said of Misuari.

Lucman said the MNLF basically was a movement for reforms until Misuari introduced the separatist idea, apparently, he said, upon advice of some foreign supporters. All the trouble bugging the MNLF now was caused by the secessionist idea, he added.

ANOTHER MNLF leader, Hussein Loong, now an assemblyman, also expressed contempt for Misuari. He said that some 40,000 MNLF members and supporters in the South who have joined the government are satisfied with the concessions, especially in regional economy and politics, the government has given the Muslims.

Loong told the Arabian newsmen that majority of the Muslims abide by the idea that Philippine sovereignty should be the first consideration in organizing the autonomous governments in Regions 9 and 12.

Other Muslim leaders who met the visiting newsmen were Amelil Malaquiok, alias Commander Ronnie of the MNLF, and Justice Mama Busran.

MARCOS RESTORES COCONUT LEVY

Manila BULLETIN TODAY in English 3 Oct 81 pp 1, 9

[Article by Willie Ng]

[Text]

President Marcos signed a decree yesterday restoring the coconut levy which was suspended Sept. 9, but the amount of the levy is reduced from ₱76 to ₱50 per 100 kilos.

The President, issuing the decree before 10,000 coconut farmers at Malacañang's Maharlika Hall, said that the levy, although reduced, would prop up the sagging coconut prices in both the local and world markets.

The restoration of the levy would also ensure the continuation of the programs initiated and supported by the levy.

The coconut farmers professed to be more than satisfied by the move.

The levy, called the Coconut Industry Stabilization fund, would split the ₱50 in this way: ₱20 for the coconut replanting program, ₱4 for the scholarship program, ₱12.50 for the life and accident insurance coverage for the 45,000 coconut farmers;

₱8.50 for the liquidation of the obligation of the United Coconut Millers for the mothballed coconut mills; ₱3 for the operation of the Coconut Planters federation, and ₱2 for the Philippine coconut authority.

The President issued the decree restoring the levy, noting the farmers' urgent petition to him and the fact that the Batasang Pambansa was not in session.

He said that the "desperate situation of coconut farmers and their families cannot be allowed to continue for another day."

He ordered the PCA to meet oil millers and exporters to find out who would engage in exports and who would concentrate on the local marketing in order to achieve an orderly marketing of coconut products.

In their petition, the farmers said that as a result of the levy's suspension, the following would result or already have resulted:

1. The domestic prices of copra and its equivalent in coconut prices have become uneconomic with the lowest reported price of 30 centavos per kilo.

2. There will be 5,694 President Marcos-Cocofed scholars and 17,971 Juan Ponce Enrile-Cocofed high school and vocational scholars who cannot continue their studies.

3. Some ₱4.5 billion worth of insurance for the farmers will lapse.

4. The hybridization and replanting program will be discontinued and the more than ₱500 million already spent on it will go to waste—as the seed-nuts already produced will end up rotting.

5. The rationale for the coconut oil milling industry goes down the drain.

6. The copra-buying centers under the Cocofed Marketing Corp. will fail, and the farmers' credit system under the United Coconut Planters bank will be endangered.

7. Current foreign commitments and obligations entered into and incurred for the benefit of the farmers may end up unpaid for, jeopardizing the Philippines' international credit standing.

The President ordered the United Coconut Millers to buy up all surpluses in the market.

He said that the levy was suspended upon the petition of a group claiming to represent coconut interests.

The group, including some assemblymen, asked for a free market for coconuts, claiming the levy was collected against the wishes of the farmers.

The levy came into being in 1973, when coconut prices hit its peak in the world market. It was to serve as a subsidy for coconut oil.

When coconut prices went down, the levy was a hedge against further price declines. It started to become part of the computed cost of copra which millers and exporters had to pay.

In the past three weeks, the rice of coconut oil in the world market went down from $0.28 to $0.23, and with the levy suspended, millers stopped buying copra at the usual price of ₱2 a kilo.

IRAQ ASSURES OIL SUPPLY

Manila BULLETIN TODAY in English 3 Oct 81 pp 1, 11

[Text]

BAGHDAD, Oct. 2 — "The Philippines will never face another oil crisis. We will not allow it to happen now or in the future."

This was the pledge given yesterday to the First Lady, Imelda R. Marcos, by Iraqi Oil Minister Tayeh Abdul Karim who also promised to sell oil to the Philippines at friendship prices.

Iraq first helped rescue the Philippines from an oil crisis last year. This is one reason Mrs. Marcos is here on a four-day mission.

Now the second biggest oil exporter after Saudi Arabia, Iraq has proven oil reserves of over 34 billion barrels. It supplies 15 per cent of Philippine oil needs.

Karim also disclosed that on orders of President Saddam Hussein, priority will be given to Filipino workers in Iraq's construction efforts. A delegation is leaving for Manila immediately to hire more workers. There are 10,000 Filipino workers here.

On her first day here, Mrs. Marcos also:

— Signed a trade agreement with Trade Minister Hassan Ali to promote and diversify trade relations.

— Obtained a promise of Housing and Construction Minister Mohammad Fadhil Hussain Al Habboubi to hire capable Filipino construction companies for big Iraqi projects.

— Promoted the Kilusang Kabuhayan at Kaunlaran. A big trade delegation will visit the Philippines soon to survey the market for consumer goods for Iraqi industrial needs.

— Attended the opening of the 18th Annual Baghdad International Trade Fair.

— Met with members of the diplomatic corps to strengthen ties with other countries.

The first trade agreement between Iraq and the Philippines called for the setting up of a trade center and fairs. A join Philippine-Iraqi committee will be organized and will meet annually to fulfill the provisions of the agreement.

The two governments will also offer each other the-most-favored-nation treatment on customs duties, taxes and other charges.

After the signing, Minister Ali said, "I will personally follow up the implementation of this agreement and put it into immediate action for a closer and effective development of friendly and trade ties between our countries."

Through Mrs. Marcos, Ali thanked the President and the Filipino people for participating in the trade fair which he considered an important event in the Middle East.

For her part, Mrs. Marcos thanked the Iraqi government and leaders for employing Filipino workers and offered the country's sugar, textile, shoes, garments, copra, cottage industry products and industrial minerals. She invited the trade minister to visit the Philippines for a closer look on Philippine products.

She added that with the employment of Filipino workers the Iraqi government is helping the Philippine government improve the life of the Filipino people.

Mrs. Marcos also thanked the housing and construction minister for understanding some problems encountered with Filipino construction firms.

With the trade agreement, Mrs. Marcos said the Philippine government will set up a mechanism to supervise and check all contracts entered into by private companies with Iraq.

"I must confess that all the business relations with your country were initiated by the private sector," she said.

EXPORT GROWTH PROJECTED AT 13 PERCENT

Manila BULLETIN TODAY in English 6 Oct 81 p 2

[Text]

With just the last quarter to reckon with, the Central Bank now projects export receipts to register a growth rate of 13 per cent in 1981, compared to the actual growth of 26 per cent last year.

Export volume is projected to grow by 5.0 per cent compared to 18 per cent in 1980.

It pointed out that the lower increase in both the dollar receipts from exports and in volume was due to the slackened demand and depressed prices suffered by the country's export commodities on account of the recessionary conditions which prevailed in the world markets.

The value of principal primary exports was projected to grow by only 4.0 per cent this year, with declines for sugar and copper being offset by modest increase for coconut products and a substantial increase in forest products.

Manufactured exports, on the other hand, are projected to grow by 21 per cent this year, compared to the 32 per cent growth posted in 1980.

The value of imports, which registered an annual increase of 25 per cent in 1980, is estimated to rise by 14 per cent this year. In addition to the lower growth rates for capital goods and for raw materials and intermediate goods imports, the rise in oil import payments will be more moderate this year, as prices are easing and the volume will rise a little because of conservation efforts, substitution by domestically-sourced energy, and the use of part of the last inventories accumulated toward the end of last year.

BRIEFS

MARCOS DENIES RICE SHORTAGE--Manila, 4 Oct (AFP)--Philippine President Ferdinand Marcos dressed down his agriculture minister for releasing alarming reports of a possible rice shortage next year and said the country enjoys "adequate supplies and there is no need to fear." Following statements from Minister Arturo Tanco, also head of the World Food Council, that the country may have to start importing rice again next year, the president said the statement was "premature and merely precautionary," reports today said. He warned his cabinet that "no news releases should be issued on mere speculation particularly if they are of alarming nature without consulting the leadership." Mr Tanco had earlier warned that there was an 8 percent decline in rice planting last year, adding that "this worries the hell out of me." The president, however, ordered the National Food Authority to start buying more rice harvests from farmers in accordance with Mr Tanco's recommendations to discourage them from shifting to other more profitable agricultural crops. WARNING AGAINST SPREADING RUMORS--The national government continues to adhere strictly to the time-honored principle of free and responsible exercise of possession. However, it will not tolerate continued and malicious circulation of rumors that undermine national security and the people's confidence in the country's leadership. This government policy on mass media was reiterated by Minister Gregorio Cendana of the Office of Media Affairs in a speech delivered at the convention of the Mindanao Press and Radio Association in Davao City. Cendana stressed that the national security code penalizes those who publish, distribute, circulate and spread rumors, false news as well as information and gossip. Those found guilty of this specific provision face imprisonment ranging from 6 months to 8 years. [Text] [HK100640 Baguio Mountain Province Broadcasting Corporation in English 0400 GMT 10 Oct 81]

TRADE TIES WITH CANADA--Philippine Foreign Minister Carlos P. Romulo has called for a review of the existing trade agreement between the Philippines and Canada. Now worth more than D200 million, Mr. Romulo wants trade between the two countries to improve further. He made the call during his talks with Canadian External Affairs Minister Mark MacGuigan in Ottawa. [Text] [Manila FEBC Radio International in English 0230 GMT 10 Oct 81]

USSR RUBBER PURCHASES--The Soviet Union has entered the local rubber market importing 500 tons per month in the initial stages. The Trade Ministry is hopeful of increasing this amount in due course. According to the ministry, a number of East European countries have also made inquiries for the purchase of rubber from Sri Lanka. Local representatives are already in those countries for negotiations. The export of rubber to China will continue. But measures will be taken to find new markets for rubber. OIL STORAGE FACILITY--Replying to a question raised during adjournment by the member of parliament, Gampaha, (S.P. Bhandaranayake), acting Minister of Foreign Affairs (Tidon Fernando) said that the government has decided to set up an international oil storage terminal at China Bay, Trincomalee, in collaboration with the Coastal Corporation of Sri Lanka. He said that the agreement did not in any way affect Sri Lanka's nonaligned policy or the Indian Ocean peace zone proposal. He stressed that oil will not be supplied to warships. He said that one of the important clauses in the agreement with the American firm is that it shall adhere to and comply with all directives that may be given by the government for the purpose of maintaining national security, defense of the country and its foreign policy. LUCRATIVE BUSINESS OF FLAG OF CONVENIENCE SHIPPING DISCUSSED

London 8 DAYS in English 10 Oct 81 pp 42, 43

[Text]

ONE OF the world's youngest countries, Vanuatu, is about to challenge Liberia and Panama for the lucrative business of flag of convenience shipping. After only a year of independence the Pacific Ocean country, formerly the New Hebrides, has passed the legislation, laid down a scale of charges, established offices in New York and signed the first vessels on to its register to fly the green, red, black and yellow flag of Vanuatu.

Officials in Port Vila believe that there is a gap in the international shipping market, especially as Liberia is raising its charges. Liberia has retained the $1.20 per net tonne charge for registering but increased the annual tonnage tax from 20 cents to 30 cents and plans to raise it further to 35 cents and then to 40 cents.

'Such an increase might seem small,' said Peter Leversedge, head of Investors Trust in Port Vila and one of the main planners behind the Vanuatu register, 'but if you are a big shipowner with millions of tonnes of vessels, it can make a big hole in your budgeting.'

Vanuatu has its own financial imperatives for establishing an international shipping register. The country used to be ruled jointly by Britain and France and had a top-heavy civil service — in fact, three separate administrations, British, French and local.

In a new country with only 120,000 people spread over a large number of islands, with no income or corporation tax — and the possibility that collecting it would be more expensive than its yield — and with a budget propped up by foreign aid, any extra source of revenue is extremely useful.

Vanuatu's charges are on average less than Liberia's. There is a sliding scale for entry to the register, ranging from $1.50 a net tonne for vessels of up to 5,000 tonnes, $1.25 for vessels of 5,001 to 25,000 tonnes and $1 a tonne for vessels of more than 25,001 tonnes. The annual tonnage tax is a flat 25 cents a net tonne.

Like Liberia, Vanuatu has opened offices in New York, the Vanuatu Maritime Services on Broadway. Registration can be made either in New York or in Port Vila. The country has recruited Vince Hubbard to run the New York office: he used to be acting deputy maritime commissioner for Liberia.

What makes the Vanuatu shipping register interesting is that it is a joint venture between public and private enterprise. Whatever happens, the government will not lose money. The government sets the regulations and is responsible for supervision of the laws governing the international shipping register, but leaves daily matters and the running expenses to be borne by the private company, Investors Trust.

The income earned from the shipping register will be split between Investors Trust and the government. The stakes have not been disclosed but are believed to be about 70/30 at the start with the greater share going to the government, moving towards 85/15.

Liberia is a long way ahead as yet, with more than 75m gross registered tonnes in its merchant fleet. So far, Vanuatu has a mere 1,434 tonnes — the 500-tonnes Brahman Express, a cattle carrier sailing between Australia and Malaysia, and the Italian Express, 934 tonnes. The size of Liberia's fleet last year fell by 3m tonnes, and shipowners are worried about the political climate. In Port Vila, officials hope that Liberia's loss will be Vanuatu's gain.

ANTI-VIETNAMESE COALITION SAID TO BE MAKING LITTLE PROGRESS

Bangkok BANGKOK POST in English 14 Oct 81 p 4

[Article by Alan Dawson]

[Text] THE battle to put together an anti-Vietnam coalition government is going poorly, despite intense and sometimes almost frantic efforts to turn the too-general Singapore statement into a reality.

There is a growing disillusionment within ASEAN with the Khmer Rouge, which seems to have somehow parlayed its importance on the resistance battlefield into a political superiority complex. At the same time, Khieu Samphan's men and women of Democratic Kampuchea are turning arrogant towards ASEAN views.

The ad hoc committee meetings in Bangkok which are trying to put together a coalition that would be both plausible to the world and workable on important policy points have not yet fallen into fruitless haranguing. But they appear headed that way.

The negotiators for Son Sann's Khmer People's National Liberation Front (KPNLF), who already consider that they have given in on a huge number of issues in order to try to make coalition work, are on the edge of being disenchanted. They feel they were forced to give in on principle because of outside pressure, and now do not wish to give in any more.

Ieng Sary, the Khmer Rouge foreign minister who was in New York to speak at the General Assembly debate, has directly criticised ASEAN. He has directly criticised the KPNLF, an unsurprising breach of the Singapore agreement to refrain from harsh words which was in any case broken within 24 hours by Prince Norodom Sihanouk.

Ieng Sary claims that the KPNLF has gone back on its word on an important principle in the coalition attempt. According to him, the KPNLF had agreed to share power three ways in each and every one of the ministries in a coalition, including the premiership.

But his argument for the moment is unimpressive and is dismissed even by ASEAN officials, some of whom are now openly angry with the Khmer Rouge. They are correct, in fact, in stating that Khmer Rouge leaders including Ieng Sary are firmly on the record as stating that Son Sann was to be the unique coalition prime minister, and that power in the government was to be shared, not power in each ministry.

In fact, according to some sources, the idea of tripartite ministries was never even raised by the Khmer Rouge until the ad hoc committee meetings began a month ago. The most angry of the sources stated bluntly that the Khmer Rouge are already trying themselves to seize full power in the coalition after Son Sann and Sihanouk had agreed ever-so-reluctantly to share power with the discredited communists.

Ieng Sary has also said publicly in New York that ASEAN has put too much pressure upon resistance groups to form the coalition, and to form it quickly. But the KPNLF and Thai officials who are the supposed villains say that is ridiculous. In fact, it was pressure upon the KPNLF which made any coalition discussion possible. And "pressure," if it can be termed that, upon the Khmer Rouge now is aimed at forcing them to honour their promises about truly sharing power with the other two groups.

Why the Khmer Rouge would now be complaining is hard to fathom. It appears, however, that it is a combination of factors which has led them to believe that they can press what they see as a political advantage. It has not yet occurred to them, according to some analysts, that the political advantage they have comes only by accident.

First, the KPNLF and Sihanouk have some respect from Western, ASEAN and non-aligned nations who form the rough coalition of world opinion which opposes Vietnamese action in Kampuchea. Sympathy and respect for the Khmer Rouge is in extremely short supply, is heavily rationed and comes about almost only because of the tough, dedicated and highly-motivated army which continues to fight the highly-rated Vietnamese forces.

But Chinese support for the Khmer Rouge has, if anything, increased in recent months. "Democratic Kampuchea" has been reluctantly accepted by all resistance groups as the official name of the country, despite misgivings over it. Alexander Haig has shaken hands with Ieng Sary.

The Khmer Rouge has apparently put two and two together to make five, and fails to realise its mistake: that support for a coalition to take over the Democratic Kampuchea name (and seat at the UN) is not meant to show support for what passes today for Democratic Kampuchea.

FOOTNOTE: UN correspondent Edgar Koh notes a distinct chilliness in the air between Khmer Rouge and ASEAN diplomats.

He says that there is open criticism from the ASEAN officials of Ieng Sary and his aides, most especially because Ieng Sary failed to heed ASEAN advice on a diplomatically crucial point.

The coalition of nations opposed to Vietnam's Kampuchea policy managed with little trouble to keep the Kampuchean seat in the UN again last month.

As they have the past two years, ASEAN diplomats then asked Ieng Sary not to rub salt in the Soviet-Vietnam wounds by speaking.

Last month, for the first time, Ieng Sary ignored them and rose to his feet to attack Vietnam and to thank his "friends" for voting for the DK seat. It was gratitude that most of the nations did not want, for they abhor the Khmer Rouge and support them in the diplomatic forum only for technical reasons.

KPNLF PROPAGANDA CHIEF STATES VIEWS ON PERSONALITIES

Bangkok BANGKOK POST in English 9 Oct 81 p 6

[Article by Abby Tan]

[Text] HER black-rimmed school ma'am glasses hide her pretty, small, square face. It only helps to project a formidable image.

Inevitably some journalists call her the Dragon Lady.

Mrs Suon Kaset, propaganda chief of the Khmer People's National Liberation Front (KPNLF), one of the guerilla resistance groups fighting the Vietnamese occupation of Kampuchea, admits to spitting fire sometimes.

"I yell when people make me mad, that's all," says Mrs Kaset, 39, a petite bundle of forceful energy who has charmed many and turned off a few with her direct manner.

Mrs Kaset says she fled Phnom Penh in April 1975 as the American-backed government of Gen Lon Nol was crumbling and one week before the Khmer Rouge took over.

She took her three children — the oldest now an 18-year-old girl — with her on one of the last planes out to Paris. But her husband, a director in the Agriculture Ministry, had faith that Prince Sihanouk would come back and save the country.

The Khmer Rouge killed him and all of Kampuchea's remaining elite a year later. As the Khmer Rouge bloodbath continued, culminating in the death of some three million Kampucheans, the young widow and 15 other Kampuchean exiles in Paris formed the nucleus of what later became the KPNLF to preserve their nation and culture, she says.

Son Sann, who retired in Paris after resigning in disagreement from Sihanouk's cabinet in 1968, reluctantly accepted the leadership.

Because of her forceful manner and the fact that she was Son Sann's interpreter in English, French and Khmer and director of relief services among Kampuchean refugees, there are often suggestions that she influences the KPNLF leadership.

"Influence? Ha!" she hisses in accent-less English. "That is mere speculation. The president (Son Sann) is very wise. He consults the seven-man executive committee who are all senior people above 45 years old."

She stresses she has no political ideology.

"Freedom and happiness is my ideology," she says. "I am not a political person. My ambition was to be a good teacher, good wife and mother. Life has decided otherwise."

She has not seen her children (in the care of an aunt in Paris where she herself grew up) for two years. She commutes between Bangkok and the villages on the Kampuchean border under KPNLF control with one single objective in mind — the liberation of Kampuchea from the Vietnamese invaders.

Mrs Kaset bubbles like an excited schoolgirl when talking about her work for the KPNLF, but spirits fall suddenly at the mention of the Khmer Rouge. Her voice trails off in a whisper barely audible.

But above all she blames deposed Prince Sihanouk for the quagmire that Kampuchea is in today. She shrugs at the mention of the Prince.

She is known to be cool to the Prince's wife, Princess Monique, whose family's alleged wheeler-dealing has been mentioned by several authors as a contributory factor leading to the 1970 coup d'etat. It ended Sihanouk's rule as well as the era of peace.

She told her friends she was angry Prince Sihanouk did not return to Kampuchea to lead the resistance against Lon Nol but chose exile in Peking and subsequent alliance with the Khmer Rouge.

Her dream if and when Kampuchea is liberated, she says, is to indulge in her only fancy — "studying archaeology at Angkor Wat before it crumbles to pieces."— Gemini

FEMALES ASSUMING LARGE ROLE IN PRK ECONOMY, AGRICULTURE

Bangkok BANGKOK POST in English 8 Sep 81 p 8

[Article by Catherine Campbell: "Wanted: A Shipload of Marriageable Men for Kampuchea"]

[Text]

"I wish you would bring in a shipload of men instead of food," a Kampuchean woman recently told a foreign relief worker in Phnom Penh.

Shortages abound in Kampuchea following its years of social and political turmoil but the one most keenly felt by women is the lack of marriageable men, according to a report compiled by a Kampuchean woman and released last week by the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF).

Chantou Boua, a teacher who spent a year interviewing women throughout Kampuchea, quoted a leading member of the Government's National Women's Association as saying that men should be allowed to have two or three wives.

"This illustrates the desperate condition that Kampuchean women are in," Chantou Boua wrote.

Her report quoted the women's association president as saying that women now make up 75 per cent of Kampuchea's adult population.

Many of them are widows. Statistics from seven provinces showed that about 10 per cent of their husbands had died from starvation, illness or execution under the communist Khmer Rouge Government which held power from 1975 until it was toppled by Vietnamese-led forces in January 1979.

STARVATION

"It appears that women survived the starvation in the Pol Pot (Khmer Rouge) period better than men, and that men were looked upon by the Khmer Rouge cadres as a more dangerous element to the survival of the regime," the report said.

Women's emergence as a clear majority in the economically struggling society is incompatible with their historical, secondary role.

Daughters were traditionally a "cause for worry" in Kampuchea, the report said. "A girl has been compared to a piece of cotton wool, and a boy to a diamond. This meant that a diamond, when dropped into the mud could be picked up and washed as clean as before, while cotton wool, once dropped into the mud could never be returned to its purity."

Despite the urgent need for women to take part in all kinds of production, lack of education and training were keeping them out of the best jobs, the report said.

The Hanoi-backed government employs women as street sweepers, factory workers, teachers, nurses and administrators, it said.

"However among 35 members of the ruling Central Committee of the United Front for National Salvation there are only six women, and in the Government there is only one woman of ministerial rank, the vice minister of Health," the report said.

"The National Women's Association does not seem to exert much influence on vital decisions concerning women's economic and social well-being."

Thus most women, often supporting the large families which are the norm in Kampuchea, work from dawn to dark in rice production.

Because of the severe shortage of manpower, they have also taken over jobs such as ploughing and harrowing, formerly reserved for men.

Other women sell produce or cooked food in makeshift market stalls. Only the few who managed to save gold or currency can do more than make ends meet, the report said.

Women can rarely afford to take time off or find child care facilities to enable them to join government training courses, and thus have little hope of acquiring skills.

Their daughters may fare little better. In one provincial high school, the report noted, only 44 of the 220 students were girls. — Reuter

COLUMN VOICES CONCERN OVER INFLUENCE OF THAI MEDIA, WESTERN FASHIONS

Many Students Watch Thai TV

Vientiane VIENTIANE MAI in Lao 27 Jun 81 p 2

['Conversations With the Editor' column: "Can We Correct the Matter of Listening to Capitalist Songs and TV?"]

[Excerpts] [Statement] 1. When one turns on the television, one sees base political and social propaganda from the West. Does the government have a plan to get rid of it?

Unfortunately, in our school 20 to 30 percent of the students miss each day because they are watching television. After watching it some of them spread the propaganda in class. They disregard their studies entirely. I see that it has a very destructive effect on the youth.

2. Are all the people who have long hair members of the CIA? What kind of people are these and is this type of thing appropriate? Are they going to stop this? I've heard some government employees say all long-hairs are CIA. I know well that the CIA is the most dangerous enemy of the revolution, the nation, and the people. I still see these long hairs in town and in the countryside. Some of them have fairly long hair, but some have such long hair that you would think they were girls if you saw them from behind. If you look at them closely, they look disgusting.

The merchants who sell records and cassette tapes in the morning market generally sell Thai, American, or other Western music. They play the music, and advertise to the fullest. Does the government have a way of limiting this? Our country has plenty of revolutionary music. I hope you can explain this for me. Bless you and Vientiane Mai.

[Response to] items one and three: The guidance order concerning supervising and improving literature and society of the Party committee of the City-Province of Vientiane, No 380/Kh.k.Ph issued on 20 March 1981 states in paragraph two that: Private merchants, individuals, or agencies not connected with this work are prohibited from buying tape cassettes from foreign countries or recording music and selling it without permission of the sector responsible. Only the government sectors have the right to import tape cassettes or record music and to sell them. Such groups are the Ministry of Propaganda, Information, Culture and Tourism, the National Radio Broadcasting Authority, the Vientiane Province

Department of Propaganda, Information, Training and Culture, Vientiane Capital Radio Broadcasting or others officially authorized by the Ministry of Propaganda or Vientiane Propaganda Department. Others are prohibited.

Listening to the radio or watching television from foreign countries such as Thailand, reactionary China, and other imperialists is also prohibited except for responsible agencies.

For offenders of this law there are the following provisions: "The Propaganda Department of Vientiane City and Province and the district propaganda departments in cooperation with those concerned are to investigate and organize effectively using education, training, and control." These are the orders. We do not know what results they will achieve or whether they will be ignored. That's the way it is now.

Item two: The way of life of the new Lao people is that of purity, neat dress, and simplicity. The youths you mention are also included in this way of life. This is mentioned in the rules of the Youth Organization. We won't answer this; you will have to find out for yourselves. As to whether the long-hairs are CIA, I cannot answer that because the CIA could be disguised in many ways. As to whether they are lawbreakers who do not respect the rules of the new Lao people, the new regime, and our beautiful customs--we concluded that they are the rotten remnants of the old regime which we must resist resolutely and abolish completely.

Foreign Media 'Psychological Warfare'

Vientiane VIENTIANE MAI in Lao 30 Jun 81 pp 2,4

['Conversations With the Editor' column: "Selling Obscene Books and Pictures"]

[Excerpts] [Statement] Recently the Party Central Training Commission issued information on resisting psychological warfare. It was disseminated for study by cadres, state workers, and people throughout the country to halt and resist the psychological warfare of the imperialists and Beijing reactionaries which is aimed at hindering our socialist revolution.

1. I have noticed magazines of Thai actors and actresses and other foreign stars (including obscene pictures) in private stores, apartments, and markets. They even display these in the stores. Some people sell them in markets and public places (especially the Morning Market). I think this is inappropriate and harmful for our new regime for it attacks our culture and way of life in a dirty, reactionary way which drags down the cadres, state workers and youth in our new regime. Anyway you look at it, this is propaganda which only serves the "psychological warfare" objectives and schemes of the imperialists and the Beijing reactionaries. If the responsible agencies do not have a way to stop this, how great will the damage be? What does the editor think?

2. It is now a popular thing to watch (Thai) television. Does this have a bad effect on the thinking and actions of the cadres and state workers (especially the young people) in the ranks of the revolution? It seems to me that not a few young people pretend to be movie stars and behave badly. This will have a bad effect on the future of our young people. Does the government have a way of dealing with this?

[Response] Item 1. There is an proverb which goes: "Even though you know better you do what you want"... As far as this problem is concerned we have said before that these people are just doing what they want even though they know that the government has prohibited it. If these people are not selfish what are they? Are they enemy agents spreading psychological propaganda as you said? We do not want to use the word "enemy" because we are all here in Laos together. Although we [may] not be Lao, we should love our country and keep it safe. In any country one must obey the laws without fail.

In the document, one point says: "We must resolutely and promptly thwart the political, cultural and social tricks which the enemy uses to hinder the revolution and slander our socialist system. We must attack step-by-step until we finally crush the cultural and social remnants of the backward old regime that still exist in our new society."

This is the order, and the local propaganda and culture departments and the people are to carry this out. They are to report to Bounlian Veunvilavong and those in the Vientiane Propaganda and Culture Department. How many days have passed since order No 380 was passed? Has anyone acted as recommended? Let's go to the Evening Market--it has a place recording cassette music. And in the Morning Market they play music so loudly it about makes you deaf. It is not hard to find if you want to. There are many picture magazines and naked pin-ups at noodle shops and private stores everywhere. Call us any time you want to go.

Item 2. This has already been answered. Look in issue No 3040 of Saturday 27 June 1981.

COOPERATIVES STILL BEING FORMED IN OUDOMSAI, SUCCESSES CITED

Vientiane SIANG PASASON in Lao 1 Jul 81 p 2

[Excerpts] We have already talked about the successful drive for agricultural cooperatives in Oudomsai Province. Not only have all the cooperatives kept going but they have been improving each year.

They progressed from two agricultural cooperatives in 1978 to 72 in the harvest season of 1979. Beng District was outstanding with 22 units. Houn District had 14 units and La District had 12 units. The creation of 70 cooperatives in Oudomsai Province in 1979 was not an accident and it was not as easy as peeling a banana. Ever since Resolution 4 of the party Central Committee Oudomsai Province officials encouraged the multi-ethnic people to set up labor exchange solidarity groups each season. These groups were a firm basis on which to establish agricultural cooperatives.

By 1980 Oudomsai Province had 90 agricultural cooperatives in 90 villages which is 12.86 percent of the farming villages in the province and 87.3 percent of the villages practicing wetfield or dry and wetfield farming. This amounts to more than 8,000 hectares out of 9,712 in the province.

In the past 2 years, not only the agricultural cooperative villages not been short of rice or fish, but there has been a great deal of food left over. The agricultural tax figures for the province have increased for the past 2 years. In 1980 agricultural taxes exceeded government estimates by more than 3,000 tons. In this period Oudomsai Province was self-sufficient in rice and had 1,000 tons to help other provinces with.

We needed to investigate these initial successes and discover the cause. In the meeting at the end of last year summarizing the work of the agricultural cooperatives throughout the province, Mr Bounsong Vongloum, of the Province Administrative Committee and chief of the Department of Cooperatives for Oudomsai Province correctly stated that "the reason for the progress of the agricultural cooperatives is primarily the leadership of the party. Government officials at all levels had to become aware of the special problems of their areas and had to handle them skillfully; province and district officials mixed with the people constantly and the people were aroused to support the party and government." It is an old truth that hard work leads to success.

COOPERATIVIZATION CONTINUES, ABSENTEE OWNERS' LAND USED IN VIENTIANE DISTRICT

Vientiane VIENTIANE MAI in Lao 26 Jun 81 p 2

[Excerpt] Mr Khamsouk Phamalat of the administrative committee is in charge of the agricultural cooperatives in Saithani District, Vientiane Province. He was interviewed by our reporter about farming and establishing agricultural cooperatives in the 12 cantons surrounding Saithani District. Mr Khamsouk Phamalath said that since it has begun to rain all the farmers look happy while diligently working the land. The farmers expect to increase the amount and quality of their production so that it will better last year's and thereby improve the living standard of the people.

During the production season of 1981 the people of Saithani District primarily depend on the equipment they have but the ways they work are modern and scientific. The district authorities sent agricultural technicians to explain and supervise the new system of farming in each canton. At the same time the government sent 13 mobilization cadres to encourage the farmers' production. They helped the farmers with their recommendations on farming to make more decisions about production.

Because of the government's concern and the farmers' hard work there was little unused land left in 1981. The government then loaned land unused by the owners to those farmers without land. So as to form the basis for a gradual move to socialist production. Since 1979 the government has counsellors in each canton to encourage the farmers' production. This helps the farmers know the correct policies of the party Central Committee and change their individual ways and out of date farming methods. The government would like them to work together by establishing agricultural cooperatives.

There were some farmers who understood and agreed with the government resolution issued in 1979. They set up six agricultural cooperatives in Saithani District that year. The farmers voted for administrative committees for planning, rice planting techniques, for accounting, auditing the tools, and other committees.

In 1981 the Party Committee and District Administrative Committee appointed 17 officials to be in charge of improving production with the District Party Secretary as chief. In each canton there were four officials for this task and the canton administrative chairman is in charge of the other officials and production. In 1981 the number of agricultural cooperatives in Saithani District increased to 14.

TRANSFER POLICY ON AUTOS NOTED

Main Text

Vientiane KHAOSAN PATHET LAO in Lao 30 Jun 81 p A1

[Text] On 30 January the Department of Materials and Machinery of the Ministry of Communications, Public Works and Transportation held a meeting to reach an agreement on legal and illegal vehicles. It was presided over by Mr Khampho Keomalavong. The meeting was also attended by representatives of the Department of Customs for the Diplomatic Corps, the Department of Revenue, the Department of Revenue for Vientiane Province, the Department of Public Works for Vientiane, the Border Patrol and the Department for Control of Motor Vehicles and Machinery.

The meeting considered the problems, exchanged ideas and unanimously agreed on the following agreements:

1. As concerns the vehicle traffic in the districts, province and capital, it was agreed that the Department for Control of Motor Vehicles of Vientiane Province would handle things together with the provincial Department of Public Works in support of the traffic police. They are to control and inspect strictly and follow the present regulations.

2. As for cars which enter the country illegally, the meeting discussed the violators and those who have been victimized or disadvantaged. They agreed on three different categories:

A. Cars seized by officials while entering the country illegally would be handled according to existing Finance Ministry rules.

B. Used cars which have been bought and sold many times and cannot be traced to find out where they entered the country.

C. Cars which have registration papers and plates but whose papers do not match the car and which have been bought and sold many times.

In cases B and C the meeting sought to determine courses of action people whose cars were siezed and what would be fair for the people. It was decided that the owner should pay the full tax.

In order to prevent and eliminate or at least decrease the smuggling of cars and illegal acts; affirm the legality of those who buy, sell and trade cars; and protect them from ill-intentioned people, regularizing things for those whose cars are not legal, per Paragraph 1 the meeting recommended that the following be made known throughout the country.

--Before cars are bought, sold or traded the transaction must have the permission of the Department for Control of Motor Vehicles of each province's public works authorities. Otherwise the car will be considered in category (A).

--Even though the car may be completely legal if the transaction is completed without permission it will be illegal and at a minimum both parties will be fined. Then the officials will consider transfering the registration.

3. Cars for which export permission has been requested are to be handled as follows:

A. Cars with diplomatic plates and U.N. plates must fill out forms for:

1. the Foreign Ministry

2. the Revenue Department

3. the Department of Alien Control (Ministry of Interior)

B. Cars with Ministry and Vientiane plates or cars without diplomatic or U.N. plates:

1. must be in compliance with item (A)

2. must report to the Department of Motor Vehicles (Ministry of Public Works, Communications and Transportation) before the car can be exported.

4. A car with complete tax papers in another province is considered legal and can be driven in any province.

5. Cars of Vietnamese refugees can be registered since it is the policy of the party and state in all cases.

6. The problem of the person buying a car from a government agency:

--an individual buying a new or old car from a government agency, whether a tax has been paid or not, must pay again according to the condition of the car and the time it has been in Laos. Then it can be registered.

Addendum to Policy

Vientiane KHAOSAN PATHET LAO in Lao 30 Jun 81 p A1

[Text] Per the agreement of the 30 January 1981 meeting at the Department of Motor Vehicles and Machinery and the dissemination by the Office of the Prime Minister on 26 February 1981, Article 4 of the policy concerning the movement of vehicles from other provinces is abolished. The following shall be adhered to:

1. Organizations and individuals are prohibited from buying vehicles in other provinces and bringing them to Vientiane selling vehicles from Vientiane to other provinces.

2. In the case of an official move, one must have a letter of permission from the Office of the Prime Minister in order to be able to change the registration plate.

LACK OF PRESCRIPTION MEDICINES, SMUGGLING PROTESTED

Vientiane VIENTIANE MAI in Lao 2 Jul 81 pp 2, 4

['Conversations with the Editor' column: "Medicine Is Ordered But There Is no Medicine to Give"]

[Text] [Question] 1. When one goes for a checkup at the hospital, the doctor asks what the symptoms are and writes a prescription. The medicine prescribed is good for the symptoms but when the prescription is taken to the pharmacy you get nothing. The salesperson says they are out. It has been this way for some time at, for example, Hospital 103 or Mahosot Hospital. How does this happen?

2. You have answered letters concerning selling medicine and contraband gasoline in the market already but I wonder why the government agencies are short of medicine and gasoline when these are for sale on the black market?

[Answer] 1. At this time we are short in all areas and have a real problem meeting demand. You must understand that for some time, since the time of the feudalists, our economy was dependent on others and we have been independent for only 5 years. And our economy especially is still not self-sufficient. We depend on a number of foreign countries for almost 99 percent of our medicine. When we depend on others how can we count on having enough? As for your question, the doctors making the examinations and prescribing the medicine do not know whether there is enough medicine at "the pharmacy" or not. Or maybe the doctor knows there is medicine available but the pharmacist does not want to sell it. If this is the case he is breaking the rules. You are not the only one with this problem. We have also had it. We do not know whether there was cooperation between the doctor and the pharmacist or not. At present we are short of commodities but if they were distributed properly, it would greatly alleviate the shortages. But to return to your case, generally the people who really need things do not get them. However, if you check the stores they are full. They have some goods which private individuals are not allowed to purchase from abroad. For example, goods for cadres which we do not have and the state stores do not have, private individuals have. I have said enough for you to understand.

2. This is because of corrupt officials who cannot be trusted. They are the parasites of socialism, eating off the state.

PRIVATE TRADERS ORDERED TO PAY TAX, EVASION WIDESPREAD

Vientiane VIENTIANE MAI in Lao 30 Jun 81 p 1

[Text] The Council of Ministers has ordered that all merchants pay a business tax. On 27 June 1981 Colonel Thongmani Thiphommachan, member of the party committee and police commander of the city and province of Vientiane, reported to VIENTIANE MAI that there are still some private merchants doing business in Vientiane who have not paid income taxes (paid for licenses) to the Department of Taxes. There are some private merchants who do not understand the tax policy and some who are avoiding paying the business tax. So the government of the city and province of Vientiane and the Department of Taxes requests all merchants whom this concerns to be good citizens and act correctly. This will be their investment in developing the nation.

In closing Thongmani said that tax evasion not only has a bad effect on the merchants themselves and the general population but also causes problems for the nation's money system and shortages. There have been many merchants who have acted according to the law, and we would like to thank those who did cooperate so well. Those who have not obeyed this resolution and law, should pay the Department of Taxes as quickly as possible.

VIENTIANE MOUNTAIN PEOPLE RESETTLED--During this year's production season 44 mountain families from Ban Pak Phou Village Phonsi Canton, Phonhong District, Vientiane Province voluntarily left their Swidden cultivation in the highlands and gave up their old-fashioned and ineffective individual, dispersed method of farming. They came as a group to clear new land in Phonhong District. Since the beginning of the year they have cleared 12 hectares and sowed 480 kilograms of seed rice. Now they are hard at work plowing and harrowing to be ready for their first season. [Text] [Vientiane VIENTIANE MAI in Lao 1 Jul 81 p 1] 8149

LOW RATE BANK LOANS--On the morning of 25 June 1981 the Board of Directors of the Vientiane City-Province Bank under Mr Sivilai Vilaihong and a group of government officials went to the agricultural cooperative of Khoum Hin Village, Nakhwai Canton, Saithani District, Vientiane Province. They wanted to explain to the members of the cooperative and the people of this canton about loans. They explained both the long term and short term loans available for use in production activities of the cooperative. Mr Sivilai explained the terms of the two different loans. The short term loan has a 1 year limit and a 4.8 percent interest rate. Long term loans have a 3-year limit and a 3 percent interest rate. He explained what the loans could be used for, such as raising capital and purchases of equipment for improving the efficiency of the cooperative. This has achieved totally satisfactory results. In addition the committee toured the cooperative and talked about the capabilities of the cooperative. They wanted the members and the farmers of the area to understand the activities of the bank and the conditions of loans for production activities. NEW BANK BRANCH--On 25 June 1981 the Board of Directors of the Bank of Vientiane came to the opening ceremony of the new National Bank branch in Nasaithong District of Vientiane Province. This was being opened in accordance with the resolution of the National Bank aimed at broadening the bank network down to the base 1 level which will increase production and expand construction. This branch bank will collect investment money from the people's savings which will increase production and improve the standard of living. Now there are branches of the bank in 12 districts of Vientiane City-Province, and new branches will be opened in other districts in 1981. ISLAMICIZING OF JUDICIAL SYSTEM SUPPORTED

[Editorial: "Islamising Pakistan's Judicial System"]

[Text]

JUSTICE or "Adl" is central to an Islamic society, Islam lays the greatest emphasis on the rule of law, in substance as well as in form, not just a semblance of it but justice in the absolute sense. The concept of might is right is alien to an Islamic society. In his inaugural speech, the Second Caliph Hazrat Umar Farooque proclaimed before the people that those strong among them were weak in his eyes until he snatched from them that which they had usurped from the weak and the weak were strong in his eyes until he had restored to them the right of which they had been deprived by the strong in the society. Throughout his Caliphate he upheld this principle. The Islamic polity was governed on the same principles throughout the period of the four Pious Caliphs. And the blessings it brought to the people, forced a Western scholar to proclaim in wonder: "They seemed to be men belonging not to this earth but to the world where people abide in eternity that is Paradise." It was all the blessing of justice in the society.

As an Islamic State, Pakistan aims at reviving the pristine society of Islam. All sincere, well-meaning and God-fearing men in the country are anxious to bridge the gap between the present state of society and the ultimate ideal, as early as possible. The ideal was never lost sight of during the last 35 years but the process of Islamisation has gathered momentum only after the present regime took over, though the bottlenecks accumulating for over a century make the process slow.

The Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Pakistan, Mr Justice Mohammad Haleem, has made apt reference to the difficulties in this connection. In his presidential speech at the inaugural ceremony of the Supreme Court Judicial Year 1981-82, he reminded the audience that "an independent and active judiciary is vital for the sovereignty of the rule of law and dispensation of justice". Further, he observed that "it was an uphill task to eliminate the alien and un-Islamic elements which had crept into the judicial system over the centuries... It was a challenging task both for the judiciary as well as the jurists to implement the Shariat-i-Islamia. At the same time, it was the test of sincerity and the dedication to the Millat-i-Islamia to pursue the ideals for which Pakistan had been established." Speaking on the same occasion, the Attorney-General of Pakistan, Mr Sharifuddin Pirzada, spoke at length on the evils of delay in dispensing justice. It is one of the axioms of law that "justice delayed is justice denied".

The serious attention given by the Government to remove the defects in the legal and judicial systems in Pakistan is one of the most important undertakings of the present regime. For, creating conditions for speedy and flawless justice is the crying need in our society in which the poor and the weak are cheated of their rights at every step by the powerful and the unscrupulous people. Moreover, the present legal system was devised by the Britishers according to the Anglo-Saxon concepts of law which has nothing in common with the Islamic judicial system which does not stand on ceremonies but wants real and unadulterated justice. Justice in Islam is intended to be speedy, inexpensive and unencumbered with tutored and professional witnesses. Speaking to the Press after the Cabinet meeting at Quetta last month, the Information Secretary said: "It was the Government's endeavour to provide to the people cheap justice and eliminate corruption at the investigation stages. The Government also wanted that the judicial system should be such where there is no piling up of cases in courts."

While inaugurating the first ever class for Qazis in Pakistan last month at Lahore, the Punjab Governor rightly observed that "Anglo-Saxon laws had created many evils in society". The process of justice in our society suffers from two main defects corruption at the investigation stage—as the Secretary Information referred to in his talks at Quetta—and at the stage of trial at the hands of lawyers who defend their client without reference to the fact whether he is guilty or innocent. A good lawyer succeeds in getting acquittal for a criminal by winning on law points. But this certainly is not the end of justice. The Information Minister made a reference to the role of lawyers in an Islamic judicial system in his speech at Mansehra Bar Council last month. He said: "Scholars of law, including advocates, shall have to perform onerous job under the new judicial system and they would be expected to watch the interest of real justice more than the interest of those whom they represent."

The creation of a legal and judicial machinery ensuring speedy and inexpensive justice to all will have the most far-reaching effect in moulding the society on the Islamic pattern. It would become easier for victims of injustice and tyranny to get their rights restored without delay or unbearable expenditure. But to achieve the desired aim it would also be necessary to overhaul the working of the police department which is entrusted with the initial job of investigation and entering the cases under the relevant sections of law. Reports published in the Press at various times show that police use their discretion, not always conscientiously, to enter a case under a particular section of the penal code. There are instances where the same type of offences have been registered by the police at times under Shariat law and also under the ordinary law. Some method must be devised to ensure that at this stage nothing is done to defeat the ends of justice. Moreover, cases of tampering with evidence and records or producing professional and tutored witnesses are not uncommon. It all indicates that there is also a need to carry out a drastic restructuring of the whole police department so that cases that come before the court are not tampered at the lower stage.

The draft document considered by the Cabinet at Quetta would be circulated for eliciting public opinion, after which the Cabinet will again take it up. We hope members of the public will take keen interest in it and cooperate positively by making useful suggestions.

ARTICLE CRITICIZES BUREAUCRATIC WAYS

Islamabad THE MUSLIM in English 11 Oct 81 p 4

["The Saturday Column (delayed)" column by Masood Hasan: "Katchi Abadis, Pucca Fun"]

[Text]

A MOST unusual seminar has been witnessed in Lahore last week. The Punjab Government, UNICEF, P&D, Punjab and innumerable bureaucrats got together to organise a four-day workshop on the future of that vile spot that exists in this sunny metropolis of the Punjab – the 104 Katchi Abadis.

The organisers of this junket, comprising no doubt, the best brains in community development, rightly felt that to offset the grim reality of the Katchi Abadis, where gutters flow through the lives of the inhabitants, where sanitation is inexplicably absent, where medicare is a rarely witnessed phenomenon and where a large, miserable body of fellow human beings survive from day to day, a workshop to explore new avenues could only be held in Lahore's poshest five-star hotel. To those who suggested that NIPA, or the Staff College, or the University Auditorium were more appropriate venues, the organisers came down with contempt written all over their faces. Some even dared to suggest that the workshop be held in a Katchi Abadi so that participants of this momentous occasion would be able to experience first-hand the magnitude of the problems that confront the residents of these slums. These suggestions were turned down summarily. The organisers rightly felt that the best brains in the country could only function in the best location in the country and accordingly, arrangements were made.

The four-day workshop opened amidst scenes of great rejoicing as a right honourable minister inaugurated the proceedings in air-conditioned and plush carpeted surroundings. The organisers had sent out handsome invitations to about 100 notables (as the newspapers like to call this elusive community) but only 80 turned up for tea, snacks and speeches. It wasn't a bad turnout, really – 80 per cent is a good figure whichever way you look at it. The tea and assorted goodies were rapidly consumed. No wonder since tea was only Rs. 35 per head and what's Rs. 35 for a head that's so fervently committed to providing welfare and relief for the Katchi Abadis?

Four large rooms had been exclusively booked by the organisers. Naturally, you can't invite the cream of Pakistani bureaucrats without making certain that they are comfortably housed and therefore in just the right frame of mind to discuss such subjects as slush, filth, pestilence, disease and slums. At the cheap rate of Rs. 2,000 per room per day it only added up to Rs. 8,000 per day or Rs. 32,000 for the duration of the workshop. Small price to pay when the stakes are so high. Now it is common knowledge that where you have bureaucrats you also need large volumes of paper-work, stencils, photocopies and file covers. A separate room was accordingly hired by the wise organisers, for what they call a secretarial pool. Thank goodness it wasn't located in the swimming pool of the hotel. It might however have been cheaper than the 400-odd rupees the room was costing daily but as someone rightly pointed out, there were no typewriters which could effectively function under water.

The organisers, well aware that a seminar is not a seminar without appropriate tea breaks, had cleverly worked in two breaks daily at 10 a.m. and 4 p.m. At the rate of Rs. 10 per head for the 50 delegates, the tea cost was a trifling amount of Rs. 1,000 daily. Lunch was where the organisers really went to town. Realising that a well-greased bureaucrat is the one who has dipped generously into greasy foods, the organisers had accordingly laid it on at the hotel's restaurant where half a dozen varieties of salads, dozens of meat dishes and exotic delicacies awaited the weary delegates. Tired at the speeches, they all had to sit through all morning, the delegates made short work of the buffet lunch, walking away with plates in two hands (an airline would have claimed excess baggage). With no restrictions on second or third helpings, the delegates had a field day and who can blame them. How many of us can enjoy a sumptuous lunch at just Rs. 76 per head four days running? That the total cost of the four luncheons was only Rs. 15,000 just shows you how judiciously the organisers had worked things out.

Naturally, the afternoon sessions were a little dull as slumber overtook many delegates as they deliberated over the plight of the Katchi Abadi have-nots. Mercifully there were no dinners. These were cancelled as experts were of the view that if these dinners were on the same scale as the lunches, most of the delegates could well pass away due to over eating, an event that could push our community development plans twenty years back. However, all and sundry agreed that a concluding dinner was in order and about a hundred merry makers were at hand on Monday night to partake of pullao, gosht, fried chicken, beef with chillies, raita, salad, nan, Caramel custard, egg pudding, fruit, tea, coffee and the great digestive of all seminars, green tea. This last binge only cost Rs. 97 per head, or per stomach if you want to be literal.

If you are getting the idea that all the delegates were moving from one feast to another, you are wrong. Secretarial activity was incredibly high with photostats and copies costing an average of Rs. 1,000 daily. For the two dozen representatives of the Katchi Abadis there was TA/DA at a flat rate of Rs. 100 per day while the out station participants walked away with a modest TA/DA of Rs. 350 per head per day.

The whole shin-din had been made possible because UNICEF had made available a grant of about Rs. 7 million to be spent on 11 chosen Katchi Abadis in a three-year period. Once the grant was there, the concerned authorities got itchy fingers and an uncontrollable urge to blow at least some of it on eats and entertainment. The idea of holding a workshop was but a natural conclusion and when you consider that the organisers managed to spend 10 per cent of their three-year budget in just four days or Rs. 100,000 of which almost 33 per cent went into food (or down the drain eventually), you can understand why some of us get hysterical every now and then.

WEST'S CONTROL OF MASS MEDIA CRITICIZED

Karachi MORNING NEWS in English 24 Oct 81 p 4

[Text] SPEAKING in the Special Political Committee of the United Nations on Wednesday, Pakistan's Ambassador in the world body, Mr Niaz A. Naik, pointed out that the global network for gathering and distributing information "had become one of the most effective instruments of a few developed countries whose news agencies present concoctions and half-truths as whole truth and created misunderstandings and prejudices." He called for "redoubling efforts" for establishing a new world information order to collect and distribute news objectively to serve the cause of world peace and progress and to bring the peoples and cultures closer together to pave way for the materialisation of man's dream of a safe, secure and happy world." Nothing would be better for the world if such a system could be created but in view of the diametrically opposed interests of the Western and the non-Western worlds it is doubtful if Mr Naik's appeal,—representing the aspirations of Asia, Africa, the Latin countries and many underdeveloped regions of the world,—would find the right response in the relevant quarters. It is now generally known that the Western mass media, along with the news agencies and scores of reporters and correspondents roving around the world, are indeed part and parcel of the Western political system designed to exploit the non-Western world. For a long time, it was not realised by people that the global network of information created by the Western countries carried on undercover political activities for them in complicity with various organs of the State. It was only when the erstwhile colonies regained freedom from the West and demanded political and economic justice for them, and the fight between the exploiters and the exploited was crystallised, that the hidden role of the Western mass media was fully exposed.

Dispensation of justice depends solely upon the truth being known to an impartial jury and judge. To get justice for the non-Western world and to check their political and economic exploitation at the hands of the colonial and imperialist Powers it is necessary that the world opinion be enlightened about the truth.

Viewed in this context, the important role of the global network of information is all too clear. By presenting a distorted picture of the non-Western world, the Western mass media helps in perpetuating the tyranny and injustice perpetrated by the West, and prevents the exploited countries from mustering moral support for their cause. But the highly unethical role played by the Western mass media is now thoroughly exposed. The brunt of the hostility of the Western mass media has been borne by the Muslim world. This was fully exposed by the Islamic Press Union. In its annual report for 1980, the IPU accused the Western media of being an accomplice of the Western Governments and of "launching a campaign of vilification against the Muslim world." "The whole world was aware that media in the West had always withheld circulation and display of films and literature which could even remotely damage their national interests and the interests of Jews and Israel," the IPU said. All this points to the fact that the Muslim world must try to create its own global news system, as powerful as the Western media, to counter it effectively.

After the first International Islamic Mass Media Conference held at Jakarta in September, 1980, it was decided to establish a permanent secretariat-general for the development of Islamic mass media. Also, an international conference was held at Islamabad in March this year which adopted a resolution on media which called upon the Muslim countries "to enforce the code of ethics ordained by Allah as common code for the mass media so that the Press laws are uniform throughout the Muslim world." The code of ethics suggested by the moot furnishes an excellent yardstick against which our accomplishments in this regard can be accurately measured. At the moment our journalistic equipment by way of personnel and motive force donot measure up to the standards set by the conference. Otherwise, there would be no need for the Government to "urge' the journalists to serve the cause of Islam.

The baneful hold of the Western countries over the global network of news system can be broken if the Muslim countries create their own powerful mass media. How this can be achieved has been suggested by the Islamic Press Union, the Jakarta conference and the Islamabad moot. In fact, the profession of journalism is one of the most important instruments for achieving the aims of Islamisation and for that reason it ought to be the exclusive preserve of highly motivated Muslims who would take their guidance only from the Holy Quran and the Sunnah.

PAKISTAN EMBASSIES CRITICIZED FOR INEFFECTIVE REPRESENTATION

Lahore CHATAN in Urdu 3 Aug 81 p 6

[Article: "Performance of Pakistani Embassies Is Disappointing; Pakistanis Abroad Also Lack Patriotism"]

[Text] "People here are more familiar with India and its people. One reason is that the Indian embassy and consulates are functioning in an extemely organized manner. Second, the Indians are patriotic, and they strive to establish a good image of their country. On the other hand, the performance of our embassies is not only unsatisfactory, it is disappointing. Furthermore, some Pakistanis are a disgrace to their country. Since they are not living in their country, they do not care. None of them cares to put on his national dress. The Indian women always wear saris, even when appearing on TV programs.

"If the Pakistanis wore their national dress, or at least if the embassy staff set this practical example, it would certainly make a good impression on the people here."

The above is an excerpt from a letter written by a Pakistani residing in America to his relative in Pakistan. The issue pointed out in this letter is not new. It has been singled out a thousand times before and the national newspapers and magazines have discussed it at length. Regrettably, no effort is made to remedy the situation. It is commonly complained that the Pakistani embassies abroad make no effort to familiarize the local people with Pakistan and take no steps to counter anti-Pakistan propaganda. On the other hand, the Indian embassy has always been active on the diplomatic front. The reason is that diplomatic positions in our country are mainly given as bribes. It has been the trend of every government in office that any person who was to be repaid for past favors or was needed for favors overseas was given an ambassadorial post. Such persons are not at all interested in their official duties, and as a result, the staff, too, follows in their footsteps. It is commonly complained that our embassy personnel, instead of assisting or guiding the Pakistanis living overseas, rip them off.

West German sources have made some disclosures about the realities of Pakistanis seeking political asylum there. Thousands of Pakistanis arrived in West Germany seeking political asylum on the basis of letters bearing true or false signatures of the leader of a banned political party and his daughter. Each one of them paid 3,000 to 5,000 rupees for a single letter or document. The West German Government thought that these people had escaped from their country to avoid persecution. It was indeed a disgrace for Pakistan and its government. The Government of Pakistan and the embassy personnel responsible should have investigated this matter and revealed the truth to the world. Apparently, no one felt this sense of duty. As a result, a faulty image of Pakistan was established in West Germany and other European countries.

Another complaint commonly voiced is that in many foreign countries the persons appointed in Pakistani embassies are unfamiliar with the local language. On the contrary, India has always gotten better results out of its embassies. For example, in all its embassies in the Arab countries, it appointed primarily people who knew Arabic and some of whom were Muslims. This knowledge of Arabic helped create a better image of India in those countries.

Pakistan, on the other hand, could not create a favorable impression in the fraternal Islamic countries because its embassy personnel knew English but not Arabic. This situation has not changed much so far.

Living nations abide by some principles. Their people manifest their love for those principles in the affairs of the nation and the state. Their personal likes and dislikes are limited to private circles only. As a matter of principle and policy, therefore, the only persons appointed in the embassies should be capable, true and sincere Pakistanis who will work earnestly for Pakistan in their countries of assignment.

There are sectarian disturbances almost daily in India, and Harijans (untouchables) are oppressed. Prejudice by the majority in India is an established fact, but Pakistani embassies have failed to reveal the true picture of India to the world. On the contrary, in most cases the Indians have been successful in making the world believe that Pakistan has no representative government and that the people are not participating in government affairs.

In recent years, there have been claims made that the existing situation is being corrected. The question is whether any positive steps have been taken to improve the performance of Pakistani embassies whether there has been any planning in this regard.

FORMATION, REFORMATION OF GOVERNMENT INSTITUTIONS

Lahore CHATAN in Urdu 24 Aug 81 p 7

[Article by Waqar Hijazi: "Firm and Productive Action Is Necessary for the Purification of National Institutions; After PIA, Let Us Examine the Structure of Other 'Beauty Parlors' Too"]

[Text] The government has taken some steps to reform Pakistan International Airlines [PIA]. Employee organizations have been banned and their offices have been sealed off. As far as PIA is concerned, it is satisfied with the actions taken by the government because this national institution was heading rapidly toward destruction. Fraud in the sale of tickets, the disappearance of passengers' baggage and flight delays had become a daily routine. As a result, the institution was gradually losing the public's confidence. Hijacking incidents and the disappearance of valuable luggage had created an impression that this institution had become a citadel of robbers and plunderers. This constant trend toward national disgrace had obviously become a torment for the people. In principle we do not support bans on the activities of trade unions, but the negative and destructive manner of these activities is equally intolerable.

The government has paid attention to the pitiable condition of the telephone department. This department has ceased to function effectively. Most telephones are out of service and complaints are ignored. Bills are often incorrect. Improper dealings of department employees are well-known. Lately, the situation has deteriorated so much that contacting a desired number comes as a great adventure and to make one call a consumer has to bear the cost of many calls. Obviously, the consumers are bound to hold the government responsible for this situation. The secret of any government's success lies in the effective performance of public service departments and institutions. The people's complaints should be dealt with and evils should be eradicated.

It is a well-known fact that during the past era, many individuals were employed or given promotions in various departments and institutions due to political considerations rather than because of their ability. When the political situation changed, these people apparently changed their tune and were successful in giving assurances that they were professional employees and servants and were there to serve the government, whatever it might be. This should be the true spirit; only it wasn't. Corruption increased instead of decreasing, so much so that the president had to confess that the whole structure was corrupt. It is a matter of principle that if the person in authority is dutiful, honest, capable and efficient, his subordinates would never dare to be corrupt. The existence of corruption is proof of evil from top to bottom. That is why capturing a small culprit once in a while brings about no reform in the existing situation.

In light of this situation, the president has voiced the need to appoint a chief investigator. It is essential, and the current situation demands speedy action for reform without partiality. The ordinance concerning the appointment of the chief investigator or that all evil elements will then be under control. The matter of appointing the chief investigator for a 4-year term should also be reviewed carefully.

As a rule, if the chief investigator appointee demonstrates better performance and his efforts are fruitful, his term of office should be extended. If his performance is unsatisfactory, he should be relieved of his duties before the expiration of his term of office. A person who knows that he is holding his office for a 4-year period, which can neither be extended nor shortened will have little incentive for improving his performance. If he is naturally conscientious, however, it is a different matter.

In celebrating 14 August, Independence Day, people gave ample evidence of their fervor and enthusiasm. The nation now wants to see the enforcement of true Islamic law in the country. It is an undisputed fact that only those people can enforce Islam who set a practical example by following the teachings of Islam. We all are well aware of the real obstacle in enforcement of the Islamic system.

INCENTIVES FOR OVERSEAS PAKISTANIS TO SET UP INDUSTRIES IN PAKISTAN

Islamabad THE MUSLIM in English 21 Oct 81 p 3

[Text] ISLAMABAD, Oct. 20: The Overseas Pakistanis Foundation has launched a multipurpose programme to start a number of projects, both in the industrial and agricultural sectors with a view to providing incentives to Overseas Pakistanis to set up their business in Pakistan.

The Managing Director of the Overseas Pakistanis Foundation, Syed Iqbal Imam told APP in an interview today that the programme envisages to provide job opportunities to the overseas Pakistanis on their return home and to enable them to invest in Pakistan to set up small and medium sized industries.

The main feature of the programme, Mr Iqbal said was that the agricultural sector had also been included in such a programme for the first time. Livestock development projects in the form of sheep and goat farming, and dairy and model agricultural farms, he said would also be set up under this programme.

Mr Iqbal said some of the projects would be undertaken by the Overseas Pakistanis Foundation itself while others would be initiated with the cooperation and assistance of the international agencies.

The preliminaries to start four such projects like the liquid sugar, alcohol for industrial use, PIA Shavers, Pepsi Cola, sugar mill at Lalian with the cooperation of the PIDC, Mr Iqbal said had been worked out and the exercise was underway in the right earnest.

A Japanese firm, TAD, he said had offered collaboration to produce compressors for use in the air conditioning plants, fridges and freezers.

The Managing Director said a three-member team of the Overseas Pakistanis Foundation comprising the Deputy Manager of the Foundation, Director Welfare and one expert selected from outside, would go on tour of the Middle East countries, including the Gulf States by the end of this month to know the views of the Pakistani communities in those countries. --APP

FUNDS FOR DEVELOPMENT IN BALUCHISTAN

Islamabad THE MUSLIM in English 21 Oct 81 p 1

[Article by Jawaid Bokhari]

[Text] KARACHI, Oct. 20: High-level meetings will be held in Quetta next week to consider financial and credit needs for trade and industry in the province, it was learnt here today.

For assessing financial needs and ensuring smooth flow of funds, Chairman of Pakistan Banking Council, M.R. Khan will meet Provincial Governor Lt. Gen. Rahimuddin Khan. Yet another meeting of the PBC chief is planned with leading representatives of trade and industry.

M.R. Khan believes that one of the major objectives of the nationalised banks is to promote development of less developed or retarded areas.

It may be recalled that sometime ago the heads of financial institutions and nationalised banks had also decided that they would pay regular visits to Quetta and Peshawar to ensure smooth flow of required funds for development of the two provinces. Recently bankers equity chief D.M. Qureshi visited Peshawar, Habib Bank President, Haji Jabbar Khan went to Faisalabad and Muslim Commercial Bank Chief, Ajmal Khan covered some less developed regions of the Punjab. The top bankers meet a cross section of the business community and tried to assess and facilitate flow of funds in areas where they are needed.

It may be recalled that more than a year ago a committee of top bankers and heads of financial institutions was also set up to suggest measures for quickening the pace of investment in Baluchistan.

Experts associated with the committee felt that a financial package should be evolved to facilitate flow of required funds for industries based on local raw materials and skill and sponsored on local entrepreneurs. Fiscal concessions should be linked with the requirements of a particular industry rather than the entire area.

CRITICISM OF SENIORITY SYSTEM RISES AS TECHNICIANS EMIGRATE

[Editorial: "Brain in the Drain"]

[Text] Skilled labour has been fleeing the country at an alarming rate with the result that even policy-makers are now beginning to sit up and take notice. Plans are on the anvil for increasing the allowances admissible to various categories of public servants. In a report published by this newspaper last Thursday, a classic case in point was cited: half a dozen engineers were sent abroad for training by the Telephone and Telegraph Department. When they returned, they were offered Grade-16 and Grade-17 jobs. Five of the trainees resigned in a huff and sought employment with private firms or in the Gulf. We wonder whether special allowances of the type recommended--even demanded--by the Minister in charge of the Department will bring any of the old and well-trained employees back or prevent others from following suit. Nevertheless, the mere fact that the powers that be are beginning to get worried is indicative that remedial steps, belated and near-futile as they will be, may after all be taken. The trouble with us all these years has been that we do not anticipate problems; we only seek solutions when we are in the thick of it and gasping for breath. Brain drain, for example, is not a new problem; it predates even the post-1973 manpower boom in the Gulf and the rest of the Middle East. Doctors and engineers were leaving the country long before the Arabs used oil as a political weapon. Those who began migrating for work after 1973 were mostly unskilled people and even today the lure of the petrodollar is too great to resist. This has had a most disturbing side-effect: a few years ago some young boys were offered training abroad so that on their return they could get a better deal from their department. These young people also had firm offers from abroad. When they found that with the qualifications they already possessed they could earn ten times more than what they would be getting after a three-year training period, they naturally chose to resign and accepted Middle Eastern jobs. This has now assumed epidemic proportions. No one wants to spend unnecessary years at college. There are jobs to be had. So why waste time and, therefore, money? In ten years from now, Pakistan may be faced with a critical shortage in skilled labour and by the turn of the century may even become a net importer of trained manpower. The whole trouble arises from the fact that scales of pay are determined by constipated, status-conscious gentlemen of the bureaucracy who can't suffer to think that anyone with a Ph.D. in his discipline can or should earn more than themselves. They have made it to Grade-19 after 19 years. So how can a mere fledgling whose claim to higher emoluments is nothing more than the special skill that his office requires lay claim to that honourable grade after three years of 'ayyashi' in a foreign land? Let the b- resign of he wants to but he will be 50 before he gets to Grade-19. The young b-resigns and goes abroad but the seniority list remains intact. Skill has abdicated. Long live the seniority list! What brain drain do we speak of, then? We washed out brains down the drain long ago and the neighbour's cat ran away with the grey cells. The seniority list boss writes and having writ moves on and there's nothing you can do to erase one half rule or undo one half regulation. By the way, we have thirty thousand seniority lists. Why not have just one senility list?

TOURIST DOLLARS VERSUS ISLAMIC MORALS

Islamabad THE MUSLIM in English 11 Oct 81 p 4

[Article by Sultan Ahmed: "Tourist Dollars and Our Threatened Morals"]

[Text] WHEN IN ROME, do as the Romans do, says the proverb or healthy homily for the worldly men.

Whether visitors to Rome, from imperious conquerors to simple tourists, have been conforming to the proverb or not, it has survived for centuries.

If what is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander, European or Oriental, when tourists from Rome, Italy, Europe or the West as a whole come to Pakistan they have to behave as Pakistanis do, or so are they expected to.

So the Pakistan Tourism Development Corporation is reported to have rightly directed all its branches abroad to advise tourists wanting to visit Pakistan to wear proper clothes.

Visiting women in particular have to avoid wearing skin-tight dresses including tight blouses without brassiers when moving around cities or open spaces.

Hotels in Pakistan have also been instructed not to allow women swim in skinpy bikinis or other excessively revealing costumes.

Some may say these are severe instructions in this permissive age, and particularly for the permissive tourists who come for sun, fun and frolic here. But I do think that we are being still liberal with the visiting women in a country where most of the women are seen wearing ,burqas' in the cities and towns.

"When women go to St. Peter's catherdral in Rome don't they cover their bare shoulders and avoid hot pants and other tempting dresses?" asks my orthodox friend in defence of the new instructions.

I agreed with him, although I am told the cathedral authorities have now become somewhat less severe. "But Pakistan is not a cathedral", I said, "they don't come here for pilgrimage but for the fun and our sun, the hot all-the-year-round sun under which they take off much of their clothes and let the heat work into their skin so that they can go home tanned and looking terribly sexy."

But my friend argues that the tourists could have sun anywhere from Morocco to Australia, and in much of Latin America, and in the Caribbean island. "They need not come all the way to Pakistan for the sun", he asserts. He may be right.

But the trouble with tourists is that they want to visit countries where the laws are lax and not those where there are severe rules about their behaviour, dresses and drink. . I said.

"But they must com here to enjoy the difference", he said. 'It must be a lot of fun for tourists to be in a country where the laws are different from theirs, the rules are different, the customs and habits are different, and even the moral values are different. It is the difference that makes tourism. Otherwise they can stay at home '.

"When they want it they will come ', he said. Look at Oriana Fallacci, the notorious journalist from Italy who used to make world's leaders shiver when she interviewed them. When she went to interview Ayatollah Khomeinij she wore a proper chaddar and covered her head according to the Iranian custom now".

I stressed that coming on professional or business trips here was very different from being here as tourists. For example, if the women feel like having a swim in Hawks's Bay or Sandspit in a swim suit they can't, under the rules", I said.

"And what about the hotels in Pakistan which permit those foreign girls swim in their bikinis or other brief wear in pools near the cafeterias and dinning rooms? Do you want our new morality permit that too? That may be good for business, but bad for our morals - you want all that ogling to go on and on?" he asked impatiently.

'The new laws will take care of that too'. I said. Maybe the four and five-star hotels should have two swimming pools, one for the women and the other for men, and both should be shielded from the public eye '.

'That will make it all too costly ' said my friend. Instead, men and women should swim reasonably well clothed and far off from the dining rooms and cafeterias", he insisted.

'We are concerned not only with the fragile morals of our men, but also the safety of the visiting girls , he continued. "You know what happened to that English girl who went around the Ladakh tourist resort in tight clothes? She just vanished. Whether she was killed by someone after a sexual assault, kidnapped by someone or carried off by the abominable snowman or Yeti, no one knows." We don't want that to happen to tourist girls or airline stewardesses in tight dresses in Pakistan", he maintained.

I said tourists are finding it hard to feel at home in Pakistan. Prohibition makes drinking tedious for them, and terribly costly, there are no night clubs, no gambling places, no betting at the races, hardly any place for dancing, and if they go out with a girl at night they may have to do a lot of explaining to the police. And they don't find many other forms of entertainment, traditional or modern, oriental or Western here", I said.

"They must go, and see our beautiful mountains, those magestic mountains like K-2 compared to the small hills they have all over Europe", he insisted.

'But they are not able to go much to the mountians now because of the Russians and the refugees', I said.

And the beach is not developed at all. And now even if it is, the tourists cannot move round in their brief dresses or get into the sea in their bikinis in this age of the topless or nothing-to-wear at all in the permissive West.

"But we don't want those kind of tourists, we want the better ones. Do what you like, they will still come for our charas", he said.

'But you don't want more charsis", I said." Don't we have enough of them? And surely the ones who come to smoke charas don't bring much money. Instead we want those with fat wallets and a generous hand".

"Fat wallets or thin wallets, I prefer the cultural types, those who come to see Taxila and Moenjadaro, Harappa, the Chukkundi tombs and the graves of Makli. With that kind we will have no problem", he said.

"They will be old folks", I said. "But what is wrong with old folks if they have the time and the money'

'But that is not Islamic culture or heritage", I said.

'What difference does it make? All we want is the tourists' money or our morals. If the two cannot coexist tourism goes and our morals stay.

I agreed, for who can ever argue with a moral man for long in our rarified atmosphere?

LIBYAN PREFERENCE FOR INDIGENOUS PRODUCTS

Islamabad THE MUSLIM in English 3 Oct 81 p 7

[Text]

KARACHI, Oct. 2: Libya will prefer buying its requirements from Pakistan if the products were of high standard and competitive in price, the spokesman of the 5-man trade edelegation from Libya Ben Shatwan said at a meeting with the President of the Federation of Pakistan Chambers of Commerce and Industry, Mohammad Yousf Zia here Wednesday.

The delegation, which comprises representatives of state companies importing readymade garments, electronics and electrical home appliances and kitchen ware and Libyan commercial office in Istanbul flew in Karachi on Sept. 28 on a market survey and exploratory mission.

The delegation spokesman said that during their stay the delegation members met a number of suppliers. He said, their visit was a beginning of visits by many more delegations representing specific lines of trade. In fact a trade mission representing sports goods had also arrived from Libya. He said, it was also proposed that Pakistani suppliers would be invited to visit Libya to have an idea of the market requirements.

Earlier, Mohammad Yousf Zia, President of FPCC & I welcomed the delegation members and informed them that Pakistan was in a position to supply a varied number of items to Libya including readymade garments, sports goods, surgical instruments, cutlery, electrical goods. He informed them that light engineering machines are also being exported now to countries which are quality conscious but are placing orders because of high standard and competitive prices. During discussion he further informed the delegation that Pakistani manufacturers are in a position to meet their requirements as per specifications and designs of the Libyan buyers.

Mohammad Yousf Zia assured that the Federation would extend all possible assistance and co-operation for promotion of trade between the two brotherly countries.—APP

POWER GENERATING CAPACITY TO DOUBLE BY EARLY 1984

Karachi MORNING NEWS in English 7 Oct 81 p 9

[Text] The capacity of the National WAPDA Power Grid will be virtually doubled from the existing 132 kilo volts to 220 KV by the beginning of 1984.

Disclosing this at a Radio Press conference here last night, Mr Parvez Ahmed Butt, Chairman, Karachi Electric Supply Corporation, said that this would enable the KESC to receive appreciably more electricity through the National Grid in time of need. Thus alleviating at a great extent the current power shortage facing the metropolis.

The KESC is already linked to the National Power Grid but since the present capacity of the latter is only 132 KV it cannot transfer much electricity to this city.

He said that the KESC had drawn up a five-year plan aimed at boosting its generating capacity so that the current gap between demand and supply could be bridged.

The KESC chairman said that with the commissioning of the first and second 200 megawatt each generating units at the under-construction power station at Pipri by the end of 1983 and 1984, the KESC would be able to meet most of the industrial, commercial and domestic power requirements of the city through its own capacity.

Total Cost

The total cost of these two generating units at Pipri is Rs 600 crore.

Mr Parvez Butt noted that at present the KESC had no reserve capacity to meet any crisis, but with the commissioning of the above two units, this would change, and the KESC would have some reserve electricity with which it could cope with the projected future demand.

He said at the moment the total daily requirements for electricity in Karachi city, including the industrial, commercial and domestic consumers, was 610 Mega Watts during the peak hours between 6 p.m. and 11 p.m.

The three-point energy conservation plan introduced by the KESC had reduced this demand by 60 MWs per day, through the compulsory close-down of shops and commercial establishments at 6.30 p.m. every evening, staggering of holidays in factories and no evening shift in industrial units.

He said if domestic consumers cooperated with the KESC by using two bulbs less in each household, this would result in a daily saving of 50 MWs, which could go far towards meeting the energy gap.

The KESC would shortly published a booklet on energy conservation and this would be distributed among the public.

New Connections

Answering a query Mr Butt said that electricity connections to many new flats could not be given at present since the apartment complex builders had not bothered to consult the KESC about future power supply at the planning and building stages.

He advised prospective apartment-buyers to make sure that the constructors had obtained commitments from the KESC to give electricity connections before they purchased the flats.

He said to prevent occurrence of such unplanned construction in future, the KESC and Karachi Development authority had decided to hold joint meetings at regular intervals and consult with each other about future city planning.

Regarding complaints about over-billing, he said in a small percentage of cases these were justified. However, some other complaints arose because the meters were not read for a number of months, and thus all of a sudden the accumulated bill landed before the consumer, he added.

He was of the view that without some amendments in existing labour laws this situation would be difficult to rectify.

In this connection, he noted that while it was relatively easy to dismiss a CSP officer, it was virtually impossible to get rid of a KESC employee.

Answering a question, he said electricity connections to some poultry estates in the Gadap area would be given soon, and through these adjacent tube wells could also be powered.

However, it was not possible to meet the demands of all applicants in this area at once, since many of them were agriculturists, and so the distances involved in providing individual connections were very large.

Regarding the use of solar power and windmills to generate electricity, he said this was not feasible at the present time, since the technology involved was in an experimental stage of development.—APP

MAJOR TRAFFIC PROBLEMS REPORTED

Islamabad THE MUSLIM in English 3 Oct 81 p 1

[Article by Saeed Qureshi: "Terrific Traffic"]

[Text]

ISLAMABAD, Oct. 2. According to available statistics the number of traffic challans in Punjab is around 22,000 in Sind 19,000 and in the NWFP it is approximately 10,000 per month.

Believing that their quick disposal was impossible unless the number of magistrates was raised, the authorities are reportedly contemplating summary disposals through standard penalties. The system would enable a cop to give option to violators either to pay a fixed fine or else get prosecuted in a court of law. The practice of impounding a vehicle or acquisition of documents would be discontinued.

The report of the National Highways Safety Cell says the five-month dissemination campaign to familiarise public with traffic rules launched in June 1978 raised the level of awareness about them from 1.5 to 22.5 per cent. The campaign had later to be called off statedly owing to lack of funds. It is claimed that the amount of Rs. 20,00,000 spent on the campaign was repaid to the exchequer to the tune of Rs. 40,00,000 in terms of avoidance of accidents.

A highly placed source, however, admitted that such campaigns do not necessarily guarantee decline in traffic accidents. He said the obeying of rules was different from knowing them. Even after the 1978 campaign the accidents showed no let-up and the graph moved up.

The public perception of traffic problems is certainly different from that of the authorities. Their main concerns are over-speeding, overloading, misbehaviour of the drivers, cut-throat competition to lift the passengers risking the lives of others, and fleecing the fares through arbitrary division of routes. The authorities place containment of accidents over all other problems.

Unfortunately neither the accidents have abated nor the behaviour of the drivers has shown any improvement. The cops overlook the offences of the drivers not because they have their eye on prevention of accidents but, as the public interprets, for monthly amounts paid to them.

The traffic authorities tend to defend the cops on the grounds that they are themselves ignorant of the rules, or they are corrupt because of poverty or they are corrupt, because the whole society is corrupt. This logic can not exonerate the cops from the public indictment which holds the police equally responsible for deaths taking place on the roads.

There is a move now to lay exphasis on 'moving' violations as compared to the 'stationary' violations. It is believed by the traffic experts that the main causes responsible for massive road fatalities were over speeding and other moving violations.

Another factor undermining a viable and safe traffic system is the divergence of approach and opinions between the Communication ministry and the satellite agencies, with regard to solution of problems. The reported friction has led to withholding of an integrated and early answer to a problem which has assumed alarming dimensions.

TALKS ON INDIA-PAK TRADE AGREEMENT

Islamabad THE MUSLIM in English 21 Oct 81 p 5

[Text] LONDON, Oct. 20: A further round of talks for hammering out a new trade agreement between Pakistan and India is expected to take place in New Delhi next month, it was learnt here.

Pakistan is sending its senior officials to have discussions with their counterparts in the Ministry of Commerce for the purpose. Pakistani officials will be in Delhi to participate in the International Trade Fair from Nov. 14 to Dec. 4. Islamabad is participating in the fair in a big way.

Indian officials are hopeful of concluding a new agreement. talks for which have been going on for the last two years at various level. The forthcoming talks may break fresh ground, Indian officials said.

They cite the purchase of about 50,000 bales of medium staple cotton from Pakistan as India's desire to strengthen its trade relations with Pakistan.

It is learnt that the entire quantity of cotton has reached the Indian ports. India has also been importing fuel oil from Pakistan, apart from raw cotton purchased this year.

India, on its part, is primarily exporting iron ore for the Pakistan Steel Mills project.

Indo-Pak trade touched a peak level in 1977-78, when India exported goods worth Rs. 42.12 crore. Imports from Pakistan were valued at Rs. 23.90 crore. After that year, the two-way trade has been moving in an erratic manner.

In the next year 1978-79, India's export earnings gells to Rs. 19.45 crore. Imports from Pakistan also declined.

The first trade agreement was signed on 1975 and lapsed in January, 1978.

PRIVATE SECTOR TO PLAY VITAL ROLE IN SHIPPING

Islamabad THE MUSLIM in English 17 Oct 81 p 6

[Text]

KARACHI, Oct. 16: The Presidential Adviser on Shipping, Mustafa Gokal, last night underlined the possibilities of the private sector playing an important and responsible part in the country's freight trade.

Speaking as chief guest at the annual dinner of Pakistan Ship Agents Association at a local hotel, he said, "All of you have an important and positive role to play in planning and promoting the development of shipping in Pakistan. Though ship-owning is in the public sector, the Government has expressed its readiness to consider plans for its expansion on the basis of co-operation and joint enterprise. Apart from transportation of crude oil, which is in the public sector, the import of grains and edible oil are still in private hands. Therefore, possibilities exist for the private sector to play a responsible part in the freight market."

Mr. Gokal said President Ziaul Haq was keen to encourage the private sector and the professional bodies to come forward with specific and constructive suggestions. The Adviser invited Pakistan Ship Agents Association to put forward its proposals before the Government.

Mr. Gokal said Pakistan possessed in the field of shipping infrastructure and trained personnel in the field of shipping industry not only to meet our own growing needs for seaborne trade, but also to share the benefits of cross-trading in South Asia and the Middle East which generated a high percentage of world trade. "We must exploit this potential which can make a very substantial contribution to our foreign exchange earning", he added.

He said that the recent inauguration of the Karachi Steel Mills underlined the need for nationally-owned carriers for the import of iron ore and coal. The Government would have to pay due attention to this matter which was an important element in the strategy for economic and industrial development.—APP

TIBBI DISPENSARIES, HOSPITALS URGED

Lahore THE PAKISTAN TIMES in English 20 Oct 81 p 5

[Text]

The Muttehida Jamiatul Attiba Pakistan called upon the Federal Government to set up Tibbi dispensaries and hospitals in all the four Provinces in accordance with a Government policy to encourage and promote Islamic system of medicine.

A resolution passed at a meeting of the Jamiat under the chairmanship of its President Hakim Mian Abdul Ghafoor Arshi expressed gratitude to the President for taking keen interest in the promotion of Tibb and said that people could benefit from this system only if dispensaries and hospitals were set up in the country to provide cheap treatment to the people.

By another resolution the meeting said that tabibs should be allowed to issue medical certificates and prescriptions and set up a Tibbia College and hospital at Rawalpindi and Islamabad in accordance with a proposal of the All Pakistan Registered Practitioners Association. The land for the proposed hospital should be given by the CDA or the Auqaf Department as a gift, it said.

The other resolutions called for setting up of herb farms and arranging of their packing and supply to hakims, a separate directorate for Tabibs and issuance of certificates and diplomas to the graduate Tabibs.—APP.

PLANS FOR PRIVATE FOODGRAIN STORAGE GODOWNS

Karachi DAWN in English 18 Oct 81 p 5

[Text] Faisalabad, Oct 17--The Punjab Government has approved a scheme for the construction of private godowns in the province for the storage of foodgrains.

Disclosing this to DAWN correspondent, Mian Khuda Baksh, Deputy Director of Food, Sargodha division, said under this scheme the agriculturists would bear 40 per cent cost of the construction while the remaining 60 per cent would be made available to them by the Government through banks on soft terms.

He added that these private godowns would be constructed according to the designs of the Food Department. After the completion of these godowns, he said, the Food Department will take over these godowns on rental basis at least for 10 years period for the storage of government purchased wheat.

Mian Khuda Baksh further disclosed that the Federal Government was also negotiating with the World Bank to acquire loan for the construction of a chain of godowns in the country out of which 10 godowns would be constructed in the Punjab province at important procurement centres including Faisalabad, Vehari Multan, Sargodha.

In reply to a question the Deputy Director of Food disclosed that during this season 11.3 million tons of wheat had been produced in the country. He said that in our country about five per cent of the total production of wheat goes waste owing to pests attack and thus we bear a national loss to the tune of Rs. 812 million every year. He said that in order to minimise this wastage, the Provincial Government would take every possible precautionary measures and had decided to impart training to food storage staff. He added that under this scheme the University of Agriculture, Faisalabad, has started training the first batch regarding the control of foodgrain diseases and elimination of pests.

In reply to another question, Mian Khuda Baksh said that the Provincial Food Department had this time procured 20 lakh tons of wheat which would be sufficient for consumption this year. He said that our of this quantity, 5,20,000 [as printed] tons of wheat had been kept in Government and private godowns in Sargodha division but still 47,000 tons of wheat was lying along railway tracks in open space.

PROSPECTS FOR VEGETABLE EXPORTS TO PERSIAN GULF COUNTRIES

Islamabad THE MUSLIM in English 18 Oct 81 p 7

[Text]

JEDDAH, Oct. 17: The export of Pakistani vegetables stands a bright chance in the Gulf Market, especially in Saudi Arabia, according to a recent official survey conducted by the Export Promotion Bureau of Pakistan, local English daily Arab News reported today.

The survey undertaken, in co-operation with commercial sectors of Pakistan Embassies in Kingdom, Kuwait, UAE, Qatar, Oman and Bahrain, attributed its prediction on the close vicinity of the areas markets and the existing quick, regular transhipment arrangements.

Pakistan, which has banned the export of fresh vegetables until recently, reversed its decision in the light of the increased production of vegetables in the country, according to Embassy sources here.

Apart from the survey, Pakistani officials have established contacts with the Saudi businessmen dealing in the imports of fresh vegetables. They have ascertained their packing requirements for different vegetables and their demand for supply of vegetables on long term basis.

Pakistani officials and businessmen hope, they will be able to sell their vegetables in the Kingdom's market at highly competitive prices and in large quantities.

Already, they have made considerable headway in selling Pakistani potatoes, onions and garlic when export was allowed at a restricted scale some two years back. They exported onions worth about SR. 3 million to the Kingdom alone during the last year, the source said.

In order to supply fresh vegetables to the Kingdom in bulk, the Pakistan Government is also considering a refrigerated shipping service between Karachi and Dammam. This will enable the Pakistani traders to supply the Kingdom fresh vegetables and service between Karachi and Dammam. This will enable other perishable items at reasonable prices, the source said.

The journey time between the two points is about three days and the officials are hopeful that this quick delivery by ship will ensure the availability of Pakistani fresh vegetables in Saudi Arabian markets at much lower price than from other sources adversely affected by inflated air freight charges.—APP

FIVE-YEAR PLAN TO BOOST OIL SEED PRODUCTION

Karachi MORNING NEWS in English 24 Oct 81 p 5

[Text] A five-year action plan is being launched by the Sind Agriculture Department from the current Rabi season to boost oilseed production by 48 per cent in the province.

Stating this, the Provincial Food and Agriculture Minister Sardar Ghulam Mohammad Mahar said that through intensive and extensive cultivation, the production of rape and mustard would be increased from 63.840 tons of 1980-81 to 91,900 tons in 1985-86.

He said that from the coming Rabi season of 1981-82, rape and mustard will be grown on 2.75 lakh acres in all five years of the plan with emphasis on increasing yield per acre from 6.8 maunds to 9 maunds.

Similarly, he said, another important Rabi oilseed, groundnut will be cultivated on an area of 5,000 acres this season with production target of 3,450 tons. By the end of the plan period in 1985-86, the acreage and production of groundnut will enhance to 6,500 acre and 5,660 tons respectively.

The yield per acre of the groundnut will be increased from 18.3 maunds to 23.3 maunds he added.

The Minister said that to achieve the targeted production, all important inputs like pule seed, fertiliser, pesticides credit and farm advice will be provided to the growers in sufficient quantity and in time.

Sardar Mahar further said that the Agriculture Extension Department will allocate areas and yield targets to the field staff who would be given necessary training by research experts in improved technology of oilseed cultivation.

He said that the acreage under oilseed cultivation will be closely supervised for giving necessary guidance to the growers from selection of land upto threshing stage.

Under the action plan, improved seed multiplication programme has also been prepared which envisages provision of 265.1 tons of rape and mustard seed and 135.4 tons of groundnut seed by 1985-86.

The research work on the improvement of seed of rape and mustard and groundnut will also continue to evolve better and high-yielding varieties of these oilseeds, the Minister added:

For plant protection measures the Minister said, 569 sprayers will also be provided to the growers besides adequate stocks of effective pesticides.

He further said that incentives in shape of better prices, easy credit, marketing and other facilities will also be extended to the oilseed crop growers.--APP

INCREASED OIL PRODUCTION BY 1982

Karachi MORNING NEWS in English 24 Oct 81 p 4

[Text] Muzaffargarh, Oct. 23: The production of oil from Dodak, Meyal, Toot and Adhi is expected to go up to 19,000 barrels per day by the beginning of next year and will meet about 23 per cent of country's requirements.

Sources of Petroleum and Natural Resources said that at present the total production of oil stood at 12,00 barrels a day which was meeting the 14 per cent requirements of the country.

The sources said to augment the production 30 wells were being drilled each at an expenditure of Rs. 80 million to 120 million. The government was pursuing an exploration programme at an expenditure of Rs. 13,000 million and by the end of the current five-year plan, that is by 1982 the production of oil is expected to rise from 40,000 to 50,000 barrels a day meeting about half of the country's total requirements.

The sources said that seven foreign companies were also engaged in oil exploration in the country.

The sources said that side by side with exploring of oil the Government had taken steps to increase the refining capacity.

In the meantime, a number of small plant for refining oil are to be set up near the discovered oil fields.

The sources said Government had agreed, in principle to the setting up of lubrication oil plants at the National refineries and the Pakistan Refinery at Karachi to manufacture high speed diesel oil from fuel oil. This would help save substantial amount of foreign exchange being spent on the import of oil.

CREDIT ALLOCATIONS FOR THE PRIVATE SECTOR UP

Islamabad THE MUSLIM in English 21 Oct 81 p 4

[Article by Jawaid Bokhari]

[Text] TOTAL credit expansion during 1981-82 stipulated by the National Credit Consultative Council works out to Rs. 19,495 million an increase of 19.1 per cent against the projected growth of rate 6.1 per cent in the Gross Domestic Product.

However, assuming the contractionary effect of foreign sector at Rs. 3,286 million, monetary expansion is expected to be of the order of Rs. 16,209 million or 15.4 per cent.

The Government's budgetary needs have been estimated at Rs. 5,444 million to be met through deficit financing and requirements of commodity financing have been placed at Rs. 962 million.

Credit needs of public sector enterprises, orginally estimated by the NCCC secretariat at Rs. 4,400 million, Rs. 2,400 million for fixed assets and Rs. 2,000 million for working capital have been reduced to Rs. 3,467 million or by Rs. 933 million at the insistence of the Federation of Pakistan Chamber of Commerce and Industry.

Simultaneously, the total credit allocation for the private sector have been increased from Rs. 9,389 million to Rs. 9,846 million.

The working group of the NCCC which met in Islamabad in July 1981 to consider the viewpoints of its members, decided that private sector allocation for fixed assets should be further increased by another Rs. 485 million.

As far back as 1978-79, the NCCC decided to prescribe separate credit ceilings for financing fixed investment. In the following year, one-third of the credit allocation was earmarked for fixed assets in the private sector. In the first half of 1980-81, the practice was discontinued. It was then discovered that the commercial banks did not provide sufficient finance for fixed industrial investment. This led the Economic Co-ordination Committee to reimpose separate ceilings in respect of fixed industrial assets. Any shortfall in the credit ceilings for the fixed industrial investment, as directed by the EEC, will be deducted from the concerned bank's overall credit ceiling. Thus the private sector has been assured that credit allocations made for it for fixed investment would be forthcoming without any difficulty.

The provision of Rs. 2,137 million for working capital for private sector for current fiscal year constitutes about 10 per cent of the total advances of over 20 billion dollars.

With an inflation rate of over 13 per cent and a projected growth of industry at 10 per cent the private sector believes there should be credit expansion of at least 20 per cent for meeting its working capital requirements.

They believe that by restricting working capital, the growth rate of industrial sector may be hampered.

As a result of the lower domestic credit expansion during 1980-81, the overall monetary expansion truned out to be 13.7 per cent as against the original projection of 14.2 per cent and revised estimate of 18.4 per cent made in January 1981.

The original credit plan for 1980-81 stipulated credit expansion of Rs. 12,500 million of which government and public sector accounted for Rs. 6,800 million, Rs. 4,500 million for Government and Rs. 2,300 million for public sector enterprises. On the other hand, the private sector was allocated a credit expansion of Rs. 6,400 million which together with a saving of Rs. 700 million in "other items" made up the total.

After a six-monthly review, the NCCC, which met in January 81, raised the allocation for government and public sector enterprises to Rs. 9,728 million and that of the private sector to Rs. 7,400 million.

Figures available for June 1981 show that the actual credit expansion of Rs. 12,608 million was nearer to the original plan than the revised projection made in January 1981.

Government sector utilisation was to the tune of Rs. 7,765 million or 61 per cent of the amount earmarked and private sector availed of Rs. 5,711 or 45 per cent of the allocated sum.

The nearly 30 per cent shortfall in the actual utilisation of the revised credit projection and the sudden utilisation of large sums of money by the public sector enterprises during the last two weeks of the six-monthly closing in end-December 1979 and June 1980 convinced the relevant authorities that allocation for public sector enterprises should be slashed.

On the other hand, the lower utilisation of credit than anticipated by the private sector is mainly attributed to the shortfall of over Rs. 1,220 million in the target fixed for Cotton Export Corporation due to brisk exports. The allocation for the CEC was made separately within the overall ceiling fixed for the private sector. Trade bodies now want that the CEC allocation should be on account of public sector because CEC is a semi-government organisation.

The shortfall in the utilisation of credit in the private sector compared to the projected level was also attributed to a contraction of Rs. 227 million in IDBP credit mainly due to non-availability of external resources and improved recoveries.

Besides, the increase in outstanding credit of the Federal Bank for co-operatives and Punjab Provincial Co-operative Bank during the year under review of Rs. 348 million was less than half the estimated rise of 893 million.

An informal study by a trade organisation shows that monetary assets increased from Rs. 51.6 billion in June 1977 to Rs. 91.1 billion in June 1980, showing an increase of Rs. 39.5 billion in three years.

Excluding the net effect of foreign assets (aids, loans and home remittances) which account for 3.3 billion, domestic credit expansion amounted to Rs. 36.2 billion.

Credit expansion in the government sector of Rs. 19.3 billion was almost due to deficit financing (Rs. 17.7 billion) whereas commodity operations accounted for Rs. 1.6 billion only.

The private sector accounted for expansion of Rs. 13.9 billion whereas "other items" showed a negative growth of Rs. 3.6 billion.

Despite mandatory targets, commercial banks have failed to fulfil the credit targets for agriculture including small loans for farm production, small loans for business and loans for small industry.

During July 1980 to April 1981, figures show that on a proportionate basis, only 80 per cent of the target for agriculture as a whole was achieved, followed by 71 per cent for small industries and 48 per cent for small business.

In the previous three years – from June 30, 1977 to June 30, 1980 – bank advances for agriculture rose by 21.4 per cent for manufacture by 36.8 per cent for construction by 60.5 per cent, for commerce by 73.4 per cent for transport and communication by 132.3 per cent for services by 114 per cent and for "others" by 115.2 per cent. This indicates the emphasis the official credit policy has placed on various segments of the national economy with the rate of growth of credit expansion being the lowest for the commodity producing sectors like agriculture and industry.

ASSISTING FARMERS--Lahore, Oct 16--The Punjab Government has constituted 300 teams comprising the staff of PAD and SC and Field Assistant of the agriculture department, which would guide and assist the small farmers for boosting wheat production during the current rabi season in the province. This was disclosed by the Punjab Agriculture Minister, Brig (Retd) Ghazanfar Muhammad Khan in a meeting held here today. The Minister observed that the small growers, who constituted bulk of our farming community, were not in the habit of making judicious use of fertilizers as recommended by the agrarian experts. He said marked increase in wheat yield could be achieved by applying 50 lbs, each of the nitrogenous and phosphatic fertilisers per acre. They directed the members of the teams to work with dedication and missionary zeal to make the present wheat sowing campaign a real success. He expressed the hope that by coordinated and sustained efforts we could produce wheat in excess of domestic requirements and like rice, wheat could become a vital source of foreign exchange earnings this year.--APP. NEW TEXTILE MILLS--About fifty new textile mills with a combined installed capacity of over 700,000 spindles and 2500 looms have been set up during the past four years, it was gathered here today. Besides, available information show that 50,000 spindles and 11,000 looms are under installation. The expansion of the textile industry has been brought about by various measures taken by the present government to stimulate private investment. As a result of the concessions given in customs duty for balancing and modernisation of existing plants, knowledgeable quarters said by end of June 1981 an investment of Rs 300 million has been made by the management of the existing units. Similarly, a number of sick units have changed hands and many of them are reported to have improved their performance. In fact some of these units are reported to have improved the quality of yarn and are competing favourably with the Koreans in price in overseas markets. Thus the number of closed or partially closed spindles is estimated to be over 4 lakh spindles not accounting for the mills which have been completely closed or scrapped. STEPS TO INCREASED INDUSTRIALIZATION--Mr S. M. Askari Taqvi, Director-General of the Investiment Promotion Bureau, disclosed here yesterday that during the past two years an investment of approximately Rs 2,000 million had been made under the nonrepatriation investment scheme. Mr Taqvi who visited the Manghopir SITE Association yesterday informed the members of the Association that the pace of implementation of projects sanctioned under the nonrepatriable investment scheme was 50 percent. Mr Taqvi who held detailed discussion with office-bearers of the SITE Association, enumerated various steps taken by the present Government to accelerate the pace of industrialisation in the country. He also informed the members that the Government was taking measures to eliminate proceduralising for obtaining sanctions. Mr Taqvi said the list of restricted industries were being gradually reduced. He pointed out that 134 industries were placed on the restricted list three years ago. The number of such industries came down to 24 sometime back and at present the list had been reduced to 12 industries only. The restricted list he said was under constant review and if found necessary it would be further modified. [Text] [Karachi MORNING NEWS in English 8 Oct 81 p 5]

LIFE SAVING DRUGS IMPORT--Peshawar, Oct 8--Effective steps would be taken to import life saving drugs in NWFP and new importers in this field would be encouraged. This was decided in a meeting held under the chairmanship of Syed Zafar Ali Shah, NWFP Health Minister. The meeting was informed that introduction of new importers was necessary with a view to controlling drugs prices and ensure availability. It was pointed out in the meeting that NWFP Governor Lt-Gen. Fazle Haq was very keen to remove shortage of medicines in the market and had issued special directives to the provincial Health Department in this respect. The meeting decided that provincial government would contact Federal Ministry of Commerce through Federal Health Ministry for issue of more licences to importers in NWFP. The meeting was attended by Controller of Imports and Exports and Director, Health Services. APP [Text] [Karachi MORNING NEWS in English 9 Oct 81 p 8]

VIOLENCE AGAINST AFGHAN MUJAHIDS--An Afghan Mujahid allegedly shot dead by someone in the Sharea Faisal area, it was reported yesterday. The deceased was identified as Mohammad Naseem. He was living in the refugee camp of Peshawar and had come to the city two weeks back. The reports said that the body of the deceased was lying on the railway tracks on Wednesday. He was identified after his identity card was found on him by the police. The body was removed to a city mortuary and the post mortem finding revealed that he was shot dead by some one before his body was dumped in a desolate place of the railway tracks. A special investigation cell of the police has reportedly been formed to solve the mystery as two Afghan Mujahids were murdered in the city in previous cases. One was found murdered inside a mosque in the Liaquatabad area while another was murdered in Gujar Nala in the Nazimabad area. [Text] [Karachi MORNING NEWS in English 23 Oct 81 p 9]

BIG ARMS HAUL IN QUETTA--Quetta, Oct. 20: The biggest haul of illegal arms in Baluchistan was made by Land Customs Preventive squad last evening from a pick up (AB-1555) which was coming towards Muslim Bagh from Zhob side. The seized arms, mostly Darramade, include 109 rifles and 12-bore guns, 82 pistols, 11 revolvers, one sub-machinegun, and more than 10,000 rounds and magazines. The pick-up driver escaped from the scene but three others were arrested. The Collector, Land Customs, Baluchistan, Khalil Masood, told THE MUSLIM that his department had been getting information for the past two months that arms were being brought illegally to this area from the tribal areas of NWFP. He said he instituted a special squad for the purpose and also informed the Federal and Provincial Governments about the matter. The squad, including three Custom Inspectors, Qaiser Bagi, Chaudhery Dilshad and Sheikh Sattar, sighted a pick-up moving mysteriously on a narrow hill tracks between Zhob and Muslim Bagh. It followed the van and getting hold of them in a narrow valley recovered a huge quantity of arms. The pick-up has been impounded. It is learnt that the Chief Secretary, Baluchistan, and other concerned officials visited the Customs Collectorate to assess the situation of arms smuggling. FIRST CNG REFUELLING STATION--Pakistan's first Compressed Natural Gas (CNG) refuelling station is likely to be commissioned here within two months. The Hydrocarbon Development Institute of Pakistan sources told the APP that the station being set up near Kalapul is in final stages of completion. The Institute is introducing Compressed Natural Gas in the country to replace petrol and diesel in road transport. The sources said that the Karachi station would be able to convert daily fifty petrol cars and thirty diesel buses to run on CNG. Another pilot project will be set up at Islamabad where work is expected to start next month. On the basis of the results of the pilot projects, large scale utilization of natural gas would be made as transport fuel in the country to replace gasoline and imported diesel.--APP. 'AFP' CITES PHILIPPINE BANK REPORT ON ECONOMY

BK211236 Hong Kong AFP in English 1043 GMT 21 Oct 81

[Text] Manila, 21 Oct (AFP)--Rising imports, compounded by spiralling interest rates and weakened exports further burdened the Philippine economy during the first 9 months this year bringing to a staggering $15,369 million its total foreign debts during the period.

The latest Central Bank report on the Philippine economy showed the country's outstanding external debt swelling by 21 percent or $2,668 million from the year-end 1980 level of $12,701 million.

During the same period, the country's balance of payments [BOP] deficit widened by $150 million to reach $360 million. The BOP deficit rose by 71.43 percent over the $210 million registered during the same period in 1980.

The Central Bank attributed the further increase in BOP deficit to the sharp rise in the current account deficit to $1,663 million and the ever-growing oil import bil- which rose to the level of $2,037 million comprising about 39 percent of total import payments.

Exports comprising mineral products, forest products and traditional unmanufactured goods recorded sizeable losses and lowered by $90 million the recorded total export earnings of $3,414 during the period.

Imports, however, increased by $729 million or 16 percent during the period to reach a total of $5,396 million, according to the Central Bank report, which also noted the $329 million or 52 percent increase in the country's interest payments.

Short and long term net inflows, which amounted to $1,012 million prevented the further increase in the Philippines balance of payments deficit.

The inflow, the Central Bank said, came from combined external financing from non-monetary capital, monetization of gold and SDR allocations. It was also supported by non-merchandise trade and transfer accounts--growing by $90 million to $219 million--from incomes mostly of seamen and overseas contract workers.

The Central Bank report also noted the "significant abatement" in the country's inflation which declined from 19.1 percent the previous year to 13.2 percent as a result of cautious monetary policies and extensive efforts to cushion the impact of oil price increases on consumer goods.

The report also cited government financial measures implemented during the period to correct the fundamental weaknesses of the country's banking and credit system.

BRIEFS

CUSTOMS REVAMPED--First in the news is the reported revamp in the Bureau of Customs. Customs Commissioner Ramon Farlan made the biggest revamp so far in the Bureau of Customs yesterday. He shuffled eight district collectors and relieved the entire staff of the bureau at the Manila International Port. south harbor, to improve the service and prevent fraternizing with the public, which could lead to anomalies. Many of those relieved from the international port were reported involved in some irregularities. Affected by the district collectors revamp were the ports of Cebu, Iloilo, Legazpi City, San Fernando, Ilognon, Surigao, the Customs Postal Branch, Zamboanga, and the Manila International Airport. INTERIOR OFFICIAL SAYS NUMBER OF POOR COULD OVERWHELM NATION

Bangkok DAO SIAM in Thai 3 Oct 81 pp 3, 10, 12

[Text] At present, Thailand has approximately 10 million poor people who earn less than 2,700 baht per year. If we are not able to solve the problem of poverty, the number of poor will increase by about 1 million per year. Therefore, in the next 10 years, Thailand will have 20 million poor.

Mr Phisan Munsatsathon, undersecretary of the Ministry of Interior took part at the Faculty of Medicine at Sirirat Hospital in a discussion on "Thai Economic and Social Development Policy in the Next 10 Years" that would bring good health to all.

The nation's situation with poverty is such that the problem must be solved right away, because the number of poor grows every year, amounting to approximately 200,000 families. On the average, each family has approximately five persons. These people must struggle for their survival, by abandoning their fields and paddies to come to the cities as laborers and to make their living by inappropriate occupations such as prostitution.

If we just let the number of poor grow, in the next 10 years, about one-half of the nation's population will live in poverty. At that time, the people may rise up to solve their own problems by "simply rising up to take up arms."

However, in the current development plans, the government has made some policy changes, with a stress on rural development, especially in 37 poverty-stricken provinces. These areas are considered to be backward and so actions must be stepped up to give people there "enough to live on."

Mr Phisan stated that at present the Ministry of the Interior has responded to the government's policy and will act as the coordinator to solve the problems of poverty in the 37 provinces as fast as possible, notably in the matter of materials which the people there lack. This is "water" to help them be able to plant crops to support themselves as well as other services which the government should provide.

AIR CAVALRY REGIMENT TO BE FORMED; BUDGET PROBLEMS NOTED

Bangkok MATICHON in Thai 3 Oct 81 pp 1, 12

[Text] An air cavalry regiment will be formed prepared to fight a war in the eastern region, but there are budget conflicts.

Col Somphon Khongsomphong, new commander of the Army Aviation Center stated on 1 October that the Army Aviation Center has made plans to establish an air cavalry regiment and has proposed it to the RTA. It has been approved in principle. The air cavalry regiment shall be an air-mobile combat unit assigned to the Army Aviation Center. The Table of Organization and Equipment shall include three helicopter assault companies as the heart of the unit. It will have a mobile warfare capability by being able to quickly move troops in to hit the enemy hard. This will be suited to combat in Thailand's eastern region.

The Army Aviation Center commander said, "In one company there will be from 8-12 helicopters on standby. Each attack helicopter platoon will have 8-12 helicopters. We are requesting that the attack helicopters have a beginning organization date in 1982 and we will try to get this project accelerated as much as possible to be prepared to fight the external enemy. However, we have a problem in that our country is poor and we have to use a big chunk of the budget."

Concerning the amount of budgeted funds that must be expended, Col Somphon pointed out that it would be necessary to spend many hundreds of millions of baht because each helicopter costs 34 million baht not including weapons. It is necessary for us to have attack helicopters to fight tanks. At this time [we have] about 25 helicopters. There is no problem with pilots; we have enough.

SOVIET AMBASSADOR INTERVIEWED ON RELATIONS WITH THAILAND, KAMPUCHEAN PROBLEM

Bangkok SIAM RAT in Thai 2 Sep 81 p 5

[Interview with Yuriy Ivanovich Kuznetsov, Soviet ambassador to Thailand]

[Text] [Question] The world situation and relations between Bangkok and Moscow have changed greatly and rapidly. What are your views on these subjects?

[Answer] I would like to begin with international matters and from there go on to relations between our two countries.

At present, there are problems in that the United States has begun the foundation for the all-out production of neutron weapons including the installation of neutron weapons in various places. As is generally known, the Soviet Union made an announcement via TASS on 14 August 1981, which has been widely disseminated.

Our protest also appeared in announcements by Leonid Brezhnev on two or three subsequent occasions. In March 1978, the Soviet Union proposed to the Commission on Reduction of Forces headquartered in Geneva that a protocol be drafted on halting the production, installation and use of nuclear weapons. We feel that this document is of special significance and we will continue to be active in bringing this protocol to fruition. We wish to explain that the decision of the United States on neutron weapons is a very dangerous one which will be the cause for more competition in nuclear weapons, creating the risk of nuclear war.

We are not the only country to have such a resolution before the United States; there are serious struggles going on in several countries of Europe, which is understandable given the U.S. decision to install this weapon in Europe. This threat exists not only in Europe, because people in Washington have also said that they would seek opportunities to install this weapon in the Middle East and in the Indian Ocean. Aside from that, there are nuclear-armed U.S. submarines on patrol in waters all over the world. This means that there is a threat to every nation.

The United States has claimed that its policy of producing nuclear weapons is one of limiting destruction and that it would attempt to exercise the right of use of this weapon to solve political and military problems in various areas of the world. It claims that there is a Soviet threat. The United States is trying to scare the whole world by claiming that the Soviet Union will invade Europe or the Middle East or other regions in Europe and so it would have to use these weapons in order to stop Soviet tanks. All of this is a propaganda coup for the U.S. military.

In the last 30 years, the United States has never abandoned these claims and it is necessary for it to use this line further in order [to serve] its plans of expansion and to protect its interests on all continents by pressuring U.S. allies to act in accordance with U.S. plans.

The Soviet Union has taken and is taking steps in line with the fact that the important responsibility in this world is to protect and defend peace. It is necessary to absolutely prohibit the production and installation of neutron weapons. We still have enough time to do that and the movements of nations the world over will force the United States to abandon this idea.

Neutron weapons are not simply a matter between the United States and the Soviet Union, but they concern every country in the world.

[Question] At this time, Thailand is being visited by a great many U.S. delegations. What are your views on this?

[Answer] One can sum up U.S. actions in this region by saying that while the Soviet Union supports good relations and broad contacts among all nations, it is not surprising that the United States would have to send visiting delegations to increase its relations. However, when one considers the announcements by U.S. officials, one can see that these delegations are interested in other matters, aside from trade or cultural matters. The United States is still probably talking about its views of installing weapons and repeating the Soviet threat. The United States has to provide military assistance and maintain alliances that are 30 years old. In fact, the agreements made since 1954 have lost all significance. The Soviet Union and its allies are a threat to no nation in this region, but we have always supported the beginnings of a peace process in the countries of this region, especially by making this region a zone of peace. Therefore, I feel that behind the feverish activity of the U.S. delegations, there are other purposes to the contrary.

Every day, the United States strengthens its forces in every part of the world it views as most important: those with natural resources and in line with its strategic interests.

According to announcements by Washington officials, Southeast Asia is felt to be an important area for U.S. interests. Why is this? The answer is that there is tin, rubber and other natural resources here. Secondly, the shortest distance between the Pacific and Indian Oceans lies here. These are the reasons why the United States is trying to pressure the nations of this area politically and militarily; so as to bring them into line with U.S. policy.

[Question] To what extent will the Soviet Union make more efforts to help the Thai economy, especially to promote exports which Thailand is trying to sell worldwide?

[Answer] Over the past 2 or 3 years, we have had very good trade [relations] with Thailand and trade between the two countries has increased greatly. Even reports in Thai newspapers now show that trade between the Soviet Union and Thailand has increased greatly.

In the first half of this year, the Soviet Union has purchased more of some of Thailand's principal products than other countries, especially two important items: rice and sugar. We are also determined to buy many more goods from Thailand in the future, but this must depend on quality, price and timing. However, in general the Soviet foreign trade organizations are quite satisfied with the quality of Thai agricultural products. Therefore, we see that the future for Thai exports to the Soviet Union is pretty good.

[Question] We are concerned about energy problems. Although we have some hopes concerning natural gas, it is still important and necessary to procure alternate energy sources at this time. What plans does the Soviet Union have to help Thailand in solving the energy problem, an important economic issue?

[Answer] You are correct in being concerned about the energy problem, which is a worldwide problem, not only for Thailand and the Soviet Union. Scientific research to find alternative energy sources other than oil, such as solar power, wind power and others is something on which we now have Deputy Prime Minister Maj Gen Praman Adireksan visiting the Soviet Union as a guest of the USSR Government. He has expressed interest in seeing our efforts to solve the energy problem.

We have no secrets in this matter and we think we could cooperate with the Thai Government in working together on development of energy from Thailand's oil shale. We have welcomed many Thai delegations who have come to see our work in this sector.

We have submitted a firm plan to the Thai Government. The only thing left is to start implementing things along these lines. We think this could be done in terms of the aforementioned cooperation.

[Question] Concerning relations between Thailand and the USSR...

[Answer] Relations between the USSR and Thailand have grown and progressed gradually, bit by bit I can't really cite a clear example of this, but I believe things will grow in the future. However, I see that we have a firm basis on which to make our relations grow in some areas and we are ready to promote and encourage these. This year, we have had numerous Soviet delegations visiting Thailand, most notably that of the Supreme Soviet, the highest legislative body with the ultimate power in the nation. Aside from that we have delegations from cooperatives, which have proposed cooperation with Thailand's cooperative movement. We have also had women's delegations come for visits and bilateral discussions.

For these reasons, in April, we had discussions at the foreign ministry level in Bangkok when Mr Firyubin, Soviet vice foreign minister, came. Both Thailand and the USSR felt that it was important to continue these discussions in the future.

These are the results of our bilateral relations over the past 8 months, aside from those matters mentioned previously.

[Question] What are your views about reports that a new Thai communist party has been established? According to reports, they use the name "New Party." The party has a base of operations in Indochina, close allies supported by the Soviet Union.

[Answer] First of all, I would like to tell you that I don't know about this and there is no way to link this to the Soviet Union.

Generally speaking, in theory, setting up a party is an internal matter for that country, especially in that the party being established must serve in its capacity as the representative of the people, or said another way, to serve the interests of the nation. But when I think about this, it is not likely that a party has been established outside the country to be compelled to come in and operate internally. That party would be the ultimate farce, a phony organization which could not exist because it would have no base whatsoever inside the country.

As to news reports about the establishment of this new party, I think they probably are fabrications. I personally think that China has the most interest in fabricating this matter, because China is trying to find an excuse for its support of subversive groups in every corner of Asia.

During his visit to Thailand, China's Premier Zhao Ziyang stressed that China's policy was to cement relations with these subversives, by claiming that if they didn't, the Soviet Union would do so. We can view Zhao's comments from two perspectives:

First, China is trying to blackmail the countries in this region once again by raising the so-called Soviet threat.

Secondly, China is trying to make the excuse that China is correct in trying to interfere in the internal affairs of the nations in this region. We have protested this to the fullest.

We feel that a situation cannot be permitted whereby a country pursues a two-track contradictory policy: a state-to-state policy and a party-to-party policy. The Soviet Union has one policy. The party and the state policy must be the same, because the party policy is made in the party congress and this is firmly set, disseminated and the government must implement relations with various countries as stipulated by the resolutions of the party congress.

[Question] I would like to know your views on Kampuchea and the fighting along the border with Thailand which has caused losses and death to Thai property and people. As Vietnam's large ally, how will the Soviet Union help relieve the hardships in this matter?

[Answer] Did you know that the present government in Phnom Penh has been in existence for 2 and one-half years? The important thing is that the Kampuchean people support this government. Any effort to change this government will be fruitless. All others are not the political leaders of the Kampuchean people. They are only "political corpses."

The issue of the withdrawal of Vietnamese troops from Kampuchea is not the main problem so long as there is interference from movements outside the country against Kampuchea. I believe that Vietnam will stay in Kampuchea as long as there is trouble from the armed groups on Kampuchean soil. These groups are causing hardship for the people of Kampuchea and are also causing problems for the Thai people.

I wish to ask you who is firing weapons into Thai territory. This matter must be studied carefully. I doubt very much that Vietnamese troops are intentionally firing into Thai territory. However, in order to put this problem behind us and to avoid trouble, I think it is necessary to eliminate all these trouble-makers along the border as soon as possible.

FACTORS CAUSING 'STAGFLATION' EXAMINED

Bangkok THE NATION REVIEW in English 7 Sep 81 pp 9, 10

[Excerpts]

THE THAI PEOPLE will be hit by "stagflation" and a significantly higher cost of living for the rest of this year and next year. Several factors, including the July 15 baht devaluation by 8.7 per cent, will play havoc with the people's pocketbook.

For one thing, the series of increases in power and water fees have already put a dent in the people's cost of living.

By all estimates, the increase in the Consumer Price Index (CPI) for the whole of 1981 would at least 19.2 per cent. And if the effects from the baht devalution was to be taken into consideration, three to five additional per cent would have to be taken into consideration.

All in all, it would be safe to state that the CPI increase rate for 1981 would be in the range of 22 to 24 per cent, compared with 19.7 per cent in the previous year.

Economic stagnation and inflation have combined to put the country's economy in a state of stagflation. Figures for the first six months of this year clearly showed that the country suffered a trade deficit of 32,770 million baht, compared to 20,600 million baht in the same period in the previous year.

At the same time, the balance-of-payments picture was also grim. The deficit in this respect shot up to 5,262 million baht compared to a surplus of 14,495 million baht in the corresponding period the previous year.

Another major feature which affected Thailand's economy was the severe case of capital flight which seriously plunged the country's international reserves to a new low.

The May 12 and July 15 baht devaluation, with all factors taken into consideration, may well produce more disadvantages than merits, especially in terms of resolving trade and balance-of-payments deficits, as was contained in the claim of the government.

The fact that Thai goods would be cheaper in the market abroad do not necessarily mean that we would be able to sell more. Many other factors come into play.

Thailand's export pattern is generally considered at a disadvantage compared to other countries due to the fact that more than 50 per cent of our exports still comprise primary goods in the agricultural fields and mining. Productions and elasticity in response to market fluctations are far from consistent.

Thailand's imports, on the other hand, are mostly capital and industrial goods. About 75 to 80 per cent of the imports are still those items important to national development.

All in all, 1982 will continue to witness problems related to Consumer Price Index and cost of living increases, especially with OPEC making more efforts to wipe out the oil glut condition which had put a dent in their previously strong position.

That's an outside factor. But internally, production costs will continue to rise, while real income of the people on the average would not go up by any significant level.

FOREIGN INTEREST RATES STILL HURTING

Bangkok THE NATION REVIEW in English 7 Sep 81 pp 9, 10

[Article by Sopon Onkgara]

[Text] The prevailing tight money situation has threatened to refuse to go away. As time passes, complaints about the money squeeze in the financial and business communities grow louder. They are hoping for a sort of "miracle" which would prevent the government from taking a new step which could make things worse.

The fear is that such a step would be on a "pitfull" thus pulling the national economy to unfathomable chasm.

A lot has been said and discussed among financial pundits as to what are really the causes of tight money. The government has introduced various measures including restriction of credit facilities, devaluation of the baht, exemption of withholding tax, but the situation remains at unsatisfactory level.

Businessmen said that tight money derived from several factors. They identified these causes as the downing of business and less velocity of money. It has happened that all sectors of business operations seemed to have wanted money at the same time to boost the degree of liquidity which has dropped to an almost below zero level.

Another is inflation. People have no savings deposits which are the cheapest source of fund. Savings cannot mobilize enough to satisfy demand for loanable funds. The situation aggravated when commercial banks took step to "be careful" with lendings while "recalling" loans to boost their own liquidity.

But speculation was rife that commercial banks took this step as a retaliation against the squeeze applied by the Bank of Thailand on discount facilities. Commercial banks, certainly denied that they had "initiated" such a move as it would worsen the economy in general.

All seemed to blame recession – the overstock of products while there is less demand because the purchasing power of the public has been declining. The present off-balance of cash flow warrants more finance to boost liquidity.

But the accusing finger seemed to be on the high interest rates abroad. There has been no inflow of foreign funds to generate reasonable degree of liquidity but instead there has been more outflow of fund as local borrowers tended to settle their lendings in the wake of high interest rates making the whole business very expensive.

Another factor, they said, are balance-of-payments and trade deficits. This means even more outflow of cash leading to tight money.

But Assistant Governor of the Bank of Thailand Chawalit Thanachanan said that high agricultural production this year has led to more demand for fund by the business community to buy farm produce. Despite mobilization of funds by commercial banks which increased by 22-23 per cent over the previous year the amount still could not cope with the surge in money demand.

But he agreed that high interest rates abroad was a major factor which led to tight money. There has been less inflow of foreign capital because commercial banks had thought that they could rely on local loans which offered lower interest rates. Commercial banks, he said, in turn scrambled for cheap funds which were also needed by big business operations which previously sought foreign capital and turned to local sources when foreign interest rates were less attractive.

Economists did not just criticize government policy. They came out with various suggestions which they also admitted were also unpalatable if they don't have disastrous effects on the economy.

The first was that they called for better economic performance of the government while saying that such a achievement is "difficult" under present circumstances.

They called for better balance of trade and payments which is again "very difficult" to succeed unless the government is bold enough to take drastic measures to curb imports. This again would lead to retaliation by other major exporting countries which tend to impose protectionism against cheap imports from developing countries.

Reduction of inflation rate is another point called for. They were blunt enough to say that this would be "impossible" to achieve. Some have already laughed at the 15 per cent inflation rate predicted by Deputy Finance Minister Phaichitr Uathavikul who said that it would be the maximum for this year.

Another "drastic" measure which may be taken by the government is to increase domestic interest rate. Many have speculated that this will be one of the two options available. But they see this as another "impossible" because of political prohibition.

Already the Central Bank has come out with many statements denying that it would take such a move because foreign interest rates are on the decline. However, economists argued that the strain might overcome the government's ability to contain the situation before interest rates come down.

Another option of the two is further devaluation of the baht. Economists said that this move would "only drive the whole economy to hell" and call for more outcry from businessmen who have already complained about huge losses immediately after the devaluation of 8.7 per cent on July 15.

The best solution, economists said, is to only "pray" for the lower interest rate structure abroad. This will not be only harmless to the economy but instead will prop up what is moving on the downslide.

Assistant Governor Chawalit expected the same thing. He believes that interest rates in the United States would come down as a result of pressures from various directions, especially from the American automobile and construction industries.

He also denied that the Central Bank would raise domestic interest rates to attract inflow of foreign capitals. "This would only hurt business and industries and affect the investment climate," he said.

All points taken; it is obvious that all praying for lower interest rates abroad which may prove to be the light at the end of the tunnel amidst the darkness many are fumbling for a way out.

BURMESE BORDER TRADE DECLINES

Bangkok THE NATION REVIEW in English 8 Sep 81 p 3

[Text]

MAE SOD, TAK – Traders in this Thai-Burmese border town have been complaining about the deteriorating trade with their Burmese counterpart in the wake of devaluation of Thai and Burmese currencies.

Take Governor Charoensuk Silapan said the traders claimed that trading in the district had, during the past recent months, dropped by 30-40 per cent.

The purchasing power of Burmese traders for Thai goods had diminished, he said, adding that clothing, canned food, soap and detergents had been in a great demand by Burmese traders initially.

The Burmese traders sold only forest products including honey and animal skins to Thai people at the border, the governor said.

Charoensuk said he met early this month with some 30 farmers who expressed their desire to set up a trader group to monopolize trading with the Burmese along the frontier.

He said the monopoly of border trading would affect Thai and Burmese relationship as well as Thailand's economy in rural areas since it would eliminate the chance of other traders in selling their goods to the Burmese.

This, he added, might lead to a misunderstanding by the Burmese Government – that Thailand has changed its trade policy.

Charoensuk admitted that the smuggling between Thailand into Burma through the border was still prevalent.

He said he had instructed provincial authorities to keep close watch on smugglers.

COL CHAMLONG INTERVIEWED ON PERSONAL PHILOSOPHY

Bangkok THE NATION REVIEW in English 4 Oct 81 p 10

[Report on interview with Col Chamlong Srimulang, secretary general to the prime minister, by Pira Sudham]

[Text]

WE MET last Sunday morning, before he would be leaving for the United States on tour with Prime Minister, Prem Tinsulanonda. He was busy preparing notes for his religion affairs when I arrived at Wat Santi-Asoke, Klong Goom, where he attends to his duties every Sunday when he is free.

The temple seemed to be more crowded than usual for now over five hundred people are gathered there to observe the ordination procedures of the new monks.

We sat quietly among the gathering of the devout Buddhists, the newly converted, and the visitors from all walks of life, young and old.

Later on we talked. Tell me of 'peace' then, I said to him. This is how he began:

"Of peace I did not know it whether it is a peace of mind or tranquility of the surroundings when I was young for I was born amidst the tumult of Bangkok in the year 1935, holding an ambition to be successful in a military career.

"I think my life began when I met a lovely girl in a rugby match. She was among six or seven girlfriends of hers, and to me she was the most beautiful. I found out in time that she was in her final year at Triam Udom Highschool. As for me you could say that I was neither handsome nor bad looking but I sought to be diligent and helpful to my parents.

"You might think I am boasting should I tell you that in all the examinations that I took, I came first until in the Military College, I sometimes took second or third, but mostly I came out on top and my name has been engraved on gold plaques of the College. I never once played truant, sneaking out of the school through a hole in the fence. As a good all-rounder, both in class and in behaviour, I collected prizes and praises. In sports, it seemed that I was not made to be a forefront athlete though I did try for I also wanted very much to excel in sports as well as in the classroom.

"In time I got to know her and eventually I managed to change her mind for she intended to keep up her celibacy for all the rest of her life. She was a strict Buddhist and when we became friends, she asked me to uphold the silas as set for his followers by the Lord Buddha.

VOW

"I stopped smoking, drinking, and chewing gums and lozenges. We made a vow that we would not seek to be out together seeing movies or indulging in other forms of entertainment which wasted our time. In this way we helped each other and she also did very well in her studies.

"In the fifth grade of the Military College I was appointed the leader, honoured as the representative of the college to appear in parties outside in various occasions. Responsibilities were increased and I became outstanding, maybe too outstanding when I tried to make good for all.

"How little did I know then that by being too outstanding and doing good for all could get one into somebody else's way and bring only trouble to oneself. Some people were trying to find fault, and when I organized a movie show to raise fund for the college, it was considered wrong and I was therefore punished by not being able to receive, upon graduation, my sword till three months later after other graduates received theirs. And my rank of the leader was stripped and I was placed at the bottom of the rung of the ladder. Since then I became aware of how one could lose honour at the wave of a hand. What is honour and position and namesake when a mere stranger or an enemy could take them away with the wave of a hand?

"When we were married we tried to save for a house, and after graduation, I sought extra income by teaching in my spare time. Then I won an award to study in a military academy overseas. Upon my return to Thailand I was ordained a monk, following the tradition more than anything else; once more I took first in a Dhamma examination while in the monkhood, but what I valued for having been a monk was that I managed to discard the belief in amulets, talismans, and magic.

"I was noted for my frankness; being outspoken does not bring popularity to one. While in the temple I could not hold my tongue, criticizing those monks who merely used their tonsure and yellow robes for personal gain, behaving unlike good monks who observe the 227 rules set for them by the Lord Buddha.

GOAL

"My worldly goal at the time was to have a piece of land on which we hope to build our own house. At the time we were accommodated by the government, to the dismay of my wife's mother who worried that her daughter would not be comfortable. She hardly believed that I would be a good bread-winner since she held that "wives of military personnel count the bottles while wives of policemen count bank notes."

"We spent our honeymoon at Bangsaen and thought we were very happy. Soon after that I left for Hawaii where I spent six months studying, and later I travelled widely in every direction in search of worldly happiness. On returning we bought a second-hand car from an adviser who was leaving Thailand for home, but we were short of money. Deciding that a car was more necessary than a diamond ring which is only a piece of stone, we sold the diamond wedding ring and bought the car. Since then I have never thought of buying my wife a ring.

"We love this car so much that when it is out of order we feel as if one of our loved ones are ill. When the car is scratched, we feel like someone had wounded our hearts. And this car has been with us up to now for 25 years. It goes to show that I too suffered all that time the power of possession, of attachment to material things as well as to persons.

"We stayed in the house provided by the government for a year until when someone high up thought that we would be too comfortable, so there was an order for us to move out and to live in one of the shophouses. I decided to take my wife out of the city to live in the midst of the rice fields of Ladprow. At that time when we built our hut, there was no electricity and water supply or neighbours.

"For three years we lived there where we used a kerosene lamp for light and bathed in a pond, watching the sunrise and sunset. Then the urge to have a decent house to live in made us take a loan from a bank to build this "dream house," despite the fact that we would have to spend years to repay the debt. Fortunately we don't have any children while we were trying to accumulate things which society expects us to have.

"How lost we were then, wallowing in the mire of craving, taking pride in having a car, a house, not realizing that we were travelling in a different direction of that of Lord Buddha's.

As I move on in life and up in the military hierachy, I began to see that I am more lost, devoting too much of my life to the worldly pleasures. At this point we began our quest to find our way back, seeking out famous abbots or the widely acclaimed monks in various temples, only to discover how lost and 'worldly' some of these monks are, until we came to Wat Santi-Asoke.

DISCOVERY

"Through a recommendation from a friend we finally discovered this unique temple in 1979. Prior to this discovery, we only heard that the monks who are admitted to this temple wear dark brown robes and that, when going out for alms in the morning, they hold a very composed air which makes them different from monks of other temples.

"When we made our first visit to Wat Santi-Asoke, it was beyond my expectation to find that all the monks here are vegetarians, taking only one meal a day. Having been a vegetarian long before this discovery, I knew then that we were making a step in the right direction to follow the Lord Buddha.

"We found out further that the monks of Wat Santi-Asoke have a direct approach to Buddhism; they do not accumulate material gains and that they follow strictly the rules set up for them by the Lord Buddha. I could be proud verging on being arrogant, but not now, now that we have found the direct and correct way to be true Buddhists.

"I sometimes walk bare-footed following these venerable monks when they go out for alms, and join others to wash the dishes after we have taken our vegetarian meal at Wat Santi-Asoke. Not for long after the first visit to this temple, my practice and the observation of the silas or precepts progressed rapidly. From the 5 silas I began to take on the 8 silas which are: not to destroy life, not to steal, not to commit adultery, not to tell lies, not to take intoxicating drinks, not to take a meal beyond noon, not to sleep on materials made for comfort, not to adorn one's person with scent, cosmetics and seeking to be entertained in any form.

"Both my wife and I now uphold chastity and sold our two-storied house and furniture which once we were so proud of. We built a simple house near this temple and live with bare necessities; there is only a desk there for me to sit and work, but otherwise no chair, no table, no bed.

ONE MEAL

"We sleep on the hard wooden floor. I eat only one vegetarian meal a day, prepared from home and taken to eat at the office. We rarely receive guests at home, but you are welcome if you care to visit us. The house is just across the lane from here. And you shall see the 25-year-old car, the Nash Metropolitan model, a relic to our sense of value held in those days.

"Now I drive a 12 years old Fiat to work. I leave my home at 6 am and arrive at the office at about 6.45 and begin my work. As Secretary General to the Prime Minister, I coordinate with all Ministers and follow up on the orders of the Prime Minister. I must see everything clearly and prevent my personal affairs from entering into my office work. Being what I am, I am aware all the time that praises, honour, flattery, ranks and a sense of grandeur are transitory, while attacks gossips, criticism born out of ill-will or avija (ignorance — my own translation) have no effect on me. When you decrease you food intake to only one meal a day, you can decrease greed, lust, and anger, the craving for more.

"I moved from the big house on a 200 square was to a shack on a 50 square was. Following the silas make you diligent, not lazy, and you become less selfish or corrupted. Once a construction company offered to bribe me with millions of baht so that I would put its project on top priority for the Prime Minister to pass, but I declined the offer. This company wanted to jump the queue so that it would not have to pay a huge sum of money on interest.

"I know you would ask this question. Yes, I have had a role in re-enforcing the laws on closing hours of nightclubs, bars, and other places of abaiyamuk. It is a matter of law enforcement because the law on closing hours states the time of opening and closing, one wishes to see that the law is law.

"At issue are not only the curbing of places of ill-fame and gambling dens, but an attempt to re-educate the people on the right concept of making merits. Being a Buddhist devotee does not mean one should make a generous contribution or donations towards contructing the biggest Buddha images in the world, or spending a lot of money on food to offer to monks. A great deal of fund has been wasted on misguided charities and donations.

AWARENESS

"Yes, I am well aware that my position is but transitory. In the morning I walk up the steps to my office in the Government House and in the evening I walk down. I have been criticized for being too strict and devoted to Buddhism in my position, that in such a position the seat should not be given to a person like myself.

"On the contrary, I believe that the higher the positions are in government, the more control one should put on oneself. If I was not what I am, or if you were me, would you have already accepted some million baht offered as a bribe to push a construction project forward? Would you grant a concession to mine, to deforest, to set up refineres, to overlook so many other mishaps?

"Why would I want millions of baht offered to me when I, with my own volition, give up two meals a day, when I try to decrease my wants, moving from a big house to a shack near this temple? The police will not arrest me if I eat three meals a day.

PURPOSE

"What is the purpose of being satisfied with the bare minimum of neccessity? First of all when you take very little, you shall have a lot left to plough back to society. As far as my practice in Buddhism is concerned, it frees me from greed, from craving for more, whether it is tangible or intangible matters. I attach no value to 'having', or 'owning', and because I am married, to have a harmony in our married life, I urge my wife to also observe and strictly follow the silas and the Dhamma along with me, and now she does not use cosmetics, or dress to follow fashion or to be stylish. She also partakes of only one vegetable meal a day. Considered that she once attached so much value to comfort, luxuries, fashion, and was very fastidious in what she ate, she has come a long way.

"Both of us are very much at peace now in both religious and worldly senses. Praise, flattery, verbal attacks, misunderstandings, ill will fall on us but we attach no value to them. There is a constant flow of 'santi' and joy deep within us."

GEN PRAYUT GIVES REASONS FOR SELECTING ATHIT

Bangkok THE NATION REVIEW in English 1 Oct 81 p 4

[Text]

THE "RISING SUN" in the army has finally made his official presence felt. The official order naming him to retain the First Army Region Commander has just been signed. Lt Gen Arthit Kamlang-ek, newly-appointed Assistant Army Commander-in-Chief, appears set for the top army post next year when most top men above him will be retiring.

Army Commander-in-Chief Gen Prayudh Charumanee called a press conference yesterday to strongly defend his nomination of Arthit to play that influential and powerful "double role." There was some tough questioning from reporters. But Gen Prayudh fielded the questions with equally tough replies.

Why did he pick Lt Gen Arthit for both positions? Gen Prayudh, who himself assumed the top army post only last month, said:

"Under the present circumstances, my main duty is to preserve national stability, the people's welfare and a democratic system under the monarch. To achieve these goals, we must have good, honest and hard-working senior military men. The person to be First Army Region Commander must have several qualities, particularly honesty, integrity and devotion for the public..."

It was a long and ambiguous introduction. Gen Prayudh continued:

"Certainly, if I decided on a certain person, some people may be happy while others may be upset. But I based my judgment on justice and fairness. I want the country to survive."

The army commander-in-chief, holding his Press conference at noon at the Army Auditorium, added: "You are concerned about coups. Let me assure you that there will be no more coups since the image of the military has improved. Once that image is good, everything, especially national security, would be boosted. Therefore, the military wants to support a good, honest government which works for the benefit of the majority of the people..."

He went on for more than ten minutes before the first question was posed by reporters.

Does it mean that by appointing Gen Arthit as Acting First Army Region Commander, there won't be coups – and that the army would be strengthened?

"Yes. I believe that the army's image would be better. Although Gen Arthit assumes two posts at the same time, he will be drawing only salary of one position. But he will have to work twice harder. But he is a man of devotion..."

Gen Prayudh said he had several candidates in mind before arriving at a decision. "But I had to choose the man I thought was most suitable under the circumstances. At the moment, our priority is to improve on the image of the army. I am glad that I have good friends now in charge of the air force and navy. From now on, the armed forces will devote themselves to national security only – and to support an honest government for the sake of the majority of the people. We also want government officials to devote themselves for national progress..."

Gen Prayudh added: "We don't want the country to lose to the Communists, like the Indochinese countries. Therefore, we must be decisive. I am nobody's puppet. You'd better not write that I am the puppet of somebody."

Another reporter asked: "Sir, was that your very own decision – the retention of Gen Arthit in the First Army?"

Gen Prayudh replied: "We must be courageous enough to make up our own minds. I proposed Gen Arthit's name to the proper channels. If the superiors were not happy with my proposal, they could have objected to it. I sent it through the Supreme Command which in turn referred it to the Defence Ministry. Nobody could point his fingers at me. I myself didn't tell Gen Arthit that he would be nominated by me..."

Asked why he had nominated Gen Arthit to keep both positions, thereby centralizing authority in one person, the army commander-in-chief replied: "I am confident that Gen Arthit is a good man. He is a good soldier. The First Army comes under my jurisdiction. This acting post could be given out to the same person holding another position. The late Gen Amnart Damrikarn) held that post concurrently soon after the coup. I will consider later on whether a new person could be appointed..."

Were there any negative reactions in the army over this appointment?

Gen Prayudh replied: "I am happy that this time around, the reactions were not very noisy because most soldiers know what we are doing. They know we are doing the right thing. If you, the media, would look at it with an objective mind, you would also see the same picture."

Another reporter asked: "By appointing Gen Arthit to the two posts concurrently, were you suggesting that you were not too sure that there could be another general who could be as honest as Gen Arthit?"

"That's a good question," the army commander-in-chief said. "But I can't emphasize that point since it would be tantamount to putting the blame on others. Let me put it this way: For the time being, Gen Arthit is in a better position. So, he should be given a chance to be First Army Commander for a while. It's not because we don't have good people. But the question is: What's the best way out? We have to compare the merits of all possible candidates. But we must admit that nothing is perfect.

Then came the question which appeared to have incensed Gen Prayudh. "Some critics say that by appointing Gen Arthit to the two posts at the same time, the army might have lost ten good senior officers. Have you heard that too, sir?"

With a loud and somewhat excited voice, Gen Prayudh turned to the reporter who posed this question, and retorted:

"Who? Who made this statement? You must name him so that I could talk to him. Name him. If that some of the officers had been 'dug out of nowhere' to be put in senior positions. That only discouraged the persons concerned. For example, Lt Gen Paichit Somsuwan, promoted from the post as Defence Ministry's Accounting Chief to be Assistant Army C-in-C. He is a very capable man, and used to fight in the battlefields. He was made a major when he was only 25. That sort of fact was not mentioned by the critics..."

Gen Prayudh continued: "Gen Arthit, we must all admit, is a very competent man. Every army unit that he was assigned to head showed improvement. And that dates back to the time he was posted in the Northeast. You can check out his record. He is a fighter worth his salt. We all appreciate his ability..."

So, is the army commander-in-chief certain that there won't be any more coups?

"Yes, I am very confident. You know why? Let me tell you that the navy and air you don't name him, then he hasn't got guts. I have been accused of being a coward before. I want to meet a real man. Sure, some people might have been disappointed over the appointment. But I can't help it. Everybody wants to be army commander-in-chief. When I was named to that post, other people were naturally upset and I was naturally happy. That's fact of life..."

Asked about the observation from some quarters that a large number of senior officers from the Internal Security Operations Command (ISOC) were given promotions this year, Gen Prayudh said:

"Well, that's because some of them had attained the seniority required and, for fairness' sake, they should be promoted. We based our judgment on seniority. Some of the critics were being destructive when they criticized force commanders-in-chief are my close friends. And the country is heading in the right direction since officers who have been given senior posts are all honest and devoted. You can sense at first sight that they have no tendency towards staging coups. Why stage a coup after all?" Gen Prayudh said.

A reporter who couldn't resist the temptation to tease the army boss remarked: "Individually, they may not want to do it. But once a coup is staged, they would all join in..."

Gen Prayudh retorted: "Right. If the country is facing disaster, we would have to do it. We would have to stage a coup when the risk is high that we may become slaves of the Communists."

"Would that be the only reason for staging coups in the future?" another reporter asked.

"I don't know. If everything proceeds properly, there shouldn't be coups. Gen Arthit has told me that he wouldn't stage coups. I told him that's the right kind of thinking..."

EDITORIAL URGES INDEPENDENCE FROM U.S.

Bangkok SIAM MAI in Thai 17 Oct 81 p 5

[Editorial: "Policy Toward the Great Friend"]

[Text] Gen Prem Tinsulanon and his party have made their official visit to the U.S. which began 1 October and will probably return in the next couple days.

When Gen Prem has demonstrated clearly during this U.S. visit, whether in UN conferences, with the president or high-level U.S. officials or even in chats with Thai students abroad or with American business moguls whom Gen Prem went to persuade to invest in [Thailand] or even when he was quizzed by foreign newsmen was that concern over economic problems and the cost of living came first. Security problems and attacks from abroad were of secondary importance.

Moreover, Gen Prem appealed for sympathy from everyone he had an opportunity to meet with. He pleaded for sympathy while asking for help, a little from each. He asked that they give of their effort and spirit for the survival of the nation. Even for Bankok's bicentenial, Gen Prem hustled to do the public relations work to persuade foreigners to travel to Thailand in order to earn foreign exchange. This was one part of his speech to Thais abroad.

It seems that everyday Thailand confronts a sad state of affairs. The number of loans from abroad increases alarmingly by the day. High-ranking government officials, even the prime minister himself, constantly make known their anxiety in shamelessly appealing for sympathy to those they meet.

What is more worrisome is that, although it is known that they are at their wits end in solving problems, they still obstinately push to continue being the administrators of the country, Gen Prem himself does everything to remain in office, whether it is by controlling his previous positions in the armed forces to insure his power base or even by not taking responsibility for duties within his scope of responsibilities. He has never shown the slightest concern for the cries of those under his command or subordinates. What he has always shown in the exercise of his responsibilities has been a distracted look upwards. [naeng mong khun pai khang bon.]

In making this visit to the U.S. was Gen Prem fully aware that Thailand's status as an independent entity which had never been anyone's colony was because of an independence in making policy, in making alliances as equals with mutual respect, each acting as its own man?

We can wonder what the actual results will be when the time comes to implement the promises Gen Prem got from President Reagan, meaning the Manila Pact signed in 1954 or the ties resulting from the Thanat-Rusk agreements signed in 1962 if it affects American interests as Gen Prem gets senile, content with meaningless conversations.

At this time, the nation is having problems. Gen Prem's foreign policy is prepared to confront the reality. [It should] not tie itself excessively to following the backsides of some great powers; especially that of America because throughout the past, it is known among military officers that Gen Prem has given a secret order to producement sectors that they should buy only from the USA.

It is only by carrying out a truly independent policy not tied to any side and standing on our own two feet that we will survive.

GRANTING OF RICE EXPORT MONOPOLIES TO CORPORATIONS PROTESTED

Bangkok BAN MUANG in Tahi 2 Oct 81 pp 1, 2

[Text] Representatives from rice mills from all over the nation gathered to protest the Department of Foreign Trade having made 17 corporations the sole commission which controls consideration of distribution of rice for sale abroad. This would be the only group that would then monopolize the export of rice.

Around noon at the National Assembly yesterday (1 October) about 30 representatives from rice mills, led by Mr Charoen Unanan, president of the Association of Thai River Millers, met with government authorities who were led by Deputy Prime Minister Maj Gen Praman Adireksan. Other officials involved were Mr Prakai Phreuksarutanon, deputy minister of commerce, Mr Danai Dunlalampha, deputy undersecretary of commerce and others. Representatives from the people were coordinated by Mr Siri Thungthong an MP from Uthaithani.

The reason for the discussions was that rice mill managers complained that 17 rice export corporations who had been appointed on 11 August 1981 by the director general of the Department of Foreign trade to sit on a commission to consider the distribution of rice to be sold abroad were all rice exporters. It appeared that there were many problems over this. For instance, the price of milled rice had dropped further by more than 100 baht per sack. Aside from this, the group of 17 corporations still had the power to set rice prices both in domestic markets and abroad. They even had the power to request a decrease in the balance from the Ministry of Commerce, likewise claiming that the export price of rice had been lowered, asking for a drop in the premium and requesting permission to lower reserve stocks of rice. These actions would create losses in the nation's income.

For these reasons, rice mill owners all over the nation got together to invest money to form the Thai Rice Enterprises Corporation, Ltd. This is to be a corporation of the masses to help seek markets abroad. This would offset the power of the 17 corporations. Charoen Unanan added that the rice millers had to get together because they were under pressure from the group of 17 export corporations. The rice mills buy paddy from the farmers at government-set prices as the rice comes into the mills. Then the exporters claim that there are no markets and they don't buy rice from the mills. They buy only when they get a good price and the mill owners become the scapegoats. There are a lot of other examples of [mis] behavior by the group of 17 exporters. They don't trouble themselves to find markets because they consider themselves as having the sole right to export.

Therefore, the mill owners ask the government, especially the Ministry of Commerce to free up rice sales. Reporters asked that if this is done, would they be able to find rice markets since the 17 corporations have been selling and buying from each other for dozens of years. Mr Charoeun Unanan responded that markets are no problem and told reporters that the director general of the Department of Foreign Trade's remarks in an interview that the mill owners are complaining about this because of their own interests is not true. The mills had just received permission to register their rice trade enterprise on 25 September and got the actual document on 28 September, so what time was there to do anything, Mr Charoeun asked reporters.

Also, Mr Danai Dunlalampha, deputy undersecretary acting as the chairman of the Agricultural Product Price Administration Commission told reporters that the government will provide about 10,000 million baht to purchase rice from farmers in 1982 and would begin taking bids for rice purchases in 54 provinces throughout the nation. It is estimated that it will purchase about 11.4 million sacks of rice. After the bidding, the provincial authorities will send the results of the bidding to the ministry for its computer. The results will be sent to warehouse organizations, co-operatives and marketing organizations for their action.

As for the results of the meeting, after about one-half hour of discussion, Mr Siri Thungthong, discussion coordinator told reporters that the results achieved had been very satisfactory. Mr Dani agreed with representatives from the Association of Thai Rice Millers that from now on the ministry will provide 1.2 billion baht to purchase rice from the mills to correct the problems of the mills' inability to sell the rice. The rice mill representatives shall make agreements with the ministry of Commerce and warehouse organizations that the latter will purchase 5 percent milled rice from the annual wet rice crop at 714.70 baht per sack and 5 percent milled rice from the second crop at 645.90 baht per [100 kg] sack. A-1 broken rice will still be sold at the price previously set by the authorities and the mills may make agreements directly with the warehouses in any location.

As for the problem in which the millers' association was disatisfied with the Department of Foreign Trade having given an export quota to the 17 export corporations and wished to have some of the exports be given to the millers' association, Maj Gen Praman stated that it would be necessary to await the return from Europe of Minister of Commerce, Chuan Leekphai before negotiations could begin because this is something that must be taken care of by him.

MINING PROFITS DROP SHARPLY

Bangkok SIAM RAT in Thai 5 Sep 81 p 2

[Text] The Thai mining industry had an awful year. The top ore production and export figures for the first half of this year are very different from those of last year. Ore production has dropped by more than 2 billion baht.

The public relations section of the Ministry of Industry has revealed the results of its compilation of statistics on various types of ore production in Thailand for the first half of the year--January to June of this year.

It appears that Thailand has been able to produce ores of various types amounting to 6.657 billion baht, but this is compared to production for the same period last year, when Thailand was able to produce ores with a total value of 8.786 billion baht. Production dropped to the tune of some 2.129 billion baht.

In production for the first half of the year, an important ore for the nation, it seems that Thailand has been able to produce a total of 5.495 billion baht worth. Compared to that of last year, one sees that the production of tin has dropped by 20 percent.

This drop in production has resulted in the collection of only 1.728 billion baht in royalties in the last 6 months, a drop of 21.9 percent from that of last year. Last year, the government was able to collect 2.212 billion baht in royalties.

The drop in Thai ore production this year is due to the fact that national and internation economic conditions were not very good in the first half of the year. Moreover, production costs rose which forced the closure of dozens of mines, further decreasing the production.

EDITORIAL APPLAUDS THAI NEUTRALITY IN WORLD AFFAIRS

Bangkok MATICHON in Thai 8 Oct 81 p 3

[Editorial: "Thailand and the Third World"]

[Text] Prime Minister Gen Prem Tinsulanon gave a speech to the UN General Assembly in New York, USA on 5 October. There were some points worthy of mention: Thailand's attitude toward the threats to world peace and stability. These are important factors which receive the concern and support of the Third World. The problems are those of Namibia in southern Africa, the Palestinian problem in the Middle East and Arab lands seized by Israel, that of aggression in Afganistan and that of Kampuchea. It has been stressed over and over that all of these are a denial to those people of their rights.

In stating these attitudes, it must be considered that Thailand is increasingly coming into its own in the world political forum. All of these issues are backed by the two great powers in their entirety. They are issues in which third [party] nations are calling for peaceful solutions through international organizations such as the UN and other great power nations; because if we just let things go and force is used in another country, or if we let the unfinished business become chronic, there will be no peace or security in the world.

We especially agree with the Thai Government's political policy of turning itself away from all the great powers in order to stand on its own correctly and be neutral. In the past we have tended to always ally ourselves with the great powers, such as the USA, primarily. This has been done to the point where the domestic political climate in Thailand has changed with the political winds of that great power nation. Changes [have come] notably in the military sphere; in past coup d'etats, the great power nation has tended to interfere in the internal affairs of underdeveloped nations to [gain] political power, benefits in natural resources and other things for its own people and nation.

Another important issue is the matter of arms reduction. The prime minister pointed out that it is a most necessary matter. The world's expenditures in this sector for one year come to U.S. $500,000 million and there seems to be no end to it. We are ready to hope that the 2d extraordinary conference on arms reduction would help to fulfill this objective because the arms race is the cause of international conflict, reaping of profits and economic conflicts among various countries. Concerning these two important issues, we believe that at least the UN member states have become more clearly aware of Thailand's policies because of the statements and appeals of the head of the Thai government himself. This will demonstrate that the Thai government stands with the majority of the Third World which is protesting the great powers who support the creation of these problems which threaten world peace.

BANK OF THAILAND FINDS MINIMUM WAGE LAW WIDELY VIOLATED

Bangkok SIAM RAT in Thai 10 Oct 81 p 2

[Text] The Bank of Thailand has discovered that in 1980 more than 10 percent of the work force received less than the established minimum wage. In comparing increases, those of this year did not reach 200 baht per month while last year, workers' [wages] increased by 225 baht per month.

Bank of Tahiland specialists have reported their findings concerning wages for 1981-1982. They say that last year it was found that more than 10 percent of the work force out of more than 200,000 workers surveyed (workers in the industrial sector surveyed by the Labor Department nationwide number some 2 million in all) are still receiving less than the minimum wage set by the government.

Notably, in small enterprises in the northeast, more than 17.5 percent of the work force surveyed received wages less than those set by law. This percentage will rise even more this year.

The Bank of Thailand classified employees as follows: those paid monthly, daily, temporary day hires and contract workers. From the survey it was found that workers hired on contract got the highest wages.

Bank of Thailand specialists also compared minimum wage increases of last year and this year. They found that the increases this year, such as in Bangkok went from 54 baht to 61 baht per day. On the average, workers' wages did not increase by 200 baht per month while in October of last year, which saw a hike from 45 to 54 baht, workers' wages grew by an average of 225 baht.

FRENCH AMBASSADOR INTERVIEWED ON INDOCHINA POLICY

Bangkok THE NATION REVIEW in English 14 Oct 81 p 4

[Text] FRENCH AMBASSADOR to Bangkok Jean Soulier would not say it's a basic change in the French policy but Paris is clearly walking a subtly new path over the Kampuchean issue. "We don't want to cut off any possibilities which may eventually help lead to a negotiated political settlement in Kampuchea..." Soulier told The Nation the other day.

There have in recent months been signs of some "significant gestures" and a new approach: France has been reluctant to join the ad hoc committee set up during the International Conference on Kampuchea in July in New York. At the same time, the French door seems slightly more ajar for requests by Vietnam for economic aid following a two-year significant slowdown in assistance programme after Vietnam invaded Kampuchea in 1979.

The French government has, through the well-connected Vietnamese Ambassador to Paris Mai Van Bo, been getting numerous aid requests from Hanoi after the new Mitterrand Government let it be known that following a "slow-down" in French aid programme (part of the US$ 130 million deal signed by an economic aid agreement in 1976), France will consider, on a selective and case-by-case basis, proposals for assistance from Hanoi.

The Vietnamese invasion of Kampuchea in 1979 did put France in an awkward position. Paris turned "cool" and partially froze the assistance programme although a senior French diplomat maintained that French economic aid to Hanoi was never "frozen" but it was also pointed out that the grants and loans in the US$130 million protocol signed five years ago could have been spent much earlier. The last amount of the package was signed only about two months ago.

The new gesture by Paris may not underscore a drastic change in the French policy towards Vietnam over the Kampuchean stalemate "and we continue to be on ASEAN's side in the search for political solutions," said senior French diplomats who, however, insisted the Chinese line in "bleeding the Vietnamese" would not produce the desirable results.

France has been non-committal (together with Sweden) over the request by ASEAN and other countries to be a member of the ad hoc committee set up by the July 13-16 New York International Conference on Kampuchea. "Admittedly, we are cautious on this issue because we want to be certain that any decision we reach would not close the doors of possible dialogue with the Vietnamese," said another French diplomat.

Paris realizes that a decision would have to come some day — and soon — to decide on whether to be in the ad hoc committee or not. But she certainly doesn't want to be caught in a dilemma.

"For one thing, the new French Government has made it clear that we would be clear-cut in our public statements instead of being vague, offering nuances rather than specific statements. We have made it plain that we are against the Russian invasion of Afghanistan and we have been clearly against the Vietnamese invasion of Kampuchea. We, therefore, want a negotiated settlement," said Ambassador Soulier.

The basic philosophy and policy of the previous and present French governments might not have differed too vastly — but the approach and conduct apparently have taken some new twists.

The French are still talking these days of their "special relationship" with the Vietnamese, and they would not fail to point out at times the futility of the Chinese and the American policies in certain aspects.

Back in Paris, Southeast Asia may not rank very high in the list of foreign policy priorities but French diplomats handling Indochina and ASEAN would like to think that somewhere, somehow they should, and could, have an edge over the other major powers in dealing with the Vietnamese.

One senior French diplomat told me: "The Chinese and the Americans may think that they can bleed the Vietnamese. Of course, they may be able to do that but nobody would get anything out of bleeding Hanoi. We have to talk to them. We have experience in dealing with them..."

The French would like to appear realistic and pragmatic in their policy in this region. "We are not running in to say we would talk and help the Vietnamese but if possibilities arise which may lead to possible defusing of the tension, our policy is not to ignore them..," another French diplomat said. But he also admitted that there had been no signs of more flexibility from Moscow or Hanoi in the Kampuchean question.

A French diplomat went to the extent of saying that Moscow might eventually hold the final card in the whole scheme of things.

"The Soviet Union, of course, would continue to be on Vietnam's side. But at the same time, Moscow realizes that it need friends in Asia apart from Vietnam as well. Look at how Deputy Foreign Minister Nicolai Firyubin was sent out recently to this area to cultivate better relations with ASEAN countries. And don't ignore the signals from some of the allies of the Soviet Union in Eastern Europe which have been asked to try to develop closer ties with ASEAN countries in this regard at the same time. So, Moscow would have to think very hard as well about its own image among non-communist countries in the region..."

In the French viewpoint, Moscow could well, in time, balance off its relationship. But the complications must necessarily be taken into consideration.

"Somebody told me the other day," a French diplomat with long experience in the region said, "If there hadn't been the Afghanistan invasion, it might have been easier for Moscow to relax things in Kampuchea. But the dilemma is clear: If Moscow loosens its grips in Kampuchea, people would ask: Why not Afghanistan as well?"

There are frustrations in the tone of some French diplomats when they discuss the stalemate over the Kampuchean question. But they are very careful in stressing that Paris is behind ASEAN. "We won't take any initiatives. We would follow ASEAN's line. But the Chinese haven't changed an iota of its policy," commented another French diplomat based in Bangkok.

Their frustrations obviously also are linked to the deadlocked negotiations among the three Khmer factions which have gone nowhere in their sixth round of talks. The seventh round of the negotiations is due on Oct 28, this time giving more time between intervals so that each side could report back to its respective boss.

"Prince Sihanouk seems flexible enough, for some reasons, but the Khmer Rouge simply wouldn't change their stand. Son Sann obviously doesn't want to yield to any condition which may place him in a disadvantageous position," commented a French diplomat who has been monitoring the negotiations closely in the past few months.

"The Khmer Rouge say they are ready to talk about a coalition government but they insist on maintaining the old Democratic Kampuchean structure — the Presidium and the Assembly. Son Sann, of course, had presumed that the coalition talks would mean dissolution of the old DK structures and that they would agree on a new structure," the French diplomat said.

The French appear more inclined towards Son Sann, having declared that they would have nothing to do with the Khmer Rouge. Sihanouk, a close personal friend of French President Mitterrand, remains an alternative the French consider important.

Obviously, Paris doesn't bank too much hope on the Khmer tripartite negotiations in Bangkok. Neither does she believe too much in the International Conference on Kampuchea's ad hoc committee. The French, if they had a choice, may want to wait until there are some favourable signs of a more flexible stand from Moscow and Hanoi.

But then, the French diplomats all admit that they haven't detected any new signs of positive reactions from the Soviet Union and Vietnam.

BRIEFS

MORE BORDER POINTS OPENED--In Pakse, in the Lao province of Champassak, some 8,000 cubic meters of Sung trees have been felled, valued at 10 million baht or more. It is ready for shipment to the Thai bank. It appears that for the length of the Thai-Lao border on the Mekong River, the 2d Army has permitted the use of only the Tha Sadet docks in Nongkhai Province. The distance from Champassak to Tha Sadet is 400-500 kilometers, but if goods are shipped to the Thai bank at the Thakhek and Savannakhet docks, it is only 40-50 kilometers. There has been a lot of scurrying about among traders and MPs in the Waritchaphum area of Sakon Nakhon Province asking that border points be reopened. Efforts made in this matter while Lt Gen Lak Sakikhup in command of the 2d Army were answered by saying that one should let things happen step-by-step and then permission would be granted. Last week, the shipment of wood was allowed to take place, opening the border as a special case. The cost of signing the order to open the border as a special case. The cost of signing the order to open the border for this special case came to 2-3 million baht. [Text] [Bangkok SIAM MAI in Thai 17 Oct 81 p 1]

PROBLEMS OF SCHOOL DROPOUTS DETAILED

Jakarta MUTIARA in Indonesian 19 Aug - 1 Sep 81, Vol 249, pp 1-4, 15-16

[Article by Dr Antony Z Abidin: "Out of School Doesn't Mean Out of Hope"]

[Text] The question of school dropouts in Indonesia is indeed complicated and has even reached the critical level, according to Vice Minister Adbul Gafur. The total number of dropouts is large, while the causes vary. However, in fact dropping out of school is just like riding in a vehicle which breaks down in the middle of the road. In other words, dropping out of school does not mean losing hope or losing everything.

The total number of elementary, secondary, and university students who drop out of school still cannot yet be stated with precision. A discussion at the Joang Building in Jakarta in July mentioned the figure of 24 million young people who have dropped out of school. However, Dr Soelaeman Soemardi, an official of the National Planning Body [BAPPENAS] who is concerned with the education sector, thinks that we should stick to the results of the last census. Thus he estimates the number of school dropouts from elementary school to the universities last year was about 7 million, although Vice Minister Abdul Gafur estimates the figure at about 14 million.

In a cumulative sense the figure of 24 million may be correct, says Bunyamin Wibisono from the Indonesian Welfare Foundation [Yayasan Indonesia Sejahtera]. However, it must also be recalled that, of that total, there are certainly many who are working. It appears that those who drop out of school for the most part are to be found in the villages.

Dr Mochtar Buchori (LIPI) [Indonesian Science Foundation] thinks that children who drop out of school in the villages in general have the capacity to help themselves. Generally, they are able directly to go to work or to engage in farming, whatever the circumstances may be. The education that they have had is enough to meet their needs in dealing with life.

It is a different matter if they force themselves to continue their schooling in the cities and then fail when they are halfway through, with their education still incomplete, Dr Arief Budiman comments. In the cities there are not enough jobs for them. When they return to the villages, they don't like to work like village people. Their level of education is higher, and they are also accustomed to the city style of life. Arief recalls that Rendra describes this in the poem, "Seonggok Jagung" [A Pile of Corn], which raises this phenomenon. Our educational system does not end there, which means that it continues. Every person who has once been to school is under pressure to continue his education at a higher level, Arief Budiman says.

Clearly, not all people can complete an advanced course of study. There are many who stop when they are halfway there. According to Tunggul Siagian (a teacher in the PSKD system [Jakarta Union of Christian Schools]), the average basic education at the junior high school level (SLP) is enough for our society at this time. However, out of about 10 million youths of junior high school age (from 13 to 15 years old), there are still a large number who do not attend school at the SLP level.

The Educational and Cultural Research and Development Body (BP3K) reports that 1,172.130 students were attending school in the SLP system during the school year 1979/1980. In 1976 this figure barely exceeded 800,000 students, and of this total figure, 74 percent graduated and 73 percent went on to senior high school (SLA). Thus, a large proportion of them continues in school. A far larger number later chose trade schools, such as technical high schools (STM) and commercial high schools (SMEA), which respectively total 645 and 673 throughout Indonesia and had 235,586 and 211,223 students, respectively, in 1979. This proportion seems reasonable, although, on an overall basis, less than 90 percent of these students complete their education. For the youths who drop out of technical schools, of course they are better able to take care of themselves, compared to those who drop out of the regular schools.

Ability to Help Themselves

As stated by Tardi (18 years old), a student at a technical school in Jakarta, "I deliberately chose a technical high school because I thought it would be easy to get a job." According to Tardi, an STM student who drops out of school and already has a skill has no trouble in finding a job. Or, if he has the capital, he can open his own business.

Mas'ud (29 years old) says it was the same with him when he was still studying at the STM. He was convinced that he could not go on to a higher level of education. While he was attending school, he also worked, including work as a waiter in a restaurant. Later on, he opened a men's clothing store, which was rather successful. Basically a technicians, his capital was not only used for the men's clothing store, or for the women's clothing store managed by a younger sister, but now he has more than 20 pedicabs and a motorized pedicab [bemo]. Mas'ud, a pedicab proprietor in Surabaya, says: "At first, dropping out of school was a necessity for me, because the economic situation of my parents made it impossible to continue."

This does not mean that dropouts from senior high school [SMA] can't do the same thing. A dropout from junior high school can make a beginning for himself in business with a small amount of capital. Rizal (16 years old), together with his parents, owns a small shop in Pasar Genjing in Jakarta. Of course, he is convinced that his business will develop steadily, although slowly. At present he feels he has enough business experience, and this will be an asset for him in the future.

"What could he do, when it turned out that it was no longer possible for Rizal to continue his education," asked his father. Rizal dropped out of school when he was attending junior high school.

School Dropout: Unemployed?

Quoting the results of the BP3K study in 1980, the vice minister for youth affairs, Dr Abdul Gafur, told MUTIARA: At present there are at least 14 million young people who have dropped out of school and have no job. This figure tends to increase each year. To deal with the problem will clearly take time. It cannot be resolved quickly. The GBHN [not otherwise identified] is demanding the adoption of an overall, integrated National Youth Policy. Its components, which would be the basis for this strategy, already exist: a cabinet office under the vice minister for youth affairs; basic guidelines for the development of the younger generation, which previously did not exist; and an integrated system for coordination, based on Presidential Decision Memorandum 23 of 1979.

Beside that there is the Coordinating Body for the Development of the Younger Generation, chaired by the minister of education and culture, with the minister of internal affairs as his deputy, and with several cabinet ministers of the Development Cabinet as members. It is this body which will develop the national youth policy in an integrated way.

Several efforts have been made to protect the interests and to guide the efforts of school dropouts through occupational training, both by the government through the Ministries of Manpower and Transmigration and of Education and Culture, as well as by society itself.

In West Java there is a complete mobile unit which circulates down to the villages to provide electronic education to the young people. However, Vice Minister Abdul Gafur continues, after that, what? It is not easy to answer that, he repeats. Because, in fact, those who have been trained may again get into difficulty. Now, the Coordinating Body has established a team so that, in a comprehensive and inter-ministerial way a basic point of view can be developed in protecting dropouts. It is hoped that the results of the work of the team, headed by Dr Danang, will be complete by next September, in terms of the curriculum, the direction of policy, and the ways of implementing the policy.

According to Dr Mochtar Buchori, the dropouts only begin to be concerned when they cannot immediately find work. In other words, when they are unemployed. In this way two problems appear: the dropout (PS) as a social problem and the PS as an educational problem. For that reason his protection must touch on both of the two problems mentioned above. As a social problem, he comes under the jurisdiction of his home and his relations. There are not a few parents who enforce their wishes on their children, for example in the matter of choosing a school or a field of specialization. The parents are busy and don't pay enough attention to the development of their children. As an educational problem this involves the question of the educational system: how far can a student get help from his school in helping himself after he is no longer going to school.

Vice Minister Abdul Gafur says that, basically, the Commission for Educational Renewal has taken the view that technical training should have a place in the school curriculum. This view has been included in the basic concept. Based on this concept, laws will be developed, and it is on this basis that our educational system will develop. "It is hoped that it will be able to meet our development needs: that is, producing qualified workers," says Dr Abdul Gafur. Perhaps Austria is a good example, he adds. "In the general schools technical trades are taught, so that the graduate of junior high school who does not continue to senior high school can go on to work in a factory."

No One Can Be Blamed

Of the dropouts from elementary schools in the cities, 53.7 percent are a result of financial costs, in village areas the figure is less than that, 43.3 percent. That is based on a survey by the Central Statistical Office (BPS) in 1978. With the abolition of the SPP [not otherwise identified], the financial cost reason should automatically be found less frequently. Husin, of the BP3K, who was in touch with MUTIARA, says the reason for dropping out of school is not exclusively economic but is rather due to the lack of interest and related factors, which cause low school attendance. The causes, according to Husin, may be found in the child himself or in his surroundings.

From research carried out by the Faculty of Psychology of the University of Indonesia (1975-1976) concerning dropouts from senior high school in Jakarta, it has been learned that the reasons repeatedly given for dropping out of school by the dropout himself (a sample of 125 children) are: first, an unfavorable family economic situation; secondly, the influence of school friends; other reasons, a low level of intelligence, a wish to attend another school, or parents who don't urge him to study. The teachers (53 interviewed) have their points of view, in the following order: a lack of interest and encouragement to study on the part of the parents; an unfavorable family economic situation; the influence of friends; a low level of intelligence; and an inability to meet school standards. It appears that the economic reason is still dominant.

Dr Arief Budiman, speaking in almost the same terms as Husin, says that an unsatisfactory school atmosphere can also lead to school dropouts. As a school principal, Tunggul Siagian holds the view that the matter of interest and communications between the parents and the school is very influential for the student. It often happens that the teacher hopes that the parents will come to the school (for example, when report cards are distributed), but only the family chauffeur comes. This circumstance indicates a low level of interest on the part of the parents toward the education of their children. There are also parents who turn over all aspects of the education of the children to the mother. The father doesn't want to know anything about the matter at all. Equal interest on the part of the parents is certainly better.

Manurung, a well-known senior high school teacher in Jakarta, says: "At school we always try as best we can to teach and direct the children to be acquainted with order and study discipline. However, if at home their parents provide an example of living separate lives, that's all wasted."

From the point of view of the parents, Kaharuddin (43 years old), a member of the management staff of a rather substantial private business firm in Jakarta, says: "In fact, the children are lacking something, even if all their school needs have been met--and they don't have to take a crowded city bus--but surprisingly, their school is still unsatisfactory." Kaharuddin admits that relations between teachers and their students are practically non-existent. Although this is the case, he hopes that the teachers at school can develop the children properly. "I also know that the error is not only on the side of the teacher, if they do not succeed in directing the children at school. Indeed, the children are often difficult to manage. However, I think that the teachers should be able to find a way to make the children behave in school," he says. He continues, "the question is how the children behave at home, and that is our problem." He also admits that school activities often lead to a loss of an opportunity to get close to the children themselves.

Meanwhile, a young man named Maks (19 years old) in another connection found difficulty in paying attention to what his father said. "My father indeed may give me what I need for school and other things. However, I often have arguments with him, because father is too self-centered. Whatever he wants, I have to do. I wanted to go to senior high school, but father forced me to go to a middle technical school. I would like to become a psychiatrist, but father wants me to be an engineer. At the middle technical school the atmosphere doesn't agree with me. It's too tense--at times the students fight with each other. I prefer a calmer atmosphere, wherever that might be. The consequence is that I reluctantly have to work with machinery."

Maks is different from Tardi, who chose a middle technical school of his own volition. A father says, "we can only provide a sense of direction by showing understanding first of all and, if possible, avoiding the use of force." This is because, the father continued, "although it may appear that we have succeeded in raising a child physically, it is difficult for us to control what is 'inside' him. Children often react in a hidden way to the authoritarian attitudes of their parents. And in connection with dropping out of school, it would be best if we avoid making accusations as to who is in the wrong, because if we study the matter carefully, we find that everyone is in the wrong, both the parents, the government, and also perhaps the teachers at school."

The Love Factor

The rector of the Teachers' Training Institute [IKIP] in Bandung, Prof Nukman Sumantri, has the same view as Prof Winarno Surakhmad, former rector of the IKIP in Jakarta.

A factor which is also very important is the matter of student-teacher relationships. The teacher must be liked by the students, must be their friend, and must pay special attention to the student who has a problem or difficulty in learning, says Prof Nukman. "Basically, the attitude of love by a teacher for his students must show and be continuously developed," he adds. "In this way it can be hoped that the school atmosphere will be more satisfactory, so that the children feel they can cope with school. I should also say that the background of each child is different. A child who does not receive attention at home must not also fail to receive attention at school. If there are students who have mental problems (matters of mental health), the question will not be dealt with by just moving the student along as quickly as possible," Prof Nukman says.

Speaking of the question of leadership, according to Prof Nukman people always think of that as being directed exclusively to the pupil, the child. In fact, leadership is needed for all concerned, and the teacher can be the coordinator.

It may also happen that a pupil or a university student may encounter study difficulties because he is not happy with a given teacher. It is not impossible that there may be teachers or instructors who like the students, but they are also human beings who are not immune from attitudes of indifference. For that reason there should be consultations, and the teacher or principal can pay special attention and help in solving the problems faced by every child in school.

Dr Sukiat, a psychologist who has had experience as a counselor in the Sumbangsih junior and senior high schools and has been a consultant counselor at the Bogor Agricultural Institute (IPB), says that the pupil or university student who is a potential school dropout shows this tendency in the following way: his desire for academic achievement is very low; secondly, his performance is below the established standard; thirdly, he has a high rate of absence from school, and his behavior pattern tends to disturb the class; finally, he associates with badly-behaved children who often disturb their friends, fight, or break the disciplinary rules of the school. Such a potential should be recognized by the teacher as soon as possible so that a way of dealing with it may be found.

Dr Sukiat continues: "The way to deal with this is through leadership and counseling. For example, through raising the performance level of the child, helping him to know and develop himself, and so forth. Dealing with it may also take the form of establishing intimate, personal relationships, in which the teacher may become a person who is trusted by the pupil involved and may be able to understand him. It may be that through such efforts a potential school dropout can be saved."

Prof Winarno Surakhmad says: "If we follow the line of though that dropping out of school is a form of waste, then certainly dropping out of school should be a cause for regret when it happens. By using the assumption that the role of the school is to meet the educational needs of the child, dropping out of school is then the same thing as dropping out of education. But is that true? Now, dropping out of school, as a phenomenon, will continue to occur. And its recurrence is not a surprising consequence, as it is stimulated by the school system itself. It would not be wrong to say that school dropouts, as a problem, are the product of the system itself."

However, Prof Winarno continues, "using another assumption, we can be free to look at them as students who have dared to become 'broken down' youth. In this sense we cannot automatically accuse them by saying, 'you have failed.' Not at all! That would be a specific sign that it is the educational system which has failed. Under this assumption we can acknowledge the 'rights' of every child dropping out of school--without accusing him of belonging to an 'uneducated group'. What is wrong about his dropping out of school, as long as he does not drop out of the process of education. It is clear that, using another assumption, outside of school he can find the level of education which he needs. What is the use of a person being kept in school, all because of the terrible fear of being labeled a dropout, when during the time he is in school he has simply been 'left out' (that is, forgotten and not taken into account)?"

Agreeing with Dr Mochtar Buchori, Prof Winarno says, "If we look more deeply into the matter, the question of dropping out of school is less important, compared with the question of where the child involved will 'drop in' after he has become a 'drop out.' In other words, where will he land after he has broken through."

The former rector of the Jakarta Teachers' Training Institute adds: "What has happened up to now has only developed a mistaken perception of the dropout. The parents feel ashamed; the children suffer from a low opinion of themselves; and society shows a lack of regard for them. The dropout may easily be compared with dull and poverty-stricken people, although in fact there are very many factors--apart from the factors of intelligence and economic status--which have an influence on him. Indeed, it often happens that there are school dropouts who have no relationship to these two factors. However, clearly it is the school system and the social system which render the first verdict on the dropout."

If we now get busy in resolving the question of school dropouts, basically this will only add to the impact of the verdict mentioned above, Prof Winarno says. He went on to say: "However, it would be better if we would just admit that the phenomenon of dropping out of school has begun to be a national question. The number of students involved is rather large--it may involve an average of 60 percent. Certainly, no government wants to be accused of squandering money. However, whether dropping out of school is a question or not, and if it is a question, whether it has reached a critical point or not, basically is only a consequence--not the cause--of the system in effect. What we need to fight against is the consequence of the basic cause: in the basic concept and in the management system."

According to Prof Winarno, thinking of a special field of work for the dropouts or those dropped out, or thinking of an arrangement to prevent waste in terms of those remaining in class, those repeating a grade, or those dropping out, only strengthens the impression that, in fact, dropouts are unwanted members of society. According to Prof Winarno, "the important thing for me is to look at a system as a whole! In fact, what we are looking at is only the question of dropouts. There are still many other questions which also result from the system in effect and whose handling cannot continue to be performed in a patchwork way. Of course, it is not my intention to belittle the question of dropping out of school, especially now, when the total number of dropouts is rather large," Prof Winarno concluded.

Different Questions at the University Level

It has been learned from the World Bank study that dropping out of school in the developing countries happens in most cases because of social, cultural, and economic factors and because of low quality school management. The causes may originate from a variety of sources: the child's personality, the social and cultural surroundings, the personality of the teacher, the school atmosphere, and the system of instruction. These respective factors simultaneously influence each other. Meanwhile, accurate information is not yet available. The need is still felt for research on the question of school dropouts, according to Prof Dodi Tisna Amijaya, director general of higher education.

Low quality school management can be found in nearly all of our educational institutions, including the universities, both public and private. Dr Burhan Magenda, a political scientist who graduated from Cornell University in the U.S., who had previously studied in a medical school in a private university but did not graduate, states: "Our universities are still 'multiversities.' Although some teachers may think differently, the impression from outside our state universities is that everything is in order. However, a variety of problems develop even in our best-known state universities." A teacher gives the following example: "The credit system which should have been applied this year in the Faculty of Social Sciences of the University of Indonesia, a system which clearly will be to the great benefit of university students and indeed, according to the dean, will reduce the number of students dropping out, has not been put into effect because of the personality of one of the authorities there." The dean made this statement in an interview with SINAR HARAPAN some time ago. This credit system, which is advocated by almost all of the teachers, has not yet been adopted. Also because of that, an assistant dean who is regarded as competent and close to the students and teachers has resigned from his post.

Prof Dodi admits that, "It is true that our educational system is not yet felt to be perfect." A number of changes are being made. Teachers are still not satisfactory, both in quantitative as well as in qualitative terms. Up to the present there are still many teachers who do not know how to teach. They also apply their own "measurements" in marking and are not acquainted with standards of achievement. This is because the majority of them go directly into teaching as soon as they graduate from university. Teachers who have higher levels of education (MA and Ph D degrees) only amount to 14 percent of the total number.

However, a teacher who does not want his name mentioned says that a large number of teachers are no longer continuing their education just because of bureaucratic obstacles, while foreign scholarships are still available. Meanwhile, experienced teachers in that field are not yet available. As a result, there are two kinds of losses: first, the opportunity to study is not taken up; and secondly, qualified teachers for that field are still not available. Promotions to become state employees as teachers also take a long time. Meanwhile, the salary received by a staff teacher who has not yet been promoted to the status of a state employee is very low. Indeed, there are many staff teachers who receive less than Rp 1,500 per month. Special teachers, who make up half of all staff teachers in almost all state universities are also not much appreciated, not only from the point of view of salary (they receive about Rp 2,000 per month), but also from many other aspects. It is as if the "needy" are those who provide their services, not the educational institution involved.

Dr Burhan Magenda thinks that the existing educational system in many Indonesian institutions of higher education does not provide sufficient opportunity for the self-development of a university student.

No Information Available on University Dropouts

Sutjipto Wirosardjono, deputy director of the Central Statistical Office, says that the lack of serious attention to the registration sector in our universities is still relatively unresolved. Indeed, for the private universities [PTS] the figures are very difficult to obtain. The reasons are: First, the system of carrying out educational programs is not supported by a satisfactory administrative effort; secondly, the tendency of state and private universities to pay little attention to administrative work is out of proportion to its importance; thirdly, the lack of attention and interest on the part of the students and the teachers themselves to the matter of registration--for example, there is very little research or discussion involving this sector.

According to Sutjipto, this situation leads to many losses. What is clear is that it is very difficult to find figures on school dropouts per year. Beside that, the losses from the point of view of manpower planning are also substantial. How can you perform planning if satisfactory data and information are not available?

Furthermore, what applies to our society as a whole also applies to our educational world. Sutjipto says that the excessive orientation toward titles and degrees is another form of feudalism. In fact, not everyone must attend university. For example, Japan has a limit of 10 percent. However, in this country everyone may go to college, and everyone wants to go. Now, won't that keep us busy, he adds. In dealing with such an attitude, we must begin from the beginning and on an overall basis. Agreeing with Dr Abdul Gafur, Sutjipto considers it necessary to have occupational training in the lower schools.

Dr Burhan Magenda sees a new development since the 1970's, that is the increasing, elite status of higher education. Those who get through the screening examinations under Project Perintis I, or the previous Project Skalu, for the most part will be young people from the cities who are rich. They come from good schools. The good schools are generally found in the cities and are expensive. Supposing that a child from the provinces or from a middle class to lower class family enters a good school, he will usually find it difficult to develop together with the majority of his friends in his class, because their points of departure are different. Dr Juwono Sudarsono says the same thing.

Juwono proposes that, if possible, students who have an advantage because of the resources of their parents, for example if their father is an ambassador and has many books or video cassettes, should invite their classmates to share their advantages.

Burhan Magenda proposes a "quota system" like the one in effect in the 1950's and 1960's for students from the provinces and urges that it be revived. A graduate of a provincial university, because its facilities are limited, certainly is in a different position from that of a graduate of the five best-known universities in the country. Burhan gives the example of what the Bogor Agricultural Institute [IPB] has done, saying that "it is very good from all points of view." What's wrong if the best student in the provinces also gets the best education in the country?

He also thinks that it is necessary to expand the scholarship system, because the scholarships available now are inadequate, and they are few in number. This is a responsibility of the government. In a capitalist country like the United States, scholarships and loans which can be paid back after the student has been working for 3 years are broadly available. Both Juwono as well as Burhan Magenda think that leveling out the opportunities in institutions of higher education still needs to be given greater emphasis. If not, the existing tendency toward elitism will become increasingly noticeable. "When the richest and most intelligent enter state universities and pay the least amount of money, isn't this turning things around," asks Burhan.

Private Universities

In general, students who attend PTS [private universities] have already tried to enter state universities. There are many reasons. The cost of studying at a state university is far less than at a private university. Because of that, says Dr M O Tambunan, secretary general of the Council of Indonesian Private Universities and Institutes (UISI), economic questions are not the principal reason for dropping out of private universities. According to him, there are three reasons for dropping out of the private universities. First, there is studying without any direction. A student enters a university without any plan and, not infrequently, makes the wrong choice. Secondly, there is still a feudal attitude which continues to develop in our society: entering a university only to obtain a degree, not to expand one's knowledge. Thirdly there is the question of the average economic situation of the Indonesian people, which is far below what is needed to send a child to school through university.

Apart from that, according to Tambunan, there is the question of government policy, which makes it difficult for a student to complete his studies. This also leads to dropouts. In this connection at present the UISI is preparing a draft policy to be presented to the Ministry of Education and Culture, in order to find a resolution for the problem.

Our educational system as a whole also influences the process of instruction in the private universities. At least there must be equivalency in study programs. That is, the system which prepares the student to go through to a university and the system for technical and vocational training.

The rector of the University of Krisna Dwipayana, Dr Rusdi Hajerat, thinks that: "In the private universities the possibility of making the wrong choice and thus tending to drop out of school is greater. This is because many students are aware from the beginning that they don't need to continue school as far as university, but circumstances force them to decide to continue their studies, rather than go unemployed."

According to Rusdi, this necessity appears clearly . university students who have come from vocational training schools. When they graduate from such a school, there is no opportunity for work for them. Finally, they must choose between unemployment or continuing on to university. And to enter a state university, they must meet the requirement of working for 2 years. That is not possible, and in the end they choose to enter a private university. "This is very clearly apparent in the technical faculties," he said.

Supposing There is Enough Work Available

If it is believed that there is enough work available, says Rusdi, students from vocational schools really don't need to continue their studies in a university. They have sufficiently developed their theoretical knowledge with practical work. However, the reality is just the reverse. A student from a vocational school, whether he wants to or not, tries to continue his studies, because there are no job openings available. As a result, they enter a university, but without enough preparation. This means intellectual preparation and economic resources. After they enter a university, they fail and drop out half way through.

At the University of Krisna Dwipayana, says Rusdi, the figure of dropouts is relatively high. This is because many students do not finish their courses but go to work instead. For that reason they do not or are too lazy to complete their courses, apart from not having sufficient income or feeling that they no longer need to continue their studies, or they have too little time available. "Should this be called dropping out of school," Rusdi asks.

However the case, Rusdi says that the average proportion of graduates each year, compared to those entering the university, is only about 15 percent. This year the number of students admitted will be about 1,400, while those graduating will only number about 200. "This can't be prevented," Rusdi says.

Meanwhile, Dr P Y Francis, first deputy rector of the Indonesian Christian University, says that there are five factors causing students at private universities to drop out of school. First, there is the question of cost, which, it must be admitted, is higher than our average national economic capacity to pay. Secondly, there is the matter of making the wrong choice, or entering a university because they feel forced to do so. Thirdly, there is the status of private universities, which is very much determined by the government [KOTPERTIS]. Fourthly, the motivation of the students is weak. Finally, there is the question of their surroundings.

Francis places greater emphasis on the matter of motivation and the students' surroundings. "Many students in private universities are indigenous Indonesians, but they have no motivation to complete their courses on time. It is far different with students of Chinese descent and naturalized Indonesians, who always try to finish their courses on time and who turn in good performances," Francis says. At Indonesian Christian University there are many students of Chinese descent, but he didn't say how many there were.

Apart from that, Francis says, there is the factor of a student's surroundings. Jakarta, as a commercial city, functions at the same time as an educational city. As a consequence there are students who are influenced by one of the two aspects. Of those influenced by commerce, they go out for making money or work, which causes their studies to fall behind. "Can this be included in the category of dropping out of school" Francis asks. His immediate reply is, "perhaps not."

According to Francis the low level of students admitted is an additional factor. At Indonesian Christian University student applicants who are accepted are those who pass the selection process with satisfactory and nearly satisfactory marks.

However, Indonesian Christian University has a method for helping students who are below standard, using the system of matriculation for 6 months. In this way it is hoped that the new, sub-standard student can expand his field of knowledge. During the matriculation period they are given again the basic subjects they took while in higher level senior high school [SLTA]. By using this matriculation system, since 1974 the dropout figure has been reduced by between 10 and 15 percent per year.

Study While Working

Almost all students dropping out of school admit that the mistake was theirs: they didn't know how to use their time, they were lazy, and they didn't try.

Not a few of them have the intention of continuing their studies while working, but this is very difficult, because at times their work or their studies will suffer.

Johny Taufik, who is now a businessman, was a student in second year law school who was forced to halt his studies. He says, "My reason was in fact economic. However, I have no reason to feel regret. At present my business is going along well. I didn't succeed in school, but perhaps I can succeed in business."

The same is true with Wirvelmy Nasir, a third year student at Indonesian Christian University, who is a rather successful businessman in Blok M, Kebayoran Baru. "The educational system didn't stop me, and I also had no trouble in following the courses. The main reason why I dropped out of school was due to the cost and the demands of my family, because I also must think of my younger brothers and sisters."

It is apparent here that it is not difficult for young men in their 20's to pay for their education while helping their younger brothers and sisters at the same time. It happens frequently enough, and a number of cases appeared in Blok M, that a young businessman is forced to halt his studies or drops out of school and then tries for a time to make some money. After he has saved enough, he goes back to school while continuing in business. Finally, he achieves both of his goals. This is something which he could not possibly have done, had he only gone to school.

Dropping out of school can indeed be rather serious, but the reverse is also the case. This depends on where we look and what is the attitude of the student. Dr Sudjatmoko himself dropped out of school, but now he occupies a position of honor: rector of United Nations University. Sudarpo, who also left the Faculty of Medicine before finishing the course, but now is spoken of as the Indonesian 'king of ships.' There are many young men who drop out of school who have become "someone." All of them did so because they used dropping out of school as a beginning for the real struggle.

However, if we look at this matter and think of it in a negative way, the nickname of school dropout can be a pinprick which leads to illness.

Do They Drop Out Because the Teacher Is Indifferent?

There is no doubt about how the hearts of those taking the PP-I examination come alive when their names are listed on the "announcement sheet" as having passed.

They will take a new step on the ladder of their education, and an attractive prospect is spread out before their eyes. This is especially so if they are accepted at the University of Indonesia, one of the five most respected universities in Indonesia (University of Indonesia, Bandung Institute of Technology, Bogor Agricultural Institute, University of Airlangga, and University of Gadjah Mada). They say, "Gosh, I've been accepted by the University of Indonesia; isn't that something." Their mothers remark to themselves, as they go about their daily tasks, "So, my son has been accepted at the University of Indonesia; he certainly is smart." This year alone, of the 37,630 applicants taking the examination, only 1,919 are accepted at the University of Indonesia.

However that may be, hopes are not always the same as facts. The ladder leading to a degree cannot be climbed easily. One little false step and they will receive a "travel letter," in other words become a dropout.

According to Dr Paulus Wirutomo, a teacher and lecturer on social planning in the Faculty of Social Sciences at the University of Indonesia, the following factors lead to dropping out of university. First, after students complete the fifth level of high school, they usually go to work. This often involves them in work-related activity so that they cannot think about writing term papers. Secondly, the student, beginning with the first year of high school and continuing through fifth year, has not had a good foundation. The teacher has been too easy in giving marks. The student can pass his exams based only on his lecture notes and doesn't read enough books. Later on, without realizing it, they will have to write term papers.

The young sociologist at the Faculty of Social Sciences of the University of Indonesia adds that a student in fifth year high school should be able to write term papers. He should be able to look into a question, take a critical view of society, set up a proper framework, then connect it with theory and methodology, and know how to write a good term paper. However, the fact is that the student is not properly trained by his teacher to study, to real literature, and to read books properly. The initial steps in preparing a term paper are also not much appreciated by the student. Indeed, at times he has had no introduction to the preparation of term papers, or if he has had this, often it was only half done, as the teacher went overseas. Dr Paulus thinks that the primary cause for "dropping out of school" is that the teacher did not prepare the students properly.

Dr Arbi Sanit, a lecturer on the Indonesian political system who was once vice dean for student and alumni affairs at the Faculty of Social Sciences of the University of Indonesia, agrees with Dr Paulus Wirutomo that the manner of teaching at the university doesn't push the students hard enough. The student is very much dependent on his last lectures and has only a passive attitude toward his studies. Arbi Sanit thinks that there are still many university teachers, particularly in the faculty where he teaches, who have a rigid approach to their course of instruction. For example, they devote so much of their time to lectures, so much to preparing articles, seminars, field research work, book reviews, and so forth.

From the point of view of the teacher, says Dr Juwono Sudarsono, former first vice dean for academic affairs in the Faculty of Social Sciences at the University of Indonesia (1979-1981), who has recently resigned as a result of the postponement of the implementation of the semester credit system at the Faculty of Social Sciences, what causes him concern is that the functions of educating and teaching have been pushed off to one side for a long time. In this connection, a good teacher must be innovative in character, must be interesting in giving his lectures, must want to study, and must be open with his students. Indeed, this depends on the teacher. If he has a philosophy of educating, studying, and teaching, that is good.

However, if the teacher feels that he knows everything better than his students, this makes things difficult. In this connection, Juwono adds, at times the students have a larger collection of books and even know more than the teacher. The irony is that at times the teacher feels threatened by the knowledge of his students. Such a situation must be dealt with firmly.

The lack of facilities for the faculty is also a cause of "dropouts." As stated by Dr Arbi Sanit, the lack of living facilities for the teachers causes many teachers to work at an outside job, in order to make enough money to live. Beside that, he adds, "libraries, as the heart of the university, are still less than satisfactory, both from the point of view of stocks of books as well as the capacity of the study rooms."

Basing himself on the results of research involving 88 students in third year at the Faculty of Social Sciences of the University of Indonesia, Dr Arbi Sanit says that there are three causes for dropping out of school. First, as is generally known, the level of achievement in senior high schools is now declining and needs to be raised. Secondly, the motivation of students at the Faculty of Social Sciences, according to the results of research, is in question. Only 34.09 percent (30 students) really wanted to enter the Faculty of Social Sciences, while the remainder (65.01 percent) wanted to study at other faculties, such as the Faculty of Economics (15.91 percent), the Faculty of Medicine (12.15 percent). This shows that only one-third of the 88 students really wanted to enter the Faculty of Social Sciences, while two-thirds study at the Faculty so that they will not just be unemployed. Thirdly, there is their attitude toward studies. The students involved in the study tend to prefer studies which do not require study of the exact sciences. They prefer field work, seminars and discussions, and general lectures. Meanwhile, lectures which require brain work, like looking up references, preparing term papers, and reviewing books are not popular. The above three factors are the causes of dropping out of school, from the point of view of the student.

This view was confirmed by Dr Priono Cipto Heriyanto, deputy director of research [LPEM] and staff instructor at the Faculty of Economics of the University of Indonesia. According to Dr Priono, when a student drops out of school, it is his own fault. Such students are lazy, lack discipline, have contempt for their lectures, and just "take it easy." Dr Priono says that, for the most part, students who drop out of school belong to wealthy families. They lack discipline and do not use their opportunities properly.

However, Dr Juwono Sudarsono does not agree that there is a correlation between the motivation for entering a given faculty and the question of dropping out of school. This is because, in his view, a student who lacks motivation and who meets a good teacher that makes his lectures interesting--he may become interested in his faculty. On the other hand, even if he has some motivation but does not meet a good teacher, he will fail.

A family atmosphere which has no orientation toward knowledge and provides too many facilities to the student may also be a cause of dropping out. For example, Arbi Sanit says, such a family may often go on trips overseas, go camping, and so forth. A family atmosphere which is not suitable for study may also be a cause of dropping out.

Arbi Sanit adds that it would be best if the relations of the parents with their children are not too paternalistic in character or give the children too much freedom. Parents should give their children some freedom but also should give guidance to their children.

An educational system which frequently changes may cause trouble for many students. This is the case at the Faculty of Literature of the University of Indonesia, says a student who dropped out in 1971. The [illegible] in the third year English program almost all passed the examination leading to a bachelor's degree. However, an announcement was issued later on which stated that those who passed with a grade of 6 were not permitted to continue to fourth year, because they were considered unprepared for a bachelor's degree. And they were advised to choose a library studies program.

A large number of students felt let down when they heard this announcement by the chairman of the department. The statement that they were "unable to graduate" shook their self-confidence. As a result, there were those who were determined to repeat a year so that they could get a degree, and there were those who switched to a library studies program, although with feelings of confusion.

This system was still in effect several years later, but now it has been changed. No one knows how many students were disappointed or even lost self-confidence as a result. And whoever approved this system, only heaven knows. What is clear is that the "marks" approved by the teachers have already been erased!

At the Faculty of Social Sciences of the University of Indonesia, says a student who did not want his name mentioned, the educational system frequently changes in a drastic way. Previously, there was the course packet system. A credit system was promised for this year, but what came out was just an open system, in which a second year student in the first-level program may take classes in the second-level program. A student in the third-level program may take classes in the fourth-level program. This is in accordance with the Announcement of the Dean of the Faculty of Social Sciences of the University of Indonesia, No: 373/BD/FIS/81. Then what will the faculty officials decide on next? No one knows! There is no consistency.

Some students of the Faculties of Economics, Social Sciences, Medicine, and Literature who have failed their courses feel that this is their own fault. B A P [initials only; no name given], a student in the Faculty of Sociology of the University of Indonesia, majoring in anthropology and also studying cinematography at LPKJ [sic; not otherwise identified; presumably the name of another institution], flunked out of the Faculty of Sociology because he didn't have enough motivation and therefore did not fit in. Still different is the view of M S, a student in the class of 1979 at the Faculty of Social Sciences at the University of Indonesia who had previously studied at the Faculty of Economics of the University of Indonesia. He felt that two of his teachers had something against him. However, he now realizes that the fault was in himself, because he was not mature enough and was carried away by emotions!

N J, a former student in the Faculty of Medicine of the University of Indonesia who is now in the fifth-level of the Faculty of Social Sciences of the University of Indonesia, feels that he was really the one at fault. At the time he failed, he was unable to divide his time properly, could not absorb the substance of his lectures, and found it difficult to learn "Latin" terms by heart. There is another student who flunked out because he preferred to handle weapons in the Student Regiment than concentrate on piles of books.

According to the BERITA MAHASISWA bulletin of the Faculty of Economics of the University of Indonesia, students in the preparatory year who flunked out were as follows: 1970 - 39.6 percent; 1971 - 34.61 percent; 1972 - 27.08 percent; 1973 - 11.74 percent; 1974 - 29.03 percent; 1975 - 26.96 percent; 1976 - 13.00 percent; 1977 - 8.69 percent; 1978 - 13.63 percent; and 1979 - 0.5 percent. This is a consequence of the system which required students to pass two out of five classes in the first semester, without repeating a class.

At the Faculty of Social Sciences of the University of Indonesia, says Ibu Nana, a first-year student at the Faculty of Sociology of the University of Indonesia, before the credit system was adopted in 1971, students who flunked out might have had marks as high as 80 percent, but students flunking out now only have marks as high as 20 or 25 percent. According to Ibu Miroesam, chief of the Bureau of Educational Administration, 5 or 6 years ago, out of 350 to 380 students who entered the university, 80 percent were able to continue with their classes until the final semester.

Meanwhile, at the Faculty of Medicine of the University of Indonesia, the system of marks is based on the capacity for thought (perception); psychomotor capacity (skills), for example, holding an injection needle; and student behavior. The total number who flunked out was only 10 percent of about 140 students entering, according to Dr Syamsu.

At the Faculty of Social Sciences of the University of Indonesia, which is the youngest faculty in the university, the percentage of students who flunk out is not very large. "That's really true," says Dr Dwi Susanto, chief of the Bureau of Educational Administration of the Faculty of Social Sciences of the university. Students in the preparatory year who flunked out were as follows: 1977 - 18 students; 1978 - 13 students; 1979 - 10 students; 1980 - 10 students. Students who failed in the last year of the bachelor of arts program totaled 55 in 1979 and 28 in 1981. In the master of arts program students failing in 1979 totaled 211 and in 1981, 30. However, these are not figures for the years stated but are cumulative figures from previous years, because previous administrative practices were rather confused.

Road to a Solution

Beside the results of a study and teaching system which is not very good, it sometimes happens that the practice of turning over responsibility from the most senior teacher to his assistant does not function as it should. "The mechanism is not yet fully developed," says Dr Dwi Susanto. However, there are also assistant teachers who do not become senior teachers until the senior teacher involved is dead! This happened at the Faculty of Law of the University of Indonesia. Colonial remnants still cling to this faculty, says a staff teacher who did not want his name to be mentioned. In fact, an assistant teacher must be trusted to provide guidance to the students. "This practice could reduce the number of dropouts," says Dr Arbi Sanit.

However, there is no balance between supply and demand for positions in the universities. The "dropout" system serves to reduce the waste of state appropriations. This is a question of effectiveness and efficiency. Why teach students for 10 to 20 years, when it would be better to give their places to others who have greater intellectual capacity and can study more properly, asks Dr Juwono Sudarsono. Indeed, here we see the cruelty involved in dropping out. Dr Priono agrees with Dr Juwono Sudarsono. Dr Priono says, "Imagine the opportunity cost of a student who drops out, even if this figure has not been calculated. If he attends a private university, for example Trisakti, for just 2 years, there would be hundreds of thousands of rupiah that would be saved."

The question of dropping out of school seems to be a consequence of structural factors. There are senior high schools that are good and there are those that are poor. There are students that come from wealthy families and those who come from poor families. However that may be, Dr Juwono Sudarsono suggests that those who come from wealthy families, such as the children of ambassadors, and who have books, video cassettes, etc, should invite their friends to use these faciliities for their joint education. They should form a study group. In this way there will be a leveling out of opportunity.

"Later on, when the credit system is in effect," says Dr Dwi Susanto, the frequency of dropping out will decline. For a teacher must prepare a lecture plan or instructional design. There is a syllabus, but how will he mark, what material will be covered, when will he be teaching, when will he give his examinations, and so forth. With the credit system, Dwi Susanto adds, there will be a teacher-counselor who will have seven to eight students to advise. In this way relations between teacher and student will be increasingly close, there will be interaction between the two, and, most important, the teacher will know what are the problems of the students whom ie is advising.

Dr Dwi Santoso says, "Yes, that is the reality at present in the university. There are many teachers who have never been trained as teachers. If they were sent to attend a teachers' training school, they were too lazy and this was the reason. Still, they are able to teach."

So, who must take action so that the cases of dropouts from the universities can be reduced? Who else, if not the students? The demand for a change in the system must come from the students. "From the teachers? Hardly possible. Aren't teachers state employees," asked a staff teacher at the University of Indonesia.

PEOPLE'S NUCLEUS ESTATE PROJECT

Jakarta HARIAN UMUM AB in Indonesian 7 Aug 81 pp 4, 5

[Article by Basrin Nourbustan: "Significance of People's Nucleus Estate Project for West Kalimantan"]

[Excerpts] The government, through the Ministry of Agriculture, is engaged in accelerating the development of the estate agriculture sub-sector through a variety of activities. Its intention is to raise production and improve the quality of the items produced, so that there will be an increase in farmer income, as well as to create and broaden job opportunities. Apart from that the efforts are also intended to defend Indonesia'a position in the world market, lessen Indonesia's dependence on foreign countries, meet our own requirements for domestic industrial raw materials, and increase state receipts of foreign exchange.

In achieving this objective, it is desired to achieve other goals, including reaching an average income of $1,000 per year for each estate farmer's family, and raising exports, which in 1980 totaled $2.4 billion, to $5.5 billion in 1988.

Two Organizations

The Ministry of Agriculture, with the Directorate General of Estate Agriculture as its executive agent, has designated two bodies for the development of the estate agriculture sub-sector. The two bodies are the Project Implementation Unit (UPP) and the People's Nucleus Enterprise (PIR).

The activity of the two bodies involves the rejuvenation, rehabilitation, and expansion of planting of export products such as chocolate, coconuts, pepper, rubber, coffee, and oil palms.

The UPP, on the basis of the source of its financing, can be divided into programs for self-financing or from domestic sources (private funds) and the loan program under the World Bank.

Financing from domestic sources is also divided between financing based on the State Budget, under budget category XVI/Export Planting Funds (DTE), and credits from government banks in the form of soft loans to estate farmers. The soft loans are for a period of from 10 to 20 years with an initial, interest-free period of between 3 and 7 years.

During the interest-free period the interest and risk on the loan is fully the responsibility of the Directorate General of Estate Agriculture Affairs and the government bank as its executive agent. After the interest-free period the interest on the loan of 10.5 percent per year is divided, with 4.5 percent paid by the government and 6 percent paid by the farmer receiving the credit.

The project will be carried out through the stages of preparation, conversion, and repayment of the loan by the farmer. In the preparatory stage, the development of the estate will be handled by UPP employees and the farmer owning the land. The UPP will help the farmer until he is capable of meeting the requirements as a borrower from the lending bank. In this way the loan, which is orginally in the name of the director general of estate agriculture, can be changed to carry the name of the farmer himself in the second phase.

In the final phase, when the plants are harvested, the farmer begins to repay the loan to the lending bank.

Through this project the government intends to make it easy for the farmers to carry out the program for the rejuvenation, rehabilitation, and expansion of the planting of export products (PRPTE), especially rubber, coconuts, pepper, chocolate, and coffee.

Included within the work of the UPP is the Smallholder Rubber Development Project (SRD), which is financed by a World Bank loan.

Each hectare of area planted to estate agriculture products is eligible to receive aid in the form of a loan of up to Rp 1.4 million, under the same conditions as UPP programs, using domestic financing facilities.

In terms of the People's Nucleus Enterprise (PIR), also based on the source of its financing, a distinction can be made between the PIR as the Nucleus Estate and Smallholder Development Project (NES) and the PIR itself.

The PIR/NES has received financial aid from the World Bank in the form of a loan, while the PIR itself only uses funds raised domestically (private funds).

For West Kalimantan the PIR domestic program is being carried out in Dedai and Sintang Districts, Sintang Regency, as well as Semalantan and Singkawang Districts, Sambas Regency, involving an area of 13,000 hectares.

The project being carried out in this transmigration area in 1983/84 will cover planting rubber trees in an area of about 26,000 hectares, involving 13,000 family heads.

Each participant will receive 3.5 hectares of land, with 2 hectares for estate agriculture, 1.25 hectares for food plants and 0.25 hectares for housing and the area around the house.

Each unit will form a new village with 300 to 500 family heads in it. The National Estate Agriculture Enterprise has been designated by the minister of agriculture as the center of this activity, while the people's estate agriculture centers developed in the project will become points of implementation.

PIR V in Ngabang

The People's Nucleus Enterprise (PIR) represents an effort to develop people's estate agriculture in a compact and harmonious way, while the National Estate Agriculture Enterprise (PNP) is the center of this activity.

One of the PIR projects under way is located at Ngabang, a district in Pontianak Regency. This project has received financial aid from the World Bank.

The World Bank has provided help amounting to $267 million for the Nucleus Estate and Smallholder project and small enterprise development over a period of 20 years, including the grace period at a rate if interest of 9.6 percent per year.

This aid is intended to develop 53,000 hectares planted to rubber, coconuts, palm oil, food products, and truck gardens for about 20,000 families in West Java and West Kalimantan.

Ngabang, which has been preparing to receive the PIR project, which has World Bank support, since the beginning of last year, is located between Kilometer Stone 161 and Kilometer Stone 173 on the highway between Pontianak and Sanggau. In this location an area of 20,000 hectares has been set aside.

For the people's palm oil estate 11,000 hectares have been set aside with 5,500 heads of families taking up 5,500 hectares and the palm oil plantation belonging to Region VII of the PNP taking up 3,500 hectares as the center of the project.

From the first to the third year the project will have the status of a PNP Region VII effort. The people will receive salaries from the state agricultural enterprise.

Beginning with the third year the farmers will each receive a plot of ground planted to palm oil, amounting to two hectares for each family head. To this will be added space for simple housing and a truck garden, amounting to 0.2 hectares, and 0.8 hectares for planting to diversified products, especially food.

During the time the farmers participating in the project have the status of employees of PNP Region VII, the interest on the loan will not be collected from them. Up to the fourth year the loans to the farmers are claculated at about Rp 4 million. At that time the famers palm oil trees will begin to produce, and the PNP will be ready to collect the harvest.

Repayment of the loan will begin in the fifth year until it is completed in the 15th year, at a rate of interest of 6 percent per year.

According to present estimates farmer income per capita at this time is about $80 per year, or about Rp 800 per day. Based on this estimate and the calculation of the price of palm oil, which is steadily increasing, four to five years in the future, farmer income per capita will reach the figure of about Rp 2,415 per day. Farmer income will continue to increase until the palm oil trees are 25 years old.

MERCHANT FLEET COMPOSED OF AGED SHIPS

Jakarta SINAR HARAPAN in Indonesian 5 Aug 81 p 11

[Article: "A Serious Matter: A Large Proportion of Our Merchant Fleet Is Now Very Old"]

[Text] Jakarta, 5 August--The development of our oceanic and inter-island merchant fleet has encountered a serious problem, as a large proportion of the ships now in service are more than 20 years old.

Available data shows that of 329 ships in the inter-island service, no less than 244 ships are 20 years old or older. Meanwhile, the total number of ships in the ocean-going service is 56, not including ships just purchased by navigation companies. About 24 of the ships are more than 20 years old.

The effort to rejuvenate the old ships, which was begun after the establishment of the National Merchant Fleet Development Company (PANN) in 1974, has not been able to move quickly in view of the limited funds it had.

In performing its functions PT PANN has only succeeded in providing 15 inter-island shipping companies with 59 ships. Of this total 58 ships have been operated as ships on Regular Lines Service (RLS), covering 17 established routes. The 59 ships already purchased have a total tonnage of 87,893 DWT, or 25 percent of the entire inter-island fleet.

Of the ships purchased by PT PANN, a large proportion are previously owned ships whose age is no more than 10 years. The effort to rejunenate the merchant fleet by purchasing previously owned ships from a number of countries is a policy which is considered appropriate for the present, in view of the limited funds available and the limited capacity of the shipping companies to buy or charter new ships. The cost of a used ship is much less than that of a new ship.

The used ships chartered or sold by PT PANN to private shipping companies were purchased at a price of less than $1,000 per DWT.

A large proportion of the funds to buy used ships came from World Bank aid to Indonesia. The World Bank funds, which were provided in 1976, will have been used up by the end of 1981. They totaled about $30 million.

Based on a report by PT PANN, funds from the World Bank earmarked exclusively for the rejuvenation of RLS ships in loan 1250-IND will have been used up by the end of 1981. Whether the government will add further to the funds which will have been used up is not yet certain.

Meanwhile, a SINAR HARAPAN source in the Directorate of Sea Communications states that the development or rejuvenation of the inter-island and ocean-going fleets will continue, even though funds from World Bank aid will have been used up. The purchase of new ships from domestic and foreign shipyards will be financed from bank credits, particularly from the Indonesian Development Bank [BAPINDO].

The source stated that an agreement has been reached that the purchase of new ships will be financed by a bank credit amounting to 75 percent of the total, with 10 percent coming from other ogranisms like PT PANN, and 15 percent must be provided by the company which wants to purchase the ship. For used ships, 85 percent will be financed by a bank credit and 15 percent by the shipping company.

In this connection the Directorate General of Sea Communications has been directed to determine the type of ship which will be purchased, as well as the manner of its operations. The source stated that the type of ship most suitable at present is the multi-purpose ship type, that is, a ship that can transport passengers and cargo at the same time.

The question now, according to the source, is the capacity of the shipping companies to make advance payments of 10 to 15 percent of the cost of a ship. In general the financial capacity of the national shipping companies, both those engaged in ocean-going as well as inter-island services, is still weak. This is because of the specific character of shipping companies, which have a slow return on their investments (slow yielding).

It is this financial weakness which leads inter-island shipping companies to be prepared only to lease ships from PT PANN. The lease system does not require large amounts of capital, apart for the "Commitment Fee" of 1 percent of the basic cost of the ship, which is paid at the time the deposit of 10 percent is paid or, if there is no deposit, it is paid at the time of the opening of the letter or credit. The interest rate charges by PT PANN is only 10 percent per year.

The interest on a bank credit for the purchase of a new or used ship demands on the size of the credit. A loan for up to Rp 75 million pays 10 percent; from Rp 75 million to Rp 200 million, the interest is 12 percent; from Rp 200 million to Rp 500 million, the interest is 13.5 percent; and above Rp 500 million the interest is 13.5 percent.

PROCUREMENT OF COMMERCIAL SHIPPING

Jakarta HARIAN UMUM AB in Indonesia 11 Aug 81 p 3

[Article: "Commercial Shipping Fleet Procured by PT PANN Up to 1980 Totals 54 Ships"]

[Text] Jakarta, AB--A total of 54 ships (90,488 DWT) were procured for the commercial shipping fleet by PT PANN (National Merchant Fleet Development Company) between 1974 and 1980.

The hsips are operated by shipping companies as part of the fleet of ships which provide permanent service (Regular Line Service-RLS) and non-permanent service (non-RLS).

According to date obtained by ANTARA from PT PANN, the above total consists of 24 used ships operated by 12 private shipping companies and 29 new ships used by PT Pelni [Indonesian National Shipping Company].

The new ships used by PT Pelni consist of 20 ships (26,400 DWT) built in Norway and nine ships (7,530 DWT) built in domestic shipyards.

PT Pelni has also used previously-owned ships such as the KM [Motor Ship] Tampomas II (2,419 DWT), which burned and sank in Januray, 1981, in the waters near Masalembo Island. PT PANN was established by the government in 1974 (the government share is 60 percent) and the Indonesian Development Bank (BAPINDO), which holds 40 percent of the shares in the firm.

The task of PT PANN is to procure commercial ships by ordering new ships and purchasing used ships, as well as shipping equipment, so that they may later be sold, disposed of on a charter/purchase arrangement, or chartered to national shipping companies.

PT PANN also undertakes other activity to support the development of the national commercial shipping fleet.

The total number of PT PANN ships now being operated by shipping companies under charter and credit arrangements are nine units (7,350 DWT) operated by PT Pelni and 32 units (72,808 DWT) operated by private shipping companies.

ROMANIAN TRACTORS ASSEMBLED IN INDONESIA

Jakarta HARIAN UMUM AB in Indonesian 22 Aug 81 p 3

[Article: "Romanian Tractors Will Be Assembled in Tegal"]

[Text] Jakarta, AB-Tractors made in Romania which are considered suitable for Indonesian weather and soil conditions will be assembled in this country. PT Dwika's factory in Tegal, Central Java, will shortly go into operation, assembling "Universal" brand tractors as soon as the 200 units ordered by PT Indoplano arrive in Indonesia. PT Indoplano is the agent of the "Universal" factory in Romania.

PT Dwika itself is the successor to the Brugner factory of the Dutch colonial period, which was purchased by the indigenous firm of PT Inodplano in 1959. It produces goods under the commercial label "Dwika," such as electric pumps with a capacity of about 20 liters per second, tile presses (using the hydraulic process), and other items.

Dr Kusharyanto, director of PT Indoplano who is also director of PT Dwika, not long ago made a visit to the "Universal" tractor factory in Romania. The factory, which uses advanced technology, each year produces 80,000 tractor units of various types, 60,000 of which are exported to various countries. If this tractor production is added to the production of Fiat tractors, the total would be the largest in the world. Fiat itself each year produces 300,000 tractors.

"The spare parts are interchangeable so that this won't create problems for the user," said Dr Kusharyanto. This means that "Universal" tractors can use Fiat spare parts, of Long parts made in America, etc. These brands of tractors are made under Fiat license, and these spare parts are easily obtained and at a reasonable price.

The chief of the Romanian commercial representative's office, Toma Aldea, said that in September a delegation of experts from his country would arrive in Indonesia, in connection with the assembling activity which will be undertaken in Tegal, the city in Central Java which has been given the nickname of the city of small industry, or "the Japan of Java."

Asked why PT Indoplano did not simple develop a mini tractor or a hand tractor of the kind being tried out in several areas of the country, Dr Kusharyanto pointed to the short lifetime of these tractors which generally are worn out after one year.

In this connection, 17-horsepower tractors, which cost about Rp 4.5 million, have a useful life of up to 5 years. Meanwhile, the tractors which will be assembled, with 26-horsepower motors and which cost about Rp 5 million, have a lifetime of up to 15 years.

Jakarta itself will be developed into the center for spare parts for "Universal" products for the countries of the ASEAN region and nearby areas.

OIL EXPLORATION CONTRACTS DISCUSSED

Jakarta SINAR HARAPAN in Indonesian 28 Aug 81 p 11

[Excerpts] Minister of Mines and Energy Subroto said that studies have shown there are 40 pockets (sites) in Indonesia thought to contain oil and natural gas. Of the 40 locations 10 have been tapped and are in production, 11 have only recently been studied more intensively and 19 have not yet been tapped.

The minister made his statement after witnessing the signing of three production-sharing contracts between Pertamina [National Oil and Natural Gas Company] and [other] oil companies Thursday afternoon in Jakarta.

With these three signed contracts, to date the number of production-sharing contracts between Pertamina and foreign contractors has increased to 52, of which 3 are work contracts and 11 are cooperative contracts. Of that number, 17 contracts are already in effect.

Those who signed the three production-sharing contracts were: Drs. Joedo Sumbono, Pertamina's chief director, and Boris A. Ganke, head of Offshore Oil NL [Expansion unknown] from Australia, D. W. Martin, vice president of Trend Energy Kalimantan Ltd from the United States, and O. W. Hamp, president of Amoco (Indonesia) Bariot Petroleum Company from the United States.

Offshore Oil, NL, in this case in partnership with Oxoco International Inc from the United States, is exploring for oil in a 7,445 square kilometer area offshore Asahan, North Sumatra. The two companies will spend no less than $54.9 million in exploration costs in a 6-year period. The contractors will pay $4.5 million in information bonuses. Production bonuses will come to $7 million for 25,000 barrels per day and $25 million for 50,000 barrels per day.

Trend Energy Kalimantan Ltd and Sedco Indonesia Inc (United States) will work in a 7,725 square kilometer area in the South Bariot basin, block "B", South Kalimantan. These companies will pay out about $59 million in exploration costs in a 6-month [sic] period. The contractors will pay $15 million in information bonuses, $5 million after commercial production, $4 million for production at 25,000 barrels per day, $8 million for production at 50,000 barrels per day and $10 million for production at 75,000 barrels per day.

Amoco (Indonesia) Barito Petroleum Company (United States) will operate in the South Barito area, block "C", extending 7,220 square kilometers. This company will spend not less than $77 million for exploration costs over a 6-year period. The contractors will pay $4.2 million in information bonuses and $5 million after commercial production, $5 million for production at 20,000 barrels per day, $10 million for production at 40,000 barrels per day, $40 million for production at 100,000 barrels per day and $60 million for production at 200,000 barrels per day.

Division of profits between Indonesia and the contractors is 85:15 for oil and 70:30 for natural gas.

LARGE-SCALE EFFORT TO CERTIFY LANDHOLDINGS REPORTED

Jakarta SINAR HARAPAN in Indonesia 21 Aug 81 pp 1, 12

[Excerpts] According to the Directorate General of Agrarian Affairs in the Department of Internal Affairs, there are 2 million square kilometers of land throughout Indonesia that should be certified, but until now only about 20 percent of the landholders have certificates or proof of ownership.

So stated the director general of agrarian affairs, Daryono, during a press conference Friday afternoon. Daryono said one of the reasons that so much land has not yet been certified is that the general public is not yet aware of the legal and economic value of a certificate. In addition, people are reluctant to deal with the local agricultural offices for certain reasons.

In this connection, in mid-August the Directorate General of Agrarian Affairs began to carry out a program called the "National Agrarian Operations Project," whose task, in addition to certifying all landholdings, is to try to eliminate or at least lessen the different kinds of land disputes that occur in the society.

Under this "mass certification" effort, the directorate's employees throughout Indonesia will no longer work as before, having a passive attitude by working behind a desk, but will open up their offices on the streets, "if necessary, spread their mats on the roads in order to speed up the granting of certificates on a mass scale and at the same time resolve the land disputes," said the director general.

He said land ownership certificates are very important for the public because a person should be able to use such proof of ownerhship to obtain credit from the local bank. Furthermore, the certificates guarantee a feeling of security to those who possess them.

One of the current challenges facing the nation, he said, is the appearance of the "insignificant farmers" who own no more than 0.3 hectares of land. Clearly that amount of land is neither productive nor economical. The "insignificant farmers" themselves are not the product of the government's current development program. Rather, in part, they are the result of the still ensconsed system of land ownership based on adat [customary law] or inheritance.

It is hoped that the National Agrarian Operations Project [PRONA) will make it possible for the government to control transfer of land ownership rights, whether through inheritance, adat or some other law.

The director general said that if the transfer of land ownership rights based on inheritance is not controlled, in the future it could happen that Indonesians will hold only 1 or 2 meters of land.

Daryono said that if you ask people whether they already have a certificate, they say "For what?" People think a land tax assessment paper or "petok," which actually is only a proof of tax payment, is the same as a land ownership certificate. "Such opinions or views are clearly in error," said Daryono.

Concerning the fee to arrange for the certificates, in Java it will generally be less than 10,000 rupiahs. Outside Java it will probably be less than that.

In the capital vicinity Drs. Suroso has been appointed to head the project, while in the outer provinces governors, district heads and others will manage the program.

Daryono admitted it is not impossible that new problems could emerge as the program is enacted, either in the form of "dual certificates" or illegal taxations. It is felt that most of the "dual certificates" will be found in Special Area Jakarta.

Daryono guarantees the directorate will try to settle the problems as best as possible, peacefully, for it is certain one of the two certificates will be legally defective, whether a falsified number, date, signature, seal or something else.

Asked about the policy on golf courses as it relates to efforts to put land into production, Daryono said that what can be stated for certain is that since 1980 no new golf courses have been made.

RAILWAY CARS TO BE PRODUCED IN NEW MADIUN PLANT

Jakarta SINAR HARAPAN in Indonesian 20 Aug 81 p 11

[Text] The national railroad system entered a new phase when the State Railway Company Repair Shop in Madiun manufactured 20 type 4 as [expansion unknown] freight cars, each with a capacity of 15 tons.

Freight car production is financed under the Five-Year Development Plan budget. Only 10 percent of the parts needed in production of the cars is imported. The rest comes from the Madiun shop's own sources.

Since last month the freight cars have crisscrossed the East Operations Zone of the State Railway Company in a study of their transport capability, riding quality, ease of maintenance and durability. It's thought the cars will last for 25 years.

Sumarno, head of the State Railway Company's East Operations Zone, said to SINAR HARAPAN that no outstanding problems were found in the cars. The country has a right to be proud of the job done by the Madiun shop, he said, because no foreigners helped in the planning process. All was performed in a very traditional manner. The Repair Shop only had regular tools for repair and maintenance of equipment and was not really a manufacturing company. It didn't have any of the automatic tools that are needed in heavy industry. There was just one engineer in the shop.

Here we're all self-taught students, we learn everything from experience and from reading books, said Ach. Duryat, head of the Madiun shop.

According to Duryat, making 20 freight cars was just a warm-up for the manufacture of 400 similar cars by the end of 1982 and 44 passenger cars by mid-1983 under the management of PT Inka. Although the government has determined that the State Railway Company Repair Shop in Madiun has now officially become PT Inka, the new company won't begin production till next year.

Under the combined management of the Department of Industry, the Board for Techological Research and Development and the State Railway Company itself, PT Inka will be backed by the Department of Finance with an initial capital investment of 60 billion rupiahs.

Before going into full-time production, during the next 2 months the Repair Shop will begin to manufacture its first passenger cars, which will be 20 meters long.

According to Duryat, there are many problems involved in the manufacture of passenger cars, not only because of the simple tools but also because of the layout of the Madiun shop, which hampers movement during assembly of the cars.

The capability of producing our own railway cars will mean saving for[illegible]n exchange, but it will be all the more valuable because of our greater self-esteem, said Duryat proudly.

Concerning costs, imported freight cars cost 25 million rupiahs per unit, but domestic cars are only 14 million rupiahs each. Imported passenger cars cost 250 million rupiahs, while in Madiun they can be made for about 50 million. In addition, we are no longer heavily dependent on other countries for spare parts. It is in this sense that Duryat considers self-esteem to be an unlimited investment.

PT Inka is going to work together with the Japanese when initial production begins next year. We shall be able to speak with them at the same level, Duryat said, because we have shown that we do have the capability. Only in certain instances should cooperation with them be known [sic].

According to plans, at the end of this year large machinery should be installed that will change the Repair Shop into a factory.

The Madiun Repair Shop was built in 1884 and was taken over by the Indonesian Government from the Japanese authority in 1945. It had the task and function of being a repair and maintenance shop.

NICKEL DEPOSITS DISCOVERED IN HALMAHERA REGION

Jakarta SINAR HARAPAN in Indonesian 13 Aug 81 p 11

[Text] PT Aneka Tambang [Diversified Mining Company] recently discovered the largest nickel deposits in Buli Bay, Halmahera after a number of exploratory studies had been carried out.

A spokesman for the company said to ANTARA in Ternate recently that the nickel deposits in Buli Bay are probably large and of a similar quality to deposits on Gebe Island (under the administrtative management of Central Halmahera/North Moluccas), which will take 20 years to exploit.

Exploratory activity was stopped last week after Aneka Tambang's geologists made the discovery. "Since the end of July nickel samples from the bay have been flown to Jakarta and Japan to be assayed further," said Syaifuddin Hamid, head of Aneka Tambang's office for nickel mining in Ternate, capital of North Moluccas.

When he was interviewed by ANTARA Tuesday, Hamid said that although Buli Bay has been emphasized, other areas have been sites for nickel explorations since the end of 1980. Of course it is true, he said, that new deposits were discovered at Buli Bay, but till now the quality and extent of the deposits remain unknown because the test assays in Japan and Jakarta aren't completed yet.

He said that if the limited studies show that the deposits could only be exploited for a period of 10 years or less, then the Buli mining operations would be cancelled.

When he was asked about stories circulating in the community and in government circles in North Moluccas and Halmahera that very large nickel deposits were found in Buli Bay, Hamid replied that he didn't know anything at all about such stories. "To date there hasn't been any official announcement concerning the results of the test assays" he said.

An employee of PT Aneka Tambang on vacation said that since the beginning of this year nickel exports from Gebe Island have been constantly increasing.

ALUMINA FACTORY PLANNED FOR BINTAN ISLAND

Jakarta SINAR HARAPAN in Indonesian 8 Aug 81 p 11

[Text] PT Aneka Tambang [Diversified Mining Company] is currently holding talks with Kaiser Aluminum Corporation from the United States and Kloekner INA [expansion unknown] from West Germany on preparations for building an alumina factory on Bintan Island, Riau.

A spokesman for the Department of Mining and Energy said that construction of the 600,000 ton per year alumina factory will begin in November, 1981 and is expected to be completed by the end of 1985 at a total cost of $572.3 million.

The minister of mining and energy has chosen PT Aneka Tambang to manage plant construction and equipment purchasing.

Asked how far along preparations for the plant had progressed, public relations head of PT Aneka Tambang, Ali Ermas, replied that up to now he had related what the minister had instructed him to say. [sic]

Kaiser Aluminum was chosen to supply the technology and technical assistance for construction of the plant. Kaiser Engineers, which designed the plant, will oversee construction and be responsible for seeing tht the whole project is completed on schedule. On the other hand, Kolekner INA will actually build the plant and be responsible for the "mechanical perforamnce" of each factory area.

According to the source from the Department of Mining and Energy, an in-depth study showed that Bintan Island was the most economically favorable site for the alumina plant because of its bauxite deposits. At first two site were considered for the factory. Bintan was one; the other was at Kuala Tanjung, Asahan [North Sumatra], where an aluminum factory (which would use alumina) is gong to be built. But finally the government decided on Bintan.

According to a separate study that was done by Kaiser Engineers and a Japanese consortium, it will be less expensive to build the alumina plant on Bintan than at Kuala Tanjung. Operating costs should also be lower at Bintan.

The spolesman from the Department of Mining and Energy said that Indonesia's largest bauxite deposits (est. 75 million tons) are found on Bintan and surrounding islands. The only bauxite mining operation in Indonesia today is on Bintan and on several small neighboring islands.

BUSINESS LEADERS LAUD U. S. AID

Karachi DAWN in English 28 Oct 81 p 6

[Text] The United States has provided to Pakistan three billion dollars out of the total foreign assistance of about 18 billion dollars committed so far including a grant-in-aid of four billion dollars, FPCCI President, Mr. Mohammad Yousuf Zia, said yesterday while welcoming the US Consul-General, to the Federation's office.

Mr. Richard Post discussed with the FPCCI the prospects of U.S.-Pakistan trade relations and economic cooperation.

The Federation chief said that the recent announcement of a package of 3.2 billion dollars as economic assistance and for arms purchases had opened a new chapter in the friendly relations of the two countries.

He said that eversince independence, United States has been Pakistan's major trading partners, and now has a share of five per cent in our exports and 11 per cent in our imports. United States has provided the largest amount of economic assistance given to Pakistan by any country or financial institution.

Mr. Yousuf Zia welcomed the decision of the US aid mission to set up a "bureau for private enterprise" which would be able to implement the decision of the Reagan administration for bringing private sector more fully into the development and foreign assistance process. He expressed the hope that the private sector in Pakistan would benefit from this new thinking with regard to the disbursement of official development assistance, specially those with a commitment to free enterprise, would follow this refreshing departure in aid disbursement to developing countries.

The federation chief said that they are watching with great interest the efforts being made by the US-Pakistan Economic Council for increase in US investment mainly through joint ventures. At present the US private investment in Pakistan is a very meagre amount of about 125 million dollars, which does not measure up to the expectations of an extended period of close friendship between the two countries.

He expressed the hope that the new stage of growing friendship between our two countries would attract the US private sector, specially a large number of its multi-nationals and pursuade them to take greater interests in Pakistan.

He suggested for the establishment of a liaison between US Chambers of Commerce and the Federation. He also stressed the need for relaxation in quota system to reduce the gap in balance of trade.

The Federation President also underlined the need for setting up joint ventures in fields like electronics, heavy chemicals and petro-chemicals as well as food processing industries.

He said that suitable guidance and facilities be extended to Pakistanis who would like to set up small industries like shoe and furniture making in United States.

US INVESTOR'S MISSION

The US investors mission would now come to Pakistan in batches instead of a single batch, chairman of Pak-US Trade and Industry Committee of the FPCCI, Mrs Salma Ahmad, said at a luncheon hosted by the federation in honour of Mr. Richard Post.

The first batch was due in Islamabad on Nov 12, earlier than the scheduled date.

She informed the US Consul-General that Government has despatched profiles of 20 specific industries to the USA for distribution among the American investors, so that they may get necessary information about industry of their choice.—APP/PPL

EXPORT PROMOTION BUREAU PLANS EXHIBITS IN MIDDLE EAST COUNTRIES

Karachi DAWN in English 22 Oct 81 p 7

[Text]

The Export Promotion Bureau plans to organise a series of single-country exhibitions in the Middle East and Gulf States in order to build up Pakistan's image as an exporter of standard products.

The Vice-Chairman of the Bureau, Mr Mohammad Yousuf in a meeting held in the Chamber yesterday with its President, Haji Razak Janoo, said the fairs and exhibitions being organised by them on scientific lines and with a professional touch, were intended to attain a long-term objective of export promotion.

The non-traditional and engineering goods were mainly displayed in such exhibitions, he added.

Mr Mohammad Yousuf revealed that Pakistan's pavilion in the Indian Exhibition to be held in New Delhi in next month, would present a total projection of Pakistan's socio-economic and cultural development and heritage.

He said that all categories of Pakistani products would be displayed in the exhibition so that Pakistan's export potential was known to the participants from all-over the world.

The Vice-Chairman attributed the abnormal rise in the rental charges of telex to the growing cost of its material and mounting demand in the face of rapid development of telecommunication system in Pakistan.

Mr Yousuf said that the present Government greatly valued the views and suggestions of the private sector and as such, their members have been given wide representation on various advisory bodies of the Government.

Haji Razak Janoo, President of the Chamber apprised the Vice-Chairman of the implications, arising from the abnormal rise in the rental charges of telex. This will have an adverse effect on export sector, where the use of telex was inevitable, he added.

The Chamber Chief said that frequent fluctuations in the value of international currencies caused complications for country's export trade and hence, a timely-mechanism was to be evolved to nullify its adverse impact.

He said that Chamber had organised many fairs and exhibitions successfully in the past and it could be counted upon for organising still bigger pavilion/fairs and exhibitions abroad.

The Chamber's President stated that the businessmen of Pakistan were keen to strengthen trade relations with Bangladesh in view of brotherly and historical relations with them.

He, however, said that inflated custom tariff levied by the Bangladesh authorities on Pakistan's certain exportable item like ZEERA acted as impediment to the export promotion effort.

He, however, assured the Vice-Chraiman of Export Promotion Bureau of Chamber's full support and cooperation in stepping up the export of the country.

MAJOR STEPS AGAINST SMUGGLING PAK CURRENCY

Karachi DAWN in English 30 Oct 81 p 14

[Article by Saghir Ahmad]

[Text] Several Government agencies are looking into reports of large-scale smuggling of Pakistani and other foreign currencies to Gulf ports and other destinations by air, land and sea routes.

The investigations have been stepped up following the seizure of large quantities of currencies at Dubai, Sharjah and Muscat besides major hauls at Karachi Airport and in Pakistani waters.

Details of the seizures outside Pakistan are yet incomplete, but some particulars of at least four launches are known here after their capture recently.

Official sources said these four launches reached the Gulf ports without a 'Port Clearance' certificate at Karachi and almost unnoticed and unchecked all the way to their destinations.

The currency-laden "Al-Asad" seized by Omanese authorities on July 31, these sources said, had no "Port Clearance" of the Karachi Customs.

According to details now available with the Customs, this fishing trawler left Karachi Fish Harbour on March 12 and was due to report back on March 31.

Instead, it reached Dubai where Immigration authorities detained it for undertaking the voyage without proper documents including the visas.

It was, however, allowed to continue journey to Sharjah after necessary legal action but was intercepted a second time at Sharjah where currency worth about Rs 30 million was also seized and the crew were detained. Later, the launch and the crew were repatriated to Karachi.

In Karachi, the Customs show cause notice for delayed return of the launch to the base elicited the reply that delay was caused by "engine trouble", sources said.

When it left on a fishing mission again on July 25, it was certified to have nothing except provisions but was found to be loaded with currency when intercepted by the Omanese authorities, officials said.

Investigating agencies suspect that some highly organised gangs of currency smugglers are involved in this operation, and they might have been using the fishing launches for their activities.

The procedure for the issuance of Port Clearance certificate to fishing trawlers is that the fishermen form queues to get the document from the lone Customs officer on duty. The officer normally issues 300 to 400 arrival/departure certificates daily, with the result that physical examina- of the boats in all cases is not humanly possible.

In January this year, launch "Al-Mubeen" got away without the Port Clearance certificate and was hauled up by the Omanese with silver and currency worth about Rs 40 million.

Two other launches caught with smuggled currency were "Shalimar" and "Al-Khalid". "Shalimar" was caught with Rs. 25 million worth of currency, while launch "Al-Khalid" was seized with Pakistani currency worth Rs. 11 million besides foreign currency "in abundance".

Currency on launches "Al-Khalid" and "Al-Asad" has since been returned to Pakistan Government by Oman as a gasture of goodwill.

SCHEME APPROVED FOR CADET COLLEGE IN SIND

Karachi DAWN in English 30 Oct 81 p 12

[Text] LARKANA, Oct 29: The Divisional Co-ordinating Commitee for Sukkur division has approved a scheme for setting up a Cadet College for upper Sind and advocated its inclusion in the Annual Development Programme of the province for the year 1982-83.

During its meeting held here recently, the committee fixed priorities for development schemes of the division for their inclusion in the ADP.

Speaking on the occasion, the Chairman District Council Larkana, Mr Ghulam Mujtaba Isran, said that the Governor of Sind, Lt. Gen. S. M. Abbasi, during his visit to Larkana early this year, had shown personal interest in the scheme of establishing a Cadet College in Larkana. He had also disclosed that the Federal Government had accepted in principle his proposals. He had assured the people that he would strive hard for the realisation of this scheme because the Cadet College of Petaro generally accommodates students from lower Sind areas, whereas the upper Sind region needs a separate college.

It may be recalled that the scheme for setting up a Cadet College for upper Sind area in Larkana was contemplated during early seventies. The site for the college was selected about 3 kilometers to the north of Moenjo Daro, by the side of which now the Dokri Grid station is being constructed.

In this connection, necessary funds amounting to about Rs 20 lakh had also been initially earmarked and a design was finally prepared for the construction of the building at a site about 25 kilometers to the south of Larkana town. But later, the scheme was abandoned altogether.

When the Governor visited Larkana again the representatives of Local Bodies' strongly suggested that the Larkana Cadet College scheme be implemented on priority basis keeping in few the long-standing demand of the people of upper Sind area for a standard educational institution for their children.

BIG RISE IN RICE EXPORTS REPORTED

Karachi DAWN in English 30 Oct 81 p 9

[Text] Pakistan's rice exports recorded an increase of 143 per cent from Rs 2 304 milion to Rs 5,602 million between 1974-75 and 1980-81, according to a study.

In general, exports rose because of a rise in volume export prices declined by 6.6 per cent during this period.

Pakistan's share in world trade has risen from 6.00 per cent in 1975 to 11.1 per cent in 1979.

During the period 1974-75 to 1930.81 exports of Basmati rice more than 55 per cent in 1976-77 owing to the rise in the volume of exports.

Since 1976-77 the share of basmati has tended to fall, declining to 44.9 per cent in 1977-78, 39,6 per cent in 1978-79; 53.9 per cent in 1979-80 and 51.3 per cent in 1980-81. The share of other varieties has consequently increased.

This faster growth in exports from Pakistan resulted due to higher rate of increase in output. Between 1975 and 1980 world output grew by 11.5 per cent, while in Pakistan it rose by 22.3 per cent.

Basmati rice, the best variety, is exported almost entirely to the repidly growing countries of the Middle East.

The major purchasers are Dubai, Iraq, Kuwait and Saudi Arabia, which together account for about two-third of the total exports of basmati rice.

Other varieties are exported to the African and Asian countries. The share of African countries has increased rapidly. The fastest increase occurred in exports to Cameroon, in which case they rose from Rs 21 milion in 1975-76 to Rs 574 million in 1980-81. Exports to Kenya have risen steadily rising from Rs 19 million in 1975-76 to Rs 139 million in 1979.80 Eexport to Indonesia rose from Rs 14 million in 1974-75 to Rs 874 million in 1977-78.

Exports to Sri Lanka, however, fell from Rs 447 million in 1974-75 to Rs 244 million in 1980-81, the report added.—PPI

DELIVERY OF SHIPS FROM POLAND--Pakistan will press Poland to honour the contract for the delivery of eight ships, a PNSC source said last night. The source said that PNSC had signed a formal commercial agreement with the concerned Polish authorities for the construction and delivery of eight ships and had already made down payments of about five million dollars for the first two ships. Two ships built under that agreement were scheduled to be delivered on Oct 26 and PNSC had sent the necessary crew to Gdansk, who still were in Poland. The third ship built under the agreement has also completed necessary sea trials with the participation of Pakistani engineers. Replying to a question the source said that the PNSC would go for international arbitration to pursue its case as the concerned Polish agency had no right to renege on the agreement. Replying yet another question the source said that the PNSC had already agreed to a ten per cent increase in the cost of ships. Meanwhile, the PNSC Chairman, Rear Admiral A. W. Bhambal is leaving for London in a couple of days to get the delivery of the third vessel ordered from Britain--1800 DWT M. V. 'Ayubia'. He is also expected to address a Press conference there.--PPI. STATE BANK RELAXES CREDIT RESTRICTIONS--The State Bank of Pakistan yesterday revised the credit restrictions superseding all previous instructions and thereby allowing a number of relaxations. According to the Bank's Press release advances against maize which were hitherto allowed to manufacturers of corn oil, and corn products only will now be admissible to other entities also. Similarly, advances against gram, other grains and pulses which were hitherto allowed to manufacturers of chicken feed only will now be admissible ot other entities too. Ban on advances against Kariana items, spices, onions and potatoes, has been lifted. The condition of period restriction in respect of advances against paddy and rice to rice mills and authorised dealers and against wheat and wheat flour to flour mills has been withdrawn. Minimum margin requirement on advances to traders against tobacco has been reduced from 50 per cent to 25 per cent and against unspecified raw materials to traders from 75 per cent to 50 per cent. The minimum margin requirement on advances to manufacturing and processing units against finished goods has been scaled down from 35 per cent to 25 per cent. The minimum margin requirement on advances against bank deposits and deposit certificates has been reduced from 40 per cent to 25 per cent and against shares not quoted on recognised stock exchanges from 60 per cent to 50 per cent.--APP. SIND TRACTOR CORPORATION--The Sind Government is examining the possibility of setting up of a tractor corporation to improve the working of tractors to boost farm production. At present, the Agricultural Department which has over 300 tractors at its disposal is not utilising the tractors properly. The farmers are also not satisfied as tractor services are not being made available. Another complaint is that most of the tractors are being engaged by the influential persons. Therefore, it has been suggested that to improve the working of the tractors the control of the tractors may be given to an autonomous corporation. A decision in this regard is likely to be taken by the Sind Government soon. [Text] [Karachi DAWN in English 22 Oct 81 p 4]

BAN ON ENTRY OF ULEMA--Sahiwal, Oct 29: The District Magistrate, Sahiwal, has banned entry of 31 Ulema in the district besides forbidding four Ulema to deliver any speech. REASONS FOR FLIGHT OF CHITTAGONG TRIBALS GIVEN

Bombay THE TIMES OF INDIA in English 1 Oct 81 pp 1, 5

[Text] New Delhi, September 30--The unabated influx of tribals from the Chittagong hill tracts into Tripura is a clear indication that the "hawks" are to the fore again in Bangladesh.

It is an attempt to nullify the recent Indo-Bangladesh agreement to defuse tension.

The unexpected twists and turns that Dacca's policies are taking are the result of an intense power struggle now going on in the ruling group. For quite some time, the "doves" remained in background, but were able to stage a come-back, working upon the uncertainties of the future, and encouraged a new process of improving relations with India.

But the ascendency of the "doves," whose chief exponent is the foreign minister, Mr. Shamsul Haq, appears to have been shortlived. The pendulum is again on its backward swing. That the army has taken over the operations against the tribals is an indication that the recently concluded agreement with India had not been to its liking and it has taken the first opportunity to strike back.

Since the assassination of President Ziaur Rahman, the "hawks" have been slowly but surely entrenching themselves in power, eliminating the known "freedom fighters"--from the army and all governmental spheres. The Prime Minister, Shah Azizur Rahman, became the chief spokesman of the regime.

The upshot of this development was that there was an increase in contacts with Pakistan and proposals were mooted for the two countries entering into several bilateral agreements, including Dacca giving up its claims to a share in the assets of united Pakistan. It was apprehended that the process could culminate in a sort of defence arrangement with Pakistan.

The development did not give any comfort to the moderates who saw in it the possibility of an increase in tension in the sub-continent.

The coming Presidential election was a factor which momentarily helped the "doves" to assert themselves and come to the fore. The army continues to be unsure of the election result, acutely conscious of its isolation and unpopularity. It is distrustful of the bureaucracy which has vowed to see that the men in uniform remain in the barracks. And the people have expressed themselves in various ways that they have seen enough of army rule.

Apparently wanting not to queer the pitch for the politicians in seeing its candidate through in the election by its over presence, the army chose to recede to the background for the time being. But it was taken by surprise by the manner in which the moderates hurriedly went to the extent of concluding an agreement with India. It was something it had not bargained for.

The volume and composition of the tribal influx into Tripura clearly shows that the armed forces are in a desperate mood. There has been a qualitative change from the small trickle of refugees crossing the border three months ago to the present flood of people fleeing from army atrocities. Unlike what has been going on in the Chittagong hill tracts during May-June, the present army action against the tribals appears to be non-discriminatory.

A slow influx of tribal migrants into India from the Chittagong hill tracts was to be expected following the plan drawn up by the former Bangladesh president, Mr. Ziaur Rahman, to settle 20,000 families from each Bangladesh district on the fertile land along the Karnafuli. The plan was first sought to be put into effect in 1978. The result was an influx of chakma tribals into the Indian border states of Tripura and Mizoram.

The reaction was not what the Bangladesh government had expected. A storm of protest was raised by the neighbouring Buddhist countries because the chakmas are by and large Buddhists. The world Buddhist organisations organised relief for the uprooted people on a big scale. The result was that the Zia plan had to be suspended.

In May-June this year, when the Bangladesh government tried to put the plan into operation, it was more careful and selective. The chakma villages were not touched. Groups of plains people supported by armymen from behind, went round the village in the Matiranga-Ramgarh area inhabited by Tripura's tribesmen who claim themselves to be Hindus. The bulk of the refugees during that period was from this tribe. About 3,500 tribals had crossed into India during these two months.

LOK SABHA BYELECTIONS FOR LATE NOVEMBER

Calcutta THE STATESMAN in English 6 Oct 81 p 1

[Text] New Delhi, Oct. 5--By-elections to fill three vacant seats in the Lok Sabha from three States and 22 Assembly seats in 10 States and one Union Territory are likely to be held in the last week of November, it was learnt here today.

"We are in the process of consultation with the Chief Electoral Officers of the States and Union Territory concerned," an Election Commission official said. It is, however, understood that a specific date has also been suggested to most of these: November 29.

A week earlier, on November 22, the repoll in the Garhwal parliamentary constituency is to be held, as already notified.

The separation of the rest of the by-elections from the Garhwal repoll seems significant. The Election Commission evidently wants no distraction at the time of that repoll. To questions on the steps likely to be taken to prevent induction of police forces from outside, as happened during the poll on June 14, commission officials said "we will take all precautions."

There is no intension as yet to fill the vacancies, either in the Lok Sabha or in the local Assembly, in four States: Assam (with 12 vacancies in the Lok Sabha and seven in the State Assembly), Meghalaya (one in the Lok Sabha and two in the Assembly), Nagaland (two in the Assembly), and Himachal Pradesh (two in the Assembly).

The reason in respect of Assam and Meghalaya is that the foreign nationals issue in both States has yet to be settled and the situation in the area is yet to return to normal.

In Nagaland, since a general election to the Assembly is due in November next year, the State Government does not seem to be in favour of any by-election now. For the same reason, there is to be no by-election in Himachal Pradesh--the general election to the State Assembly there is due before June next year.

The Lok Sabha seats for which by-elections are to be held in November (besides the repoll in Garhwal) are: Sagar in Madhya Pradesh, Nandurbar in Maharashtra, and Bayana in Rajasthan.

The Bayana seat was won by Mr Jagannath Pahadia in the January 1980 elections. He gave up that seat on December 3 last year, following his shift to Rajasthan as Chief Minister, a position which he no longer holds.

The States where by-elections are to be held to fill vacant Assembly seats are: Andhra Pradesh (three), Bihar (three), Gujarat (three), Madhya Pradesh (one), Maharashtra (one), Manipur (one), Punjab (one), Tamil Nadu (one), Tripura (three) and Uttar Pradesh (one).

In the Assembly of the Union Territory of Mizoram, there are four vacancies. By-elections to fill these are likely to be held on November 30.

MEGHALAYA COALITION PLANNING NEW PARTY

Bombay THE TIMES OF INDIA in English 29 Sep 81 p 10

[Text] Shillong, September 28--The ruling United Meghalaya Parliamentary Democratic Forum, comprising the Congress (I) and three regional parties, is in "sound health" despite persistent rumours regarding rift or differences among its constituents, according to the former Meghalaya chief minister, Mr. B. B. Lyngdoh.

Speaking to newsmen yesterday, he denied reports that the partnership formed in May, 1979, had developed strains. Referring to the reported misgivings of the regional parties about the Congress (I) manoeuvres for forming a one-party government, Mr. Lyngdoh said: "Everything is smooth." He added that newsmen always looked for "edges on a smooth surface."

On the proposed "broad-based" political party, he said, the coalition partners had already ratified the proposal, and the party would be formed soon. He added the Congress (I) in the state would have to join the new party.

It may be recalled that, when the ruling forum was constituted, its constituents--the Congress (I), the APHLC (Lyngdoh faction), the Hill State People's Democratic Party and the Jaintia National Union--decided to form a broad-based political party, that would support Congress (I) policies on national affairs. The objective was to end political instability that had become pronounced after the assembly elections in 1978.

U.S. SAID TO HAVE 'MISCONCEPTIONS' ABOUT INDIA

Bombay THE TIMES OF INDIA in English 6 Oct 81 p 4

[Article by K. Subrahmanyam]

[Text] The Reagan administration's policies towards the Indian sub-continent, especially in respect of arms supplies to Pakistan, have to be viewed against the backdrop of its pursuit of a policy of neo-containment vis-a-vis the Soviet Union. The Reaganites argue that Pakistan is willing to stand up and be counted against the Soviet Union on both the Afghanistan issue and the problems in the Gulf, while India is not. Hence the Pakistanis deserve to be rewarded and if, in the process, India gets hurt, well, that is the price India must pay for leaning towards the Soviet Union.

When the officials of the Reagan administration are confronted with Mr. Agha Shahi's speech at the Lahore seminar on June 30 in which he had dismissed the danger of a Soviet attack on Pakistan, declared that Islamabad was acquiring arms against other threats and added that non-aligned Pakistan would neither give bases to the U.S. nor act as a conduit for weapons to the Afghan rebels, it is waved aside with a shrug. They say Mr. Agha Shahi does not count for much in policy making in Pakistan and the U.S. administration deals directly with the generals with whom it has a good understanding. Mr. Agha Shahi's pronouncements, in the American view, are part of a public relations exercise.

There are sufficient grounds to believe that this view of the U.S. officials is well founded. First, the Egyptian President, Mr. Anwar Sadat, has confirmed that from December 1979 onwards the CIA has been regularly lifting the Soviet arms supplied to Egypt during the years before 1972 to be passed on to Afghan rebels across the Pakistan-Afghanistan border. Secondly, there are indications that notwithstanding Mr. Agha Shahi's loud protestations of non-alignment, there have been talks between U.S. and Pakistani military establishments on the U.S. obtaining bases and other military facilities in Pakistan.

Risks

Lastly, Mr. Carl Bernstein recently published an article reporting that in General Zia-ul-Haq's belief it would be "well within the limits of the Soviet Union's tolerance" if up to two planeloads of arms were passed across the Pak-Afghan border to Afghan insurgents.

American officials are asked sometimes about the risks of the U.S. getting too closely identified with the military regime in Pakistan, as it did with the Shah of Iran, and the consequent danger that in the event of a discontinuous change in Pakistan, the U.S. might get totally alienated from that country, giving the Soviet Union an excellent opportunity to extend its influence there. Their reply is that all policies have some risks inherent in them.

Even so, the U.S. officials are aware of the possibility of Gen. Zia being replaced. This should explain why the U.S. military establishment is developing very broad-bases contacts with the entire Pakistani military establishment so that any abrupt change at the top does not affect the relationship between the two countries.

The possibility of Pakistan People's Party gaining power in the next three to five years is dismissed as negligible by U.S. officials who also consider it unrealistic to plan policy for a period beyond the foreseeable period of three to five years.

U.S. officials accept that Pakistan is making strenuous efforts to reach nuclear weapon capability. But they argue that through the renewed military relationship they are attempting to develop a structure in Pakistan that will compel the Pakistani rulers to weigh carefully the costs and benefits of carrying out a nuclear test and building up a nuclear arsenal. They feel that this attempt is better than the Carter policy of invoking Symington amendment which has proved counter-productive in Pakistan's case.

Pakistan's manifest anxiety and extraordinary pressure for the speedy delivery of some F-16s at least can mean, to say the least, that it wishes to acquire a reliable delivery system before carrying out a nuclear test. When this is brought up in conversations with U.S. officials they tend to dismiss the possibility. They say that once the test takes place and the U.S. stops supply of spares, within a few months Pakistan will not be able to fly F-16s. But some of the specialists in U.S. academic research institutions are not so categorical on this score. They point out that the Iranians were able to fly some F-14s, by cannabalising these aircraft, long after the U.S. had stopped supply of spares.

Great

In any case, even if the officials' claim is correct, all it means is that India's vulnerability to a Pakistani nuclear strike or nuclear blackmail will be great during the few months immediately following a Pakistani nuclear test when the F-16s in Pakistan's possession will still be operational.

The U.S. officials assert that Saudis who have considerable influence on Pakistan are fully aware of the impact that a Pakistani bomb will have on the regional stability and they are likely therefore to restrain Pakistan. But the academics underscore the Islamic character of the Pakistani nuclear effort and the widespread belief that Saudi Arabia is financing it. When confronted with contradiction, the standard reply of the Reaganites is that all policies have risks and that the U.S. must support Pakistan because it cannot allow the Soviet Union to get away with its intervention in Afghanistan.

In the U.S. today there is an enormous amount of misinformation about India and its policies, especially about its relationship with the Soviet Union. Most of the people who have moved into the Reagan administration are specialists in strategic weaponry and East-West relations and have very little knowledge about the developing world. Some of those who were familiar with south Asia have gone out of this administration.

One widespread misconception is that the Indo-Soviet arms deal of May 1980 was concluded at the initiative of Mrs. Gandhi, that it confirmed her leanings towards the Soviet Union and that it was a quid pro quo for India's silence on Afghanistan. The explanation that the deal was initiated when Mr. Morarji Desai was Prime Minister and Mr. Jagjivan Ram defence minister, that it was negotiated in detail during Mr. Charan Singh's caretaker regime and that it was all ready for signature except for some marginal adjustments in terms of credit was received with great deal of surprise and some scepticism.

That President Sanjiva Reddy in his banquet speech told President Brezhnev, then on a visit to New Delhi, that continued stay of foreign troops in another country was unacceptable to India was news to American audiences.

While many had not heard of Mr. Narasimha Rao's Karachi speech declaring that India had a vested interest in the permanency and separateness of Pakistan, there were a few who felt that the Narasimha Rao-Agha Shahi joint declaration, recognising the need for Pakistan to modernise its forces, had misled the U.S. administration into believing that the supply of F-16s to Pakistan was within India's tolerance limit.

Reservations

It had to be explained to them that at that stage reports emanating from Washington indicated that only F-5G aircraft or at the most derated F-16/79 aircraft (not F-16s with fully powered engines) would be supplied to Pakistan.

Another area of misinformation is that India has reservations about buying arms from the United States. American officials pointed out that India was not accepting the Tow anti-tank missiles and medium guns offered to it months back. When told about the unacceptable conditions, such as denial of manufacturing licence, unduly long delivery period and the U.S. right to cancel the contract at any time, American officials replied that these were standard conditions governing supplies to all nations that were not militarily allied.

As for the possibility of this country getting arms from the U.S. on terms that would be acceptable, some U.S. officials said that this would not happen as the Congress will not agree. Some felt that the issue had not been looked in that light. One disinterested official said that India was not likely to get arms on terms and conditions on which she gets them from the Soviet Union from any other source and that if he were an Indian, he would do exactly what India had been doing.

There is similar disinformation about the facilities India offers to Soviet ships and the nature, scope and extent of Indo-Soviet defence deals. Information on Soviet technical assistance to India in the basic industries sector is surprisingly scanty.

In these circumstances it will be gross over-optimism to expect that the Indian point of view can be put across and have some impact on the U.S. administration at this stage. However, taking a long view, it is necessary to keep up a broad-based dialogue with the U.S. press, legislators and academics. Among them there is an increasing awareness that their earlier assessments of China's power and potential were vastly exaggerated and they may have overestimated China and underestimated India. A patient and sustained dialogue is in the long-term interests of both countries in spite of present difficulties in establishing communication.

PENTAGON ASSESSMENT OF INDO-SOVIET TIES REPORTED

Madras THE HINDU in English 5 Oct 81 p 9

[Article by N. Ram]

[Text] Washington, Oct. 4--An official Pentagon document on Soviet military might identifies India as an area of "major concentration" for Soviet and East European military advisors, a "major Soviet arms client," and a signer, along with Vietnam of pacts with Moscow before the launching of "invasions of Pakistan and Kampuchea, respectively."

The declassified version of the document--bearing the title "Soviet military power"--introduces itself as a distillation of briefings provided to NATO Ministers of Defence on the theme of "the totality of the Soviet military build-up." Mr. Caspar Weinberger, the U.S. Secretary of Defence, ordered the "factual portrayal" to be prepared and published for circulation to every coffee table in this country, and also for readers overseas.

Obvious Aim

While containing some interesting information and assessments, the basic purpose of the document is obvious. Carefully leaving out any comparison with the U.S. military build-up and "projection of power" in all the continents, it carries the following message (in the words of Mr. Weinberger): "There is nothing hypothetical about the Soviet military machine. Its expansion, modernisation, and contribution to projection of power beyond Soviet boundaries are obvious... For the past quarter century, we have witnessed the continuing growth of Soviet military power at a pace that shows no signs of slackening in the future."

It is a message rationalising and bolstering the essential Reaganite posture that Congress and the American people, should not stand in the way of an unprecedented military build-up to "catch up with the Soviets"--must not clamour for "defence cuts" whatever the economic and financial difficulties and constraints.

Pages 84-85 of the glossy presentation bear a map portraying "Soviet global power projection." It offers nine indicators of special military ties with the Soviet Union--"active Soviet treaties of friendship...major Cuban military presence abroad...naval operational deployments...nuclear submarine operating areas...sea lines of communications...overseas facilities...major Soviet arms clients...Soviet and East European military advisors (major concentrations)...Soviet reconnaissance aircraft facilities."

Three of the indicators are shown as applying to India, "active Soviet treaties of friendship...major Soviet arms client...Soviet and East European military advisors (major concentrations)." The country's west coast and territorial waters are shown, moreover, to link up with the blue depicting Soviet "naval operational deployments."

"A Canard"

The map portrays, in a separate listing, a "significant presence" of 1550 Soviet "military and civilian advisors." Asked about this, an Indian diplomatic source commented: "This is a canard. There are no Soviet military advisors with Indian military formations."

(The numbers of "Soviet-bloc" advisors presented by the map range from 87,000 for Afghanistan and 12,000 for Cuba to 425 for Madagascar, 395 for Tanzania and 185 for Peru.)

With reference to arms sales, "India and Ethiopia" are found to account for 15 per cent of the $37 billions in "arms aid" estimated to be extended by the Soviet Union in the 1974-80 period.

Annoying

But the official reference that will cause the most annoyance in India is the reassertion of the provocative positions that underlay the Nixon-Kissinger "tilt" of the early 1970s--focussed on the liberation events in Bangladesh. It occurs on Page 89 of the Pentagon document, in the section on "treaties."

It is pointed out--as context--that since 1971 the USSR has signed 12 treaties of friendship and cooperation of which 10 remain in force. That "such pacts do not reflect the true nature of Soviet support...(but)...it is no coincidence that the signatories have been the recipients of substantial Soviet military and economic assistance." And that "the signing of these treaties occurred at different stages of Soviet relations with the countries in question."

Then comes the reference to India: "With Angola and Ethiopia, treaties were signed after the principal objectives of military operations were basically achieved and the Soviet presence was entrenched. Moscow signed pacts with New Delhi and Hanoi shortly before they launched invasions of Pakistan and Kampuchea, respectively. The ruling regimes in the Congo, Syria and Afghanistan signed partly because they needed a tangible sign of Soviet backing against domestic opponents."

In all these cases, it is maintained, "the treaties vary slightly, containing similar calls for mutual cooperation, respect for sovereignty, and consultation on issues of common interest."

U.S. POLICY CALLED 'MONETARISM RUN AMOK'

Bombay THE TIMES OF INDIA in English 30 Sep 81 p 4

[Editorial: "Monetarism Run Amok"]

[Text] The decision by the interim committee of the International Monetary Fund to endorse the policies currently being followed by the organisation relating to the terms and conditions it attaches to its loans, could mean that the Indian application for a $5.68 billion loan will finally be cleared, despite U.S. objections. The decision which follows an uncompromising defence of the IMF's policies by its managing director, Mr. Jacques de Larosiere, and a threatened walkout by the developing countries, underlines the limits to the Reagan administration's capacity to force its views on the body as a whole. But the mere fact that the developing countries were forced to go to such extreme lengths shows that so far as increased assistance in the future is concerned, they face a long hard winter. Indeed, some of the consequences of American muscle-flexing are already being felt. The developing countries failed to get an increase in the IMF's liquidity, of 12 billion SDRs a year in the next three to five years. Even a compromise proposal asking the IMF's executive board to consider an increase of 4 billion SDRs a year for the next three years, has provoked an explicit reservation from the U.S. and other hardline developed countries. What this means is that since prices are rising all over the world at over 10 per cent a year, if the total volume of SDRs is frozen, the IMF's capacity to lend money to countries with a balance of payments deficit will shrink in real terms by this proportion year after year. What the U.S. and its allies are, therefore, trying to do is squeeze international liquidity indirectly, after failing to do so more directly by hardening the conditionality clauses.

It is impossible for any sane economist to understand what the U.S. hopes to gain by this. Not long ago, aghast at Mrs. Thatcher's decision to flare North Sea associate gas rather than spend public money to pipe it into Scotland, THE GUARDIAN had called the mindless monetarism of her government the economics of the madhouse. Exactly the same description applies to what passes for economic thinking in the Reagan administration today. The U.S. is expected to record a massive balance of trade deficit this year. Its budget deficit is almost out of control, unemployment is climbing, the predicted economic upsurge in the last quarter of the year is failing to materialise, and the inflation rate is actually rising despite Mr. Reagan having raised real rates of interest to the highest levels ever recorded in the history of capitalism. By doing this he has exported stagflation to Europe, for these policies have forced up the international value of the dollar, increased the real cost of oil imports by 15 to 30 per cent to his partners in OECD, and reinforced cost-push inflation in their economies. They can only combat this by raising their own interest rates to bring back the capital flowing out and thus raise the exchange value of their currencies. But this will hit investment and further worsen recession and unemployment. Despite this, two EEC countries, France and Britain, have already been forced to raise their interest rates.

Having learned nothing from the experience of Europe, and undaunted by the criticism of his policies by the members of OECD, the U.S. government now wishes to force a similar stagflation on the third world oil importers. Whether they devalue their currencies or are denied funds by the IMF to meet their balance of payments deficits, the result will be the same: a steep decline in the volume of their non-oil imports, a further drop in the production of industries that in many countries are already at a standstill for want of imported spares, and a sharp rise in local prices because of an increase in the local currency cost of imports. Since nearly all of the third world non-oil imports come from the OECD countries, including the U.S., the resulting decline in their exports will further worsen domestic recession and their balance of payments problems. The vicious circle will then be complete. Perhaps the only way of showing Mr. Donald Reagan [sic] and Sir Geoffrey Howe how to break it may be to send them complimentary copies of Keynes' "General Theory of Employment, Interest and Money."

EDITORIAL SCORES REAGAN REARMAMENT POLICY

Bombay THE TIMES OF INDIA in English 3 Oct 81 p 4

[Editorial: "American Machismo"]

[Text] President Reagan's reckless decision to go in for the MX missile and the B-1 bomber merits the strongest condemnation. For it cannot but touch off a disastrous nuclear arms race. Even more ominously it is bound to encourage those in the U.S. who have already started arguing that their country can not only engage itself in a limited nuclear war with the Soviet Union but also win it. Against this dangerous backdrop it is no surprise that even some staunch supporters of President Reagan's programme for a massive rearmanent of the United States have been urging him to cancel the MX missile. Only last week the WASHINGTON POST reported that this might indeed happen. But this forecast has been belied, like the earlier expectation that, once confronted with the responsibilities of office, Mr. Reagan might learn to adjust his campaign rhetoric to harsh realities of life. The decision on the MX missile, it is noteworthy, was preceded by a strident publicity campaign--including the publication by the U.S. government of a 99-page booklet on "Soviet Military Power"--purporting to make out that the strategic balance between the two power blocs has changed to the disadvantage of the Western alliance.

The reasoning is specious. The U.S. and NATO, between them, possess more strategic nuclear warheads than do the Soviet Union and the Warsaw Pact. What has, in fact, happened is that after lagging behind the U.S. for years, the Soviet Union has at last achieved a virtual strategic parity with it. And in the name of countering this "Russian menace," the Reagan administration seems hell-bent on reestablishing the kind of superiority that the U.S. once enjoyed over the USSR. That this is a vain hope ought to be clear even to the simple minded hawks who comprise the policy-making hard-core of the Reagan administration but apparently is not. Mr. Brezhnev has left no one in any doubt that the Soviet Union will not permit the U.S. to change the present military balance, that it will match new American weapons, item by item, and that it will pay any price to ensure that never again is it reduced to a position of strategic inferiority vis-a-vis the United States. It is true that the Soviet economy is in bad shape and Moscow faces serious political and economic crises in its orbit, especially in Poland. But the U.S. economy is not in the pink of health either, while Mr. Reagan's rearmament programme runs counter to his equally serious concern for balancing the budget. It is indeed a moot point whether the economy can take the strain of the multi-billion-dollar MX programme which comes in the wake of the decision to develop the neutron bomb and launch the space shuttle which too is capable of military use. As for political trouble, the Reagan administration's aggressive quest for renewed strategic superiority over the Soviet Union has frightened America's West European allies into opposing the deployment of the Pershing II and Cruise missiles in their territories, created a powerful anti-nuclear movement in Europe and encouraged faint antiwar stirrings even within the U.S. Above all, there can be no two opinions that when it comes to the crunch, the Russians are capable of accepting far greater sacrifices than the American people would ever countenance.

Two other features of the Reagan policies on rearmament deserve notice. First, while constantly complaining of Soviet "expansionism" and "aggressiveness," it is the U.S. which has stepped up its presence in the Indian Ocean, consolidated its hold on West Asia, initiated the re-equipment of NATO forces and at the same time gone in for a series of offensive weapons of which the MX is the latest but not the least. The Soviet weaponry is, by comparison, defensive. Secondly, the justification offered by the U.S. for developing the MX missile is dubious, to say the least. According to the protagonists of the MX programme, the Russians will soon be able to destroy all landbased U.S. missiles in one cataclysmic strike and therefore it is necessary to develop a movable missile which can be shifted from silo to silo to guard against a surprise Soviet attack. Not all strategists accept this scenario as feasible. But supposing the danger were real, what then? After all the present balance of terror between the two super powers rests on a "triad" of landbased ICBMs, long-range bombers and submarine-launched missiles. Will the Russians be so foolish as to invite self-annihilation through retaliation by America's submarine-launched and bomber-borne missiles by knocking off the landbased U.S. missiles? The argument holds good even in reverse.

REPORTER TELLS OF SUPPORT FOR KHALISTAN IN U.S.

Bombay THE TIMES OF INDIA in English 3 Oct 81 pp 1, 5

[Article by K. N. Malik]

[Text] New Delhi, October 2--The government of India is keeping a strict watch on the protagonists of Khalistan in foreign countries.

Besides Dr. Jagjit Singh Chauhan, former finance minister of Punjab, who styles himself as president of the republic of Khalistan, Mr. Ganga Singh Dhillon, president of Shri Nankana Sahib Foundation, is the main pillar of the movement abroad. They claim to have the support of several influential Senators and Congressmen and other persons in the United States.

Amongst the supporters they have are Mr. Mark O. Hatfield, Senator J. Helms of North Carolina, Senator Sam Nunn of Georgia and Mr. James C. Corman, member of the House of Representatives.

Earlier this year, these leaders claimed to have met Mr. Alexander Haig, secretary of the state, and Mr. Charles Percy of the Senate foreign relations committee.

According to Indian intelligence sources, Dr. Chauhan is in close contact with Gen. Daniel Graham, co-chairman of the American security council, a private organisation. It is understood that Dr. Graham this year enabled Dr. Chauhan to meet the Pakistani foreign minister, Mr. Agha Shahi.

Both Dr. Chauhan and Mr. Dhillon have not only been keeping close contacts with the Pakistan embassies in London and Washington but have been frequently visiting Pakistan. They are reported to have easy access to top Pakistani leaders, including President Zia. It was only because of the support of the Pakistani leaders that Mr. Dhillon announced that a world Sikh conference would be held in Nankana Sahib on November 8 or 9. In view of the changed circumstances after the IA plane hijacking, it is, however, not certain whether the proposed conference will be held.

It may be recalled that the demand for Khalistan was first made by Dr. Jagjit Singh in the U.K. He had proclaimed himself president of the republic of Khalistan and said that he proposed to set up offices and consulates in the U.K.

and some West European countries. He said the first consulate would be opened in Frankfurt.

He had said he was discussing with the U.S. government the question of setting up a Khalistan government in exile. He had also said he would approach the U.S. government for assistance and training a 10,000-strong Khalistan army.

The Khalistan passports and stamps which were distributed in India early this year were printed in Canada. Blank passports were issued by Dr. Chauhan to several people.

Dr. Chauhan had issued refugee certificates to 1,400 people from Punjab and enabled them to seek refuge in Canada. He had also organised the defence of illegal entrants to the U.S., Canada and some European countries. He had issued certificates to these illegal entrants under the designation "president of the republic of Khalistan."

According to reports with the government, several Akali leaders who visited the U.S. participated in a conference organised by Mr. Dhillon and Dr. Chauhan. In one such meeting in April this year in New York, a resolution was passed favouring the creation of Khalistan to preserve the identity of the Sikh people. The resolution described the boundaries of the new state from Jammu to Kandla and Jaisalmer to New Delhi. It was claimed that this resolution had the approval of the SGPC and the Akal Takht.

These leaders also claimed they have made an application to the United Nations seeking associate membership of the U.N. or on consultative status. The Indian permanent representative at the U.N., however, has informed the government that the claim of the Sikh leaders has not been confirmed by the U.N. secretariat. The secretary-general's office has said no such application has been received so far from the Shromani Akali Dal.

It is in view of these activities that the government of India, at the highest level, is intensifying its efforts to meet the challenge in foreign countries.

REPUBLICAN PARTY CENTRAL COMMITTEE HOLDS PARLEY

Bombay THE TIMES OF INDIA in English 2 Oct 81 p 8

[Text] Pune, October 1--The Republican Party of India (Khobragade) has blamed the Tamil Nadu government for the recent mass conversion of Harijans to Islam in the state.

The party central committee, which concluded its two-day meeting here yesterday, has said persecution by police officials and social inequalities and injustices perpetrated by caste Hindus led to the conversions.

Opposing conversions to Islam, the committee appealed to the scheduled castes to embrace Buddhism.

A resolution adopted by it urged the Central government to extend educational and other facilities to the Harijans who embraced Buddhism, as a deterrent against conversions to Islam.

The party welcomed the Centres move to reserve jobs for scheduled castes in the private sector. The reservations and other facilities were necessary for some more years, it added.

However, the party opposed reserved constituencies for the scheduled castes in the Lok Sabha and assembly elections. It also demanded implementation of electoral reforms in regard to financial help.

Briefing newsmen after the meeting, Mr. Khobragade, president of the RPI, alleged that the scheduled castes were pressurised to vote for a particular candidate during the elections in many states.

Mr. Khobragade said the silver jubilee of the mass conversion of Harijans to Buddhism would be celebrated in October. Some 2,500 Harijans in Tamil Nadu, 1,000 scheduled caste people and a Muslim family in Chandrapur district of Maharashtra and a few others in Gujarat would embrace Buddhism in October, he added.

HOME MINISTER REPORTS 'GRAVE' SITUATION IN TAMIL NADU

Calcutta THE SUNDAY STATESMAN in English 27 Sep 81 p 7

[Text]

MADRAS, Sept. 26.—Mr Yogendra Makwana, Union Minister of State for Home Affairs, said here today that the law and order situation in Tamil Nadu was "grave" and urged the Chief Minister, Mr M. G. Ramachandran, to transfer the inspector-general of police and "revitalise" the police force. Addressing a Press conference at Raj Bhavan, he hoped the Chief Minister would heed his advice.

Mr Makwana said it was odd that the State Government should claim that everything was in order when the Opposition DMK leader, Mr M. Karunanidhi and hundreds of his party men, were under detention and self-immolation of DMK volunteers to press for the release of their leader had been the order of the day. The Centre, he said, could not remain a silent spectator to the growing violence in the State.

Harijans and backward classes in Tamil Nadu were not receiving protection, Mr Makwana alleged. He wanted the State Government to implement schemes intended for their welfare and utilize funds allotted for the purpose.

The State Government in a Press Note denied the allegation made by Mr I. Elaiyaperumal, Congress (I) MLA, and endorsed by Mr Makwana, that Rs 2 crores sanctioned by the Centre for the welfare of the Scheduled Castes in Tamil Nadu had been diverted. The administration had undertaken a large number of socio-economic programmes to improve the lot of the Scheduled Castes, the Note said.

At a meeting hosted by the Chief Minister, Mr Makwana discussed with Mr Ramachandran the conversion of Harijans to Islam, the law and order situation in Tamil Nadu, the arrest of Mr Karunanidhi and his followers and the growing number of self-immolations demanding the release of the DMK leader. Two more cases of self-immolation were reported today.

Addressing a public meeting last night, Mr Makwana said the entire State of Tamil Nadu was in turmoil and Mr Ramachandran was sitting atop an active volcano. Hundreds of DMK and Congress(I) workers had been taken into custody and the Government had not taken proper steps to defuse the situation, he said. However, the the Centre had no intention to topple the AIADMK Ministry, he added.

PTI adds: There seemed no public response to yesterday's city "hartal" call given in Madras by a section of the student community demanding the release of the DMK president. Buses, taxis and auto-rickshaws were plying normally. Shops, business houses and banks functioned as usual. Attendance in Government offices were "above normal", police said.

Schools functioned as usual. Many colleges had declared "study holidays" from Thursday for the coming semester examinations. Mr Sripal, City Police Commissioner, said it was an "incident-free day".

The DMK has rejected Mr Makwana's advice that it discuss with the Tamil Nadu Chief Minister, the formula he had suggested to defuse the situation in the State.

Mr Dhandapani, DMK leader, said there was no further scope for discussion with the Chief Minister. His party had already made it clear on more than one occasion that there would be no necessity to continue the agitation (on the Sri Lanka Tamils issue) once all the DMK workers were released.

UNI reports: Mr Makwana said in Tirupati today that a solution to the Assam problem was in sight. He said a meeting was expected to be held soon.

RAJ NARAIN TELLS DEMOCRATIC SOCIALIST AIMS

Calcutta THE SUNDAY STATESMAN in English 27 Sep 81 p 7

[Text]

MR Raj Narain, leader of the Democratic Socialist Party, said in Calcutta on Saturday that apart from the four seats held by his party in the West Bengal Assembly, the DSP as a constituent of the Left Front in the State would in the coming Assembly election lay claim to those seats where organizationally his party was strong He said that in the 1980 parliamentary election, the Lok Dal had come to an adjustment with the CPI and CPI(M) over five seats and in the next parliamentary election the DSP would show in the "Hindi belt" the same understanding to its partners in the Front in West Bengal.

Mr Raj Narain said the DSP had joined the Left Front to strengthen the Government in West Bengal. His party was trying to unite socialist, democratic and secular forces in the country as a viable alternative to the Congress (I). Complimenting the Left Front Government, he said it had done exemplary work in various fields and should be emulated by other States.

He declared that his party would try to frustrate any move by the Centre to dislodge the Left Front Government in West Bengal. He felt that considering the mass base of the Front, the Centre would find it difficult to dislodge it. But if it was toppled, it would certainly come back to power with a larger majority and greater goodwill of the people.

Mr Raj Narain was highly critical of the Centre's decision to send an Indian pilgrim party to Kailash and Mansarovar. The members of the party had to obtain a visa from the Chinese Government to go to these pilgrim spots which, according to him clearly belonged to India. "By allowing the members of the party to take the visa, the Government of India has accepted the Chinese sovereignty over these regions. I wonder how Mrs Gandhi accepted this position when her father clearly refused to do so," Mr Raj Narain added.

The Socialist leader expressed his concern over the attempted assassination of Mr Latoori Singh his party MLA in Uttar Pradesh, in Allahabad on Friday. He said the attempt on the MLA's life had come only a few days after the security guard provided by the State Government for [illegible] safety had been withdrawn.

PUNJAB CRACKS DOWN ON KHALISTAN SUPPORTERS

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 5 Oct 81 pp 1, 7

[Text] Chandigarh, Oct. 4 (PTI)--The Punjab Government is understood to have decided to use the National Security Act against the protagonists of Khalistan, it was authoritatively learnt here tonight.

The sources said the district magistrates in the State had been directed to use the Act against the extremists, including the activists of the Dal Khalsa, a militant Sikh youth organisation which masterminded the hijacking of the Indian Airlines Boeing to Pakistan on Tuesday last.

Our Staff Correspondent adds:

Dr Sohan Singh, retired director of the State Health Services, and Dr Karnail Singh, retired joint director of Animal Husbandry department were among about 30 persons arrested by the police since the crackdown on Khalistan protagonists and the Dal Khalsa.

Both of them were arrested at Mohali and taken to Amritsar for interrogation.

Dr Sohan Singh is related to the former Congress president and Union Minister Mr Swaran Singh. His son, married to Mr Swaran Singh's daughter, holds a diplomatic assignment abroad.

Mr Sohan Singh and Dr Karnail Singh are president and general secretary, respectively o f the Sikh Sophisticated Forum.

The arrests followed raids on a number of places in the city and nearby Mohali in the last two days.

Dr Sohan Singh and Dr Karnail Singh were reported to have organised half a dozen seminars in the past two years in support of "Khalistan" movement and worked for bringing the Sikh intelligentsia together to espouse the cause.

Unconfirmed reports said most of these persons have just been rounded up for initial interrogation.

The Hoshiarpur Police have detained Mr Devinder Singh, a lecturer of Guru Gobind Singh College at Chandigarh stated to be a member of the Dal Khalsa, in connection with the attempted sabotage of railway track between Hoshiarpur and Nasrala section earlier this week.

Reports also said that following recent CBI investigations, challan and likely to be put up against Sant Jarnail Singh Bhindranwale in the Nirankari Baba murder case as well. The CBI had closely questioned the Sant when he was in police custody after his arrest in connection with Lala Jagat Narain murder case.

Sant Bhindranwale had himself told the visitors in Forezepur jail that CBI had asked him about 400 questions in connection with the Nirankari Baba murder case.

Agencies add:

Phagwara police arrested Khalistan protagonist and senior Akali leader (Sukhjinder group) Jaswant Singh Multani from Bhulath village, 35 km from here yesterday.

Police also took into custody a Khalistan activist R. M. Nagauri in Kharar tehsil in Ropar district.

In Hoshiarpur, a well-known Naxalite, Mr David Bharti, from Tanda was held on charge of possessing unlicensed arms.

A Bhatinda report says about 48 of the 81 persons arrested as a precautionary measure in the district following the arrest of Sant Bhindranwale, have been released.

MIRZA BEG TO REJOIN SHEIKH ABDULLAH'S PARTY

Calcutta THE STATESMAN in English 28 Sep 81 p 1

[Text] Srinagar, Sept. 27--Mirza Afzal Beg, former Deputy Chief Minister, today announced the disbandment of the Inquilabi National Conference and his decision to rejoin the ruling National Conference, reports PTI.

The decision was announced at a Press conference by his son, Mr Mehboob Beg. Mirza Afzal Beg, who has been ailing for the past two years, was present.

The decision to rejoin the ruling National Conference was taken at the "suggestion" of its president, Mr Farooq Abdullah, Mr Beg said.

This brings to an end a three-year "confrontation" between Mirza Afzal Beg and the Chief Minister, Sheikh Mohammad Abdullah. The two leaders parted company after a 45-year-long political association, when the Sheikh ousted Mr Beg from the Cabinet on September 25, 1978, and subsequently expelled him "forever" from the National Conference.

Mr Farooq Abdullah, who was expected at the Press conference to "bless" Mr Beg's "home-coming," did not turn up.

HARYANA REPORTEDLY MAY HOLD 1982 ELECTIONS

Bombay THE TIMES OF INDIA in English 28 Sep 81 p 5

[Text] New Delhi, September 27--The possibility of Haryana assembly elections being held in February-March next year is now under serious consideration and this has activated both the ruling party and the opposition groups in formulating their strategies.

An electoral alliance or at least an understanding among the opposition groups is considered to be the only way in which they can put up a fight against the Congress (I). Moves have, therefore, been initiated for opening a dialogue among them for evolving a common approach to the elections.

Charan's Motive

In this context, the presence of Mr. Charan Singh, Lok Dal president, at a BJP function here to celebrate Dindayal Upadhyaya's 66th birth anniversary, where he delivered a speech, is considered significant.

Mr. Charan Singh, in his prepared speech, dwelt entirely on economic matters and did not touch upon political questions or any issue relating to current affairs. Yet, his mere agreeing to address a purely BJP gathering is seen as an indication that some moves are on in the context of the Haryana elections. This is the first time that Mr. Charan Singh was publicly seen with BJP leaders like Mr. A. B. Vajpayee and Mr. L. K. Advani after the fall of the Janata government.

The BJP, at a recent study camp held at Vrindaban, had decided that it would not participate in any merger talks with any other party and would maintain its separate identity. But the party president, Mr. Vajpayee, had also made it clear that it would co-operate with other opposition parties on specific issues.

It is known that the state Lok Dal leader, Mr. Devi Lal, had been approaching the BJP in the state for opening talks for a poll alliance. It would, therefore, seem that the matter has now moved up to the Central level for exploring the possibilities of having a common front for the limited purpose of contesting the elections.

As far as the ruling party is concerned, the two opposing groups led respectively by the chief minister, Mr. Bhajan Lal and the former defence minister, Mr. Bansi Lal, have become active. After maintaining a discreet silence for a long time, Mr. Bansi Lal has again appeared on the Haryana scene. In a few public speeches, he has claimed support of the prime minister.

PRESIDENT ADDRESSES TROOPS IN WESTERN SECTOR

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 27 Sep 81 p 5

[Text] Somewhere in the Western Sector, Sep 26 (PTI)--President N. Sanjiva Reddy today expressed concern over the recent arms build-up across India's border and called upon members of the defence forces to be ready to meet any eventuality.

While India always pursued the policy of living in peace with its neighbours, 'we are not always allowed to pursue our peaceful policy,' he said while addressing members of the air force, army and Border Security Force.

Therefore, 'we have to be ready to meet any eventuality, for safeguarding India's independence,' he added.

Mr Reddy told the jawans that he was confident that entrusted with such a responsible job, they would discharge their duty with great zeal.

He said since India became independent, its soldiers had given a good account of themselves to defend the country's freedom on many occasions.

The record of service of our personnel of the army, air force and navy had been exemplary in times of peace also in helping people during natural calamities like floods and cyclones and maintaining law and order whenever their help was sought.

Mr Reddy said the whole nation was proud of the armed forces, guarding a frontier which 'requires will and courage.'

'I am glad to know that our soldiers are keeping vigilance round the clock with single-minded devotion,' the President said.

The Government, he said was fully aware of the many hardships faced by defence personnel, their families and ex-servicemen. It had been thinking of taking various steps to improve service conditions of the defence services, though modernisation of the defence forces was the first and foremost task before the Government.

The President said he was sure that the defence personnel would continue to maintain the tradition of 'true and disciplined soldiers' and carry the torch forward.

The Government on its part would always strive to do its best.

DELHI STEPS UP VIGIL AGAINST NAXALITES

Madras THE HINDU in English 5 Oct 81 p 1

[Text] New Delhi, Oct. 4--The Centre has stepped up its vigilance on the activities of naxalite extremists which have been on the increase.

Law and order being the responsibility of the State Governments, New Delhi has not issued any formal directives but a coordinated approach is commended to them to deal with extremist violence.

Among the measures suggested is stringent application of existing laws and proper utilisation of legal and administrative provisions to prevent activists from instigating violence. The extremist thrust could be blunted, it is also pointed out, by improving the intelligence set-up.

Janata's liberal attitude: Since 1977 when the Janata Government adopted a liberal attitude towards the naxalites there had been a steady increase in violent incidents, triggered by them.

The number went up from 69 (with 21 deaths) that year to 163 (40 deaths) in 1978, to 233 (62 deaths) in 1979, to 305 (84 deaths) in 1980, to 203 (48 deaths) in the current year up to the end of August.

The worst-affected States had been Andhra Pradesh, followed in that order, by West Bengal, Bihar, Kerala and Punjab. Till last year, Tamil Nadu too figured prominently in this category.

Despite fragmentation into several groups, following different tactical lines, the naxalite movement, according to reports received here, has gained in strength with the number of its members exceeding 30,000. Besides it has increased its influence among students, youth, the intelligentsia, industrial workers, peasants and agricultural labour.

Tactical line: The participation of some extremist groups in the elections has not changed the situation materially, it is felt here, because of their declarations that this was only a new tactical line to propagate their ideology and not an evidence of their belief in parliamentary institutions.

The number of naxalites in jail now is not known. In 1977 before the Janata relaxation, 1,419 of them were in prison. This number dropped to 403 in June last year.

The assessment of the present Government is different from that of its predecessor, indicated among other things, by the letter sent to the State Governments by the then Home Minister, Mr. Charan Singh, which said:

"As you are perhaps aware, the naxalites are no longer a monolithic group having a common strategy and tactical line. After the death of Charu Mazumdar the movement split into several groups and there are six well-defined factions in existence of which the United Communist Party (Marxist-Leninist) is one.

"This party led by their general secretary, Mr. S. N. Singh, has been taking a relatively moderate line since 1972. The central committee of the party recently passed a resolution abjuring the path of violence, affirming its faith in democratic processes and expressing a desire for its participation in the forthcoming Assembly elections.

"Mr. S. N. Singh and some of his colleagues met me recently and assured me of their firm resolve to abandon the path of violent revolutionary struggle and suggested that they should be enabled to participate in the electoral process."

Land reforms: It is however conceded that attention needs to be given to land reform measures, particularly in the States where the progress is tardy, to the problems of those sections which feel alienated and therefore do not respond sufficiently to administrative overtures and to the building of social awareness, both in the areas affected by extremist violence and those considered to be likely breeding ground.

REPORT ON DELHI PRC ANNIVERSARY OBSERVANCE

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 4 Oct 81 p 8

[Text] Chinese Ambassador Shen Jian said in the Capital on Saturday his country and India needed friendly relations for developing their national economies and improving the living standards of their people, reports UNI.

Addressing a function organised to mark the 32nd anniversary of the founding of China, he said there was no hiding the fact that history had left over some issues including the boundary question.

"I am convinced that a fair, reasonable and comprehensive settlement of the questions between us can be reached taking into account the historical background and the present actual situation and the national feelings of the two peoples," he added.

The Chinese Ambassador said in this turbulent and complex international situation and changeable, developing friendly and co-operative relations between the two countries conformed to the fundamental interest and wishes of the peoples. It would also be favourable to peace in Asia and the world, he added.

The Chinese Government had been following a new policy of readjustment, a policy of reducing the scale of capital construction and giving priority to developing agriculture, consumer industries, energy resources, communications and transport and reforming economic management. "The policy is paying off very well," he added.

Uttar Pradesh Congress Committee-I president B. N. Pande presided over the function, which was inaugurated by Dr B. K. Basu, who was one of the members of the Indian medical mission to China during 1938 and 1943. The Sri Lanka High Commissioner was also present on the occasion.

DELHI, EXPERTS DIFFER ON DROUGHT DAMAGE ESTIMATES

Calcutta THE STATESMAN in English 26 Sep 81 p 9

[Text] New Delhi, Sept. 25--Conflicting versions are available about the extent of damage caused by this year's drought confined to Rajasthan, Punjab, Haryana and western U.P. While experts not willing to be quoted estimate a loss in the kharif production by 30 per cent, the Centre is optimistic that even if the paddy target of 58 million tons for the current season is not achieved, the total yield may touch 54 to 56 million tons.

Krishi Bhavan sources, however, add that it is too early to hazard a guess on the firm estimate of paddy production. At the same time, they are quite wary about the final prospects, which will depend on rainfall and irrigation "in the remaining period of the south-weast monsoon".

Though the official version says that drought is confined to four States, its impact in Himachal Pradesh and Jammu and Kashmir has been lost sight of. The dry spell has reportedly affected maize in these two States. The estimate of a senior scientist of the Indian Council of Agricultural Research is that while maize has been affected to the tune of 30 per cent in Himachal Pradesh, Punjab, Haryana and Rajasthan, the figure is 25 per cent in respect of bajra.

But he said that the next two weeks were a "critical". "If there are no rains for another two weeks gram, rape and mustard will be affected because their sowing time is limited.

The sugarcane crop in western U.P. may also be affected besides maize.

Krishi Bhavan's basis for optimism is not that the kharif production is likely to be normal in other parts of the country not affected by drought. In fact, West Bengal is one State where a record kharif production is expected.

The Ministry's analysis of crop production on the basis of this year's deficient rainfall (based on the 1978-79 production) is that in Haryana the rice production is expected to be 1.2 million tons, while in Punjab it is estimated to be 3.1 million tons. In Rajasthan, the rice production is likely to be 0.2 million tons and in U.P. 5.9 million tons.

The percentage of this year's rice production under kharif worked out by the Ministry in the drought-affected States, 22. It is 40 per cent for jowar, 39 per cent for bajra, 33 per cent for maize, 25 per cent for ragi, 19 per cent for small millets, 30 per cent for arhar, 15 per cent for other pulses, 7 per cent for groundnut and 20 per cent for cotton.

The Government's optimism is shared by Mr H. K. Jain, director of the Indian Agricultural Research Institute, New Delhi. His estimate is that this year's kharif production will be as good as last year's. He feels that this year's drought "is not widespread."

STATES ADMONISHED TO STICK TO PLAN SCHEDULE

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 4 Oct 81 p 5

[Text] The Planning Commission has asked the States to make realistic assessment of the major Sixth Plan projects and accord adequate priority to on-going schemes while formulating the 1982-83 annual plans "to avoid time and cost over-runs," reports UNI.

Planning Commission member-secretary Manmohan Singh has written to State chief secretaries that 1982-83 being the mid-year of the Sixth Plan, "it has to be ensured that the Plan activities are strictly time-bound and completed within the Plan period, so as to avoid time over-runs and consequently cost over-runs."

In the guidelines for formulation of 1982-83 annual plans, the Commission has said that there should be greater emphasis on extensive plantation of quick-growing species and on setting up bio-gas plants and other sources of energy to mitigate fuel and energy shortages.

Dr Singh advised the States to lay adequate emphasis on timely completion of irrigation and power projects.

Self-Reliance

Reiterating the objective of self-reliance, he pointed out that better performance in agriculture would obviate the need for imports even where these were resorted to as a short-term measure.

About the resource position, he said every possible effort would be made to maintain Central assistance to the States at an adequate level. The States would have to economise on their non Plan expenditure and raise more Plan resources according to their commitments.

The working of the State Electricity Boards, irrigation systems and transport corporations needed to be improved with a view not only to making good their losses, but also to contributing to the States' resources. It was essential that every possible care was taken before taking up new starts while formulating the Plan proposal.

Dr Singh has said that priority accorded to the Minimum Needs Programme must be maintained. Other target-specific programmes such as the Scheduled Castes component plan, the tribal sub-plan, the Integrated Rural Development Programme and the National Rural Employment Programme had to be adequately provided for and efficiently implemented.

PRC TEAMS CONSULT ON DEALING WITH MULTINATIONALS

Bombay THE TIMES OF INDIA in English 30 Sep 81 p 1

[Text] New Delhi, September 29--China has sought to learn from India's long experience in dealing with multinationals, opening up a new field of co-operation between the two countries.

In the first flush of post-Mao enthusiasm to reach out to the outside world, the Chinese leadership had decided to open the doors to multinationals in a big way in a bid to modernise the country's industry. A large number of agreements with foreign firms were entered into. But they were all cancelled when the Chinese leaders became unsure of the implications.

Beijing has, however, not given up the idea of inviting multinational investment entirely. But it is exercising caution in this regard, and has apparently decided to open up on a few selected fields as the first probing steps.

China has sought Indian assistance in this regard. Two teams of senior officials have visited New Delhi for talks with Indian leaders in order to benefit from India's experience. They held discussions with the finance minister, Mr. R. Venkataraman, and the ministry officials.

Interest in Terms

This was followed up by Mr. Wang Yao Ting, president of the China Council for Promotion of International Trade, sending specific queries to the Indian government on various aspects of multinational operations.

Since multinationals have been operating in India for quite some time, Mr. Wang has sought to know the areas in which the foreign firms have been allowed to make investment, the terms under which the collaboration agreements had been entered into and the mode of technology transfer.

Indian officials have already briefed the Chinese teams the various measures taken by the government to regulate and restrict the operation of multinationals in the country. They were explained how the inroads by multinationals into the national economy were prevented by the industrial policy resolution.

China has accepted the Indian suggestion that a code of conduct should be evolved for multinationals operating in the third world countries so that their operations did not imperil national sovereignty. There should be a consensus in the developing world on the terms under which these foreign companies should be allowed to operate.

India and China are gradually entering into other fields of economic co-operation. They have formed a sort of a cartel to make sugar purchases from the international market.

BENGAL CONGRESS-I OPPOSES MARCH ELECTIONS

Madras THE HINDU in English 1 Oct 81 p 7

[Text] Calcutta, Sept. 30--The West Bengal Congress (I) has opposed the ruling Left Front's demand for Assembly elections in March 1982, three months ahead of schedule.

Mr. A. G. Mukherjee, PCC (I) president, said here that the Front should raise the issue at the appropriate level instead of publicising it beforehand.

He pointed out that elections and their timing were decided by the Central Election Commission. They were not ordered on anybody's demand.

According to information available with his party, between 35,000 and 40,000 fictitious voters had been listed in every constituency. The electoral rolls must, therefore, be revised. The Centre had also received complaints about the rolls. All this would take time.

He said he failed to understand why a majority Government was trying to go in for elections before its term had expired.

It may be recalled that Mr. Promode Dasgupta, chairman of the Left Front, had recently demanded the Assembly elections by March 1982, because June was either too wet or too hot.

SHIFT IN CPI-M ATTITUDE TOWARD CENTER SEEN

Bombay THE TIMES OF INDIA in English 4 Oct 81 pp 1, 5

[Text] Calcutta, October 3--Interesting shifts in the overall attitude towards Mrs. Indira Gandhi's leadership are discernible within the CPM at various levels in West Bengal and it will be worth watching how far this line of thinking is reflected in the deliberations of the party's highest policy-making body--congress--to be held in Andhra Pradesh in January.

How far this has been prompted by the party leadership's desire to ensure the safety of the three state governments headed by the CPM in West Bengal, Kerala and Tripura is difficult to say. But what appears more likely to be the main cause is the developing situation inside and around India and an attempt to make an independent assessment of the roles of different political forces inside the country.

The areas outside the country which have attracted much attention are Egypt, Israel, Iran, Afghanistan, Thailand, and Pakistan in particular. All such developments have appeared to them as a definite pointer to the shape of things to come. Above all, President Reagan's new policies have created grave misgivings.

Starting from this understanding of the external situation, sections of CPM leadership and the rank and file have almost reached the conclusion that there is a danger to India's integrity and sovereignty, which has been aggravated by the presence and activities of divisive and sectarian forces within the country about whose loyalty to the national cause no one can be sure in case there is a precipitation, especially through the U.S. promptings.

Internally, the position is no less uncomfortable with the deepening economic crisis about which the government of India and its bourgeoisie-landlord-backed leadership is failing to do anything effective but, at the same time, trying to give concessions to national and trans-national monopolists.

These CPM sections have come to believe that Mrs. Gandhi alone can provide an effective leadership in this critical period of Indian history and there is no alternative. The natural corollary is she needs to be supported.

Quite obviously, this line of thinking rules out the potentiality or the effectiveness of an alternative bourgeoisie-landlord leadership that, one can imagine, can be provided by the Janata, the Lok Dal or the BJP, single-handed or collectively. Also, it is an indirect admission of incapacity of the so-called left and democratic forces to replace Mrs. Gandhi and the Congress (I).

Even the top party leaders here admit that they fully support Mrs. Gandhi's anti-imperialist and non-aligned role in international affairs. But what worries them is Mrs. Gandhi's new measures like the National Security Act and the Essential Service Maintenance Act. In their view, Mrs. Gandhi might try to exploit India's external threat to further curb internal democratic activities and "how can we compromise on that?" they ask. Yet this seems to leave at least some scope for mutual understanding.

Obviously, this takes the party closer to Moscow and it might indeed be difficult for leaders like Mr. Jyoti Basu, in the West Bengal context in particular, to ask the rank and file to fall in line with this approach; any such talk can shock them out of their wits. But, if this be the feelings of a sizable section of the party here, those of comrades in other states can well be imagined because normally, the CPM unit has popularly been known as slightly pro-Beijing, even though the overall direction has been to keep equal distance from both these centres of the communist movement.

Naturally, therefore, it may be too much to expect a concrete reflection of this new thinking in any document emerging from the party congress, because the leadership knows it will take time for it to sink in and also it may expose the party to manipulations by Mrs. Gandhi. But how many times expressions like 'authoritarianism' and 'one-party dictatorship' are used in regard to Mrs. Gandhi in these documents and the way this is done, might become a sure pointer.

The fact remains in even a small section of West Bengal leaders and activists are found to be thinking on these lines, these must have been discussed already in the party's national forums in one form or another.

These circles make no bones to say that Moscow-Beijing relations have been a great hindrance, so much so that it is difficult now to start any political resolution, which has been customary for any party congress, with a preface analysing the international relationship of imperialist and socialist forces and to try to fit the domestic developments and forecasts therein. Mrs. Gandhi's latest talk about a revival of cold war atmosphere seems to have struck a sympathetic chord in many Marxist minds.

Even if this line of thinking prevails in the coming congress and still left unsatted for practical considerations, it may not necessitate any change in the two tactical slogans that had emerged from Jullunder. These are forging a broad platform "to exploit bourgeoisie-landlord differences," and a left and democratic front "to further the struggle against the bourgeoisie-landlord classes in order to overthrow them" in the long run.

However, the state unit might demand a clarification of the distinction between the two tactical lines, in order to avoid the confusion and misgivings created in the past and a reiteration that, without strengthening the left and democratic front, the thought of exploiting bourgeoisie-landlord differences through a broad platform is juvenile.

It is now authoritatively learnt that the differences in the last politburo meeting that had cropped up in course of the drafting of the political resolution concerned not any aspect of the left and democratic front, but arose out of the West Bengal leaders' insistence on recording in that document a correct assessment of the party's role in 1979-80, especially relating to the question of withdrawing support from the Janata government and pledging it to the one later headed by Mr. Charan Singh.

In the state unit's view, as reflected by members as a basis for intra-party discussions preparatory to the party congress, it has been clearly stated: "It is necessary to find out whether in implementing the decisions (of that period taken by the central committee) there had been deviations from the tactical approach formalised at Jullunder. This is all the more necessary, because an impression has gone round that our decision hastened the fall of Mr. Morarji Desai's government just as it fell due to internal conflicts. It is necessary to ascertain how much of this popular misgiving is real."

DESAI: NATIONAL ALLIANCE WITH CPI-M DIFFICULT

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 4 Oct 81 p 4

[Text] Cochin, Oct 3 (UNI)--Former Prime Minister Morarji Desai said here today that it would be difficult for the Janata Party to cooperate with the CPI-M on a national alliance against the present Government.

Asked for his reactions to the politburo's call in this connection Mr Desai told a news conference "when I cooperated with them, they stabbed me in the back," "how can I trust them," he asked.

Mr Desai recalled that he as Prime Minister had supported the West Bengal Government against his own party unit in that State, but they (CPI-M) had no such consideration.

He, however, made it clear that he did not consider them as "enemies." But there was always the question of "whom one can work with and with whom one cannot." On specific issues, however, the two parties could have joint action, he added.

In Kerala Mr Desai said the Janata Party would not help the CPI-M to continue in office if the Congrss-S pulled out of the Left Democratic Front Government.

Referring to the law and order situation in Kerala Mr Desai said 'law and order is bad not only in Kerala but everywhere else.' Kerala might be worse since there were more political murders.

This he attributed to the 'Marxist philosophy which generates violence.'

Asked how he held the Marxists alone responsible he replied 'they are in Government and so their responsibility is more.'

About the 'Khalistan' movement he said it was nothing but 'high treason' and should be crushed with the full force at Government's command.

Condemning the hijacking of a plane to Lahore by 'Khalistan' supporters he told newsmen here that only traitors did such things. The Government would have the support of all parties in suppressing divisive forces.

But he added the Government seemed to be afraid to deal with such situations firmly. This showed its incompetence.

Commenting on corruption in the country, he said it was rampant at all levels of administration, the 'Antulay affair' was only one instance. The Prime Minister Indira Gandhi was the 'fountain head' and hence could not curb her partymen he said.

CPI-M OVERCOMES UNCERTAINTY OVER DELHI AIMS

Calcutta THE STATESMAN in English 30 Sep 81 pp 1, 9

[Text] Whatever may be the outcome of the Left Front's move for an early Assembly election next year, it has been able to elicit the opinion of the Congress (I) leaders that they would like to see the Front Government in West Bengal continue its full term. This is considered significant in CPI (M) circles.

The CPI (M) workers have now overcome the feeling of uncertainty prevailing some time ago that the Centre may make a move to topple the Government. They are now sure that there will be no such move till the end of this year. This, they think, will place them in an advantageous position because by December the district conferences and the State conference will be over, helping to consolidate the party further.

Although the unpredictability of Mrs Gandhi's plans has been referred to time and again by Mr Promode Dasgupta and other CPI (M) leaders, there is a feeling in party circles that the Centre has been unable to take any drastic step against the West Bengal Government because of the differences within the State Congress (I) and the pro-Left atmosphere in the State following the success of the consecutive bandhs called by the Left Front and the failure of the Congress (I) sponsored bandh on March 30. The initiative that the Congress (I) had taken in the political sphere before that date petered out after the violence on that day. The new Congress (I) set up is yet to consolidate its position.

Mr Promode Dasgupta thinks that there is no reason why the Front's move for an early election to be conducted by a caretaker Front Government in February-March would be turned down by the Centre. Since Charan Singh, who ran a minority Government at the Centre, was allowed to run a caretaker Government, he wondered why a majority Covernment in West Bengal would not be asked to do so.

Referring to seat adjustments among Left Front constituents for the Assembly election, he said that no constituent was prepared to sacrifice the "sitting seats." The new constituents would be allotted seats till now occupied by Opposition parties like the Congress (I) and Janata.

CPI-M DOCUMENT BASIS FOR '82 CONGRESS DEBATES

Bombay THE TIMES OF INDIA in English 30 Sep 81 p 4

[Text] Calcutta--A CPM state committee "party letter" containing guidelines for inter-party discussions in the coming weeks, preparatory to the Congress in January, has brought out all the political and tactical issues which appear to have created divisions between the state leadership on the one hand, and the national leadership of the party, on the other, throughout last year.

The document, released by the state committee secretary, Mr. Promode Dasgupta, is based on the discussions held recently at the committee meeting. This will now form the basis for debates at various levels of the party, culminating in the state conference at the end of the year.

The document quotes the Jullundur party Congress political resolution to define "a broad platform" as one mainly to fight against authoritarianism, and "a left and democratic front" as a means of economic and political struggle on the basis of a definite programme. The party has been trying for years to forge this front.

The document then refers to the fall of the Janata government at the Centre, owing to the party's own disunity. The CPM supported the no-confidence motion against Mr. Morarji Desai's government, though Mr. Desai resigned even before there was voting on it. The CPM then supported the Charan Singh government. But after Mr. Singh's resignation, the "authoritarian Indira Congress" returned to power in 1980.

At every turn in national politics during this period, the CPM central committee had to take decisions. "It is now necessary to examine whether there was difficulty in giving effect to these decisions. It is also necessary to answer questions that naturally arise under such circumstances in the minds of the people."

As to the situation in West Bengal, the document reiterates the validity of the new outlook for a "struggle" in this state after the installation of the left front government, which in the main consists of strengthening the government "against the vested interests and reactionaries." "This struggle should never be of a character which creates an opportunity for the enemy to exploit."

CONGRESS-I IN NORTHEAST TO BE REVAMPED

Bombay THE TIMES OF INDIA in English 30 Sep 81 p 7

[Text] Shillong, September 29--The Congress (I) high command has drawn up elaborate plans to revamp the party apparatus in the sensitive north-eastern region to meet the growing challenge of prochial and revivalist forces.

With its eyes trained on the forthcoming general elections due in about 16 months from now, the party high command has initiated the process of mending its fences.

While the moribund organisation in Assam and Tripura is sought to be revitalised by dissolving the pradesh Congress committees and appointing "ad hoc" executive bodies in their places, the main thrust of the rejuvenation programme will be on involving the local youth in the party activities.

With this aim in mind, it has been decided to hold the national council meeting of the Indian Youth Congress (I) and a convention of the Youth Congress (I) units of Assam, Nagaland, Manipur, Tripura, Meghalaya, Mizoram and Arunachal Pradesh here on October 13 and 14.

All the national council members of the Indian Youth Congress (I), which includes over 40 MPs and all pradesh Youth Congress (I) presidents of the seven political units of the region, will participate in the national council meeting as well as the convention.

One thousand delegates from the seven pradesh Youth Congress (I) units of the north-eastern region will attend the convention. Besides the Congress (I) leaders of the north-eastern region, the convention will be addressed by Mr. C. M. Stephen, Union minister of communication, Mr. Ghulam Nabi Azad, MP and president of the Indian Youth Congress (I), Mr. Rajiv Gandhi MP, Mr. Arun Nehru, MP and Mr. P. K. Thungon, Union deputy minister of rehabilitation.

The star attraction of the convention, Mr. Rajiv Gandhi, will have a busy schedule during his visit to the north-eastern region. He will inaugurate free eye camps at Tura (Meghalaya) on October 11, Itanagar and Pasighat (Arunachal Pradesh) and Mokikchung (Nagaland) on October 12.

The free eye camps in the four parliamentary constituencies of north-eastern India will be sponsored by the Sanjay Gandhi memorial trust as a part of their campaign to organise such camps in 100 parliamentary constituencies all over India.

GUPTA REPORTS ON AITUC GENERAL COUNCIL MEETING

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 27 Sep 81 pp 1, 8

[Text] AITUC has expressed serious concern over the findings of the Jamshedpur riot inquiry committee which squarely blamed the RSS and the BMS along with the Jamaat-e-Islami for a major role in the violence there.

The general council met in the Capital from 23 to 25 September to take stock of the current political developments and the situation in the labour field since its 31st session held in Visakhapatnam last October.

AITUC general secretary Indrajit Gupta, MP, released the council's decisions to newsmen on Saturday.

In a resolution on the Jamshedpur riot inquiry report the general council noted that the 'findings of the commission are great lessons for all the secular forces, particularly those who advocate joint working with such communal organisations.

When they were in power these organisations could totally paralyse the administration by rousing communal feelings, as it happened at Jamshedpur or previously at Ranchi during the days of the SVD government,' it added.

The resolution urged the Government to immediately act upon the recommendations of the report and 'launch prosecutions against all the named persons and organisations.'

It directed all AITUC affiliates to 'educate the working class about the findings of the commission.'

Giving a review of the deliberations at the meeting, Mr Gupta said it had been agreed that the working class should at the moment follow a 'two-pillar policy' to defend the country's security and territorial integrity with all its might as the most consistent patriotic force in the present complex regional situation, and fight with all its strength the retrograde internal policies of the Government aimed at curbing the workers' movement and curtailment of working class rights.

He said AITUC's leading activists at the meeting were all united in taking a balanced position on the whole. While they were not prepared to overlook the threat to our country's security, they could not accept the Government's moves to deprive the working class of its legitimate rights in the name of the war danger.

Mr Gupta regretted that the Essential Services' Maintenance Act had been passed at a time when the mandays lost due to strike were on the decline and when the mandays lost due to lock-outs were on the rise. Moreover about 2,200 units throughout the country were closed in the name of being 'sick!' Therefore, it was the employer, not the worker, who was responsible for dislocation of production.

This thoroughly anti-worker legislation was enacted 'to gratify Indian and international monopolies,' he claimed.

Commenting on the dismal economic situation, he said the AITUC anticipated 'much worser developments in the coming days leading to further erosion of the worker's real wages and greater resort to repressive measures on the part of the Government. In this context, he underscored Communications Minister C. M. Stephen's threat to P and T workers and the move afoot to impound 50 per cent of the Government employees' DA.

'In our view a confrontation with the Government is approaching and we feel that the working class as the most organised contingent must be at the head of that confrontation,' he stressed.

The general council has, in this context, appealed to the President to refuse assent to the ESMA in view of the universal resentment of the working class to its enactment.

Mr Gupta said the general council was keen to see full implementation of the decisions of the Bombay trade union convention of eight trade union centres held last June. The programme decided there was to hold an all-India Protest and Demands Day on 3 November, followed by a massive rally of the working people before Parliament on 23 November. The AITUC unions would be in the forefront of these actions, Mr Gupta assured.

The council urged the workers to be prepared for an all-India one-day general strike, the date for which would be decided by the National Campaign Committee.

It criticised the US Administration for going in for the neutron bomb, and arming Pakistan and urged the workers to be vigilant against an 'imperialist conspiracy to destabilise' the developing democracies.

VENKATARAMAN SPEAKS AT WORLD BANK-IMF MEETING

Calcutta THE STATESMAN in English 2 Oct 81 pp 1, 9

[Article by Warren Unna]

[Text] Washington, Oct. 1--Mr R. Venkataraman, Union Finance Minister, yesterday countered the Reagan Administration's challenge to multinational lending through the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund, and the challenge to India's own borrowing needs in particular.

"Most of the low-income countries face a grim situation. Their terms of trade have deteriorated sharply at a time when their export markets are stagnant and protectionism has increased. Their combined current account deficit has risen from $37 billion in 1978 to $84 billion in 1980. And this has happened when financing has become much more difficult. Aid flows are stagnant, and in some cases declining, while commercial borrowing has been made prohibitively expensive.

"We live in a world of scarce resources which need to be efficiently used. But the search for efficiency is not likely to be promoted by assertion of simplistic solution...which assume that the private sector is always more efficient than the public sector," the Minister declared here in his formal address before the combined annual meetings of the World Bank and the IMF. And later, before Indian reporters, he took on Mr Donald Regan, U.S. Secretary of the Treasury, for publicly raising doubts over whether the IMF should go ahead and approve a loan of five billion Special Drawing Rights (the IMF's bookkeeping "paper gold" which is worth $5.6 to $5.7 billion) to India.

Mr Regan, who has been hinting at outright U.S. opposition to the loan, the largest the IMF ever has considered, yesterday told a Press conference he considered it "very large and very unusual...and we want our executive director (on the IMF board) to take a very close look at it."

"The Secretary of the Treasury cannot raise any objection, only the executive director when the IMF board considers its staff recommendations on November 9...I can't go on what appears in the newspapers as the official statement of the U.S. Government," Mr Venkataraman countered.

India is depending upon the loan to tide over its widening gap in foreign exchange reserves to steady its economy until export earnings increase and its dependency on costly foreign oil imports decreases (as India's own oil reserves begin to produce). The Finance Minister explained that the larger half of the loan, 2.6 billion SDRs, is to be made available at 10 per cent interest through funds supplied to the IMF by Saudi Arabia and the remaining 40 per cent, 2.4 billion SDRs, will come from the IMF's own extended reserve fund at 6 per cent interest. The loan is to be for three years.

Mr Venkataraman also confirmed to reporters that India intends to seek a $2-billion loan from the Asian Development Bank for a five-year period beginning in 1983, after the Asian Development Bank gets its projected capital increase. That loan money will be at 9 per cent to 10 per cent interest, he explained.

But Mr Regan, as well as President Ronald Reagan himself in his address on Tuesday, have been telling this gathering of Finance Ministers and central bank heads that the time has come for developing nations to become less dependent upon subsidized international loans and instead seek their luck from private sector banks at commercial interest rates.

"There is no single philosophy for all the world's needs," Mr Venkataraman told reporters. "Certain sectors, like infrastructure and irrigation, are not profitable for private investment and therefore are not attractive. But these are vital for development. So it is not a question of the private vs. the public sector, but of what is good for the individual country."

Mr Venkataraman said India had no objection to "co-financing"--the World Bank and the IMF collaborating with private banks in making loans--"just don't make it a condition and say that, unless there is co-financing, there will not be multinational financing."

The U.S. Secretary of the Treasury also has cast doubt on future U.S. contributions to the World Bank's International Development Association financing, the no-interest, long-term repayment loans of which India has been the single largest beneficiary (40 per cent) over the past several decades. There has been a clear hint that once the current sixth replenishment of IDA is completed, the USA will not come forward with any more funds for a seventh replenishment.

And even for IDA-VI, the U.S. Congress has been balking at fulfilling the commitments it already pledged, and the Reagan Administration has come up with a scheme to "stretch out" its financial contributions over a longer period.

IDA's peril was dramatized with the announcement yesterday that the industrial national deputies representing the other IDA donors now had become fed up with "carrying" the USA's delinquent contributions with advance pledges of their own and, for the remaining second and third-year instalments for IDA-VI, they now would make their money available only after the USA did. Since the USA is IDA's single largest contributor, and since IDA funding cannot flow until, by its charter, 80 per cent of the contributions are in to trigger the flow, this puts even the completion of the IDA-VI loan programme in jeopardy.

"As far as the developing countries are concerned, there is a sense of doom here that the multinational funding will be either reduced or be subjected to very hard conditions," Mr Venkataraman told reporters.

President Reagan's Administration has come to regard multinational organizations and their lending functions as performing the same kind of "charity" it has castigated America's own social institutions for conducting on the domestic scene. Mr Reagan's Republican Party traditionally has looked to the private sector as the cure-all for economic ills. It was the Democratic Party which started so many of the social welfare institutions that Mr Reagan's Administration now is attempting to dismantle. And it also was the Democratic Party which took the lead in organizing the Bretton Woods conference to start the World Bank and the IMF and help the world recover from World War II.

AP adds: Mr Venkataraman has said the crux of the problem facing oil-importing developing nations is financing balance of payments deficits. India has taken strong measures to reduce dependence on imported oil, he told the annual meeting of the IMF and World Bank yesterday. But, he added, the effort needed time and money to take effect.

He said "it will be necessary to finance a substantial balance of payments deficit"--an apparent reference to India's current negotiations for the IMF's largest loan of about $5.6 billion.

The chairman of the North-South Commission, Mr Willy Brandt, has criticized the Reagan Administration's insistence on curtailing aid to developing countries and called for immediate global negotiations on the matter, according to Tanjug.

He told reporters that he would soon send an open letter to the 22 heads of Government and State at next month's Cancun summit underlining the need for such negotiations. Mr Brandt said he expected the meeting to take concrete decisions or at least pass recommendations on the matter.

Reuter adds: Developing countries have renewed their call for more aid at the IMF and World Bank meeting despite strong U.S. opposition. Pakistan's Finance Minister, Mr Ghulam Khan, told the meeting that despite the economic lull, the industrial world would add more than $200 billion to its combined income this year.

He said only one-tenth of one per cent of that amount was needed to fund the the World Bank's affiliate, the International Development Association. Supported by delegates from Latin America, Asia and Africa, he urged the industrial Powers to expand their funding of the organization and not to place all their faith in the effectiveness of the private sector.

The Indonesian Finance Minister, Mr Ali Wardhana, said a flow of resources into the less-developed countries was essential to keep their economies going and their people alive. "The survival of their economies and their people is dependent on concessional aid."

A further expression of concern about the worsening economic situation came yesterday at the United Nations. A statement from Foreign Ministers of more than 100 developing countries said a global debate on economic issues "continued to be jeopardized by one country."

The statement, a direct reference to the USA, was issued by the so-called Group of 77, now numbering about 120 countries. And in Mexico City, President Jose Lopez Portillo said humanity ran the risk of "crucifying itself" if next month's summit between rich and poor countries was unsuccessful.

Mr Mohsen Nurbakshah, Governor of Iran's Central Bank, said Iran had decided to remain a member of the IMF, Teheran Radio said today. The radio quoted him as telling the official Pars news agency: "We will use international institutions as a means to express the views of our country and also to help countries under foreign domination to free themselves."

Mr Nurbakshah said Iran would support efforts by the Palestine Liberation Organization to become a member of the IMF and World Bank.

STATE IRRIGATION MINISTERS HOLD DELHI MEETING

Calcutta THE STATESMAN in English 2 Oct 81 p 9

[Text] New Delhi, Oct. 1--Almost all States have supported the Union Government's proposal for Central legislation to establish a National Water Development Council for speedy resolution of inter-State river water disputes and to frame a national water policy. The consensus emerged at the sixth conference of State Irrigation Ministers which ended here yesterday.

Rao Birendra Singh, Minister for Irrigation and Agriculture, who presided over the conference, told reporters that only Kerala and West Bengal had expressed reservations on the Centre's proposal. West Bengal wanted to know the details of the proposal which envisaged inclusion of all Chief Ministers as members of the Council. However, he clarified that it would continue to be a State subject and it was not the intention of the Union Government to encroach upon the rights of States.

The Centre would only be authorized to prepare plans for inter-State rivers. Under this agency, there would be five river basin commissions with State chief engineers as members.

The Union Minister said that the Centre's idea was to consult the States and there was no compulsion. The Centre would think of introducing legislation only if it was acceptable to all States. At the conference, the Centre's attempt was to remove the misgivings of dissenting States and its plea was to have a national perspective on the utilization of water.

The State Ministers' conference also approved of the Centre's proposal for establishing a Central Water Development Agency for investigation, studies and project formulation of inter-State rivers. All Chief Ministers would be its members, while engineers from States would be involved in making investigations and feasibility reports.

Kerala dissented on this proposal. The State's plea was that investigation should be left to the States and the Centre should assist them in this work.

Rao Birendra Singh said that the Centre had already written to State Chief Ministers seeking their consent for becoming members of the proposed agency.

The Minister laid stress on quick resolution of inter-State disputes. Many projects were held up. Some for more than 10 years, because of such disputes. The result was that only 15 per cent of the 1,440 million acre ft of available surface water was being utilized by constructing storages.

Nepal, he said had agreed to look for storage sites for the Pancheshwar, Karnali and the Rapti projects. "If these projects come up the flood problem in the eastern region would be solved," Bao Birendra Singh said.

Also, storage sites were being investigated in Arunachal. In case the exercise was fruitful, the ravages of Brahmaputra floods would also be taken care of partially.

A resolution on ground water development suggested that a committee be appointed to recommend organizational framework within the States to promote such development in the private sector and to monitor the programmes with effective linkages with lending agencies, Government agencies and farmers.

The resolution noted that there was considerable scope for ground water development in Bihar, West Bengal, Orissa, Assam and Madhya Pradesh.

STATE INDUSTRY MINISTERS MEET IN DELHI

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 2 Oct 81 p 1

[Text] The one-day conference of the State Industries Ministers held in the Capital on Thursday to consider the report of the Sivaraman committee on development of backward areas proved an exercise in futility as sharply divergent views surfaced on most of the important recommendations of the committee.

Industry Minister N. D. Tiwari, while summing up the day-long discussion, remarked that there were differences in regard to the committee's recommendations on criteria for defining backward areas, selection of growth centres and related institutions for infrastructural development.

He merely expressed the hope that it would be possible to evolve a scheme generally acceptable and conducive to industrial dispersal.

The special meeting, attended by three Chief Ministers and Industry Ministers of 20 States and Union Territories, recognised that industrial dispersal was integral to the total strategy of industrial development.

The Sivaraman committee had in its report to the Planning Commission made several recommendations regarding the criteria for declaration of backward areas, the strategy of setting up of growth centres for infrastructure and industrial development and encouragement of entrepreneurship and small-scale and ancillary industries in backward areas.

On the question of suggested criteria of cut-off distance from a developed centre, it was pointed out that smaller States, tribal areas and hill areas may not find this criteria helpful. Further, backward pockets in the vicinity of developed centres in industrially advanced States like Maharashtra, Gujarat and Tamilnadu would be adversely affected by the application of this criteria.

There were also differences regarding the committee's suggestion to allocate growth centres in a 70:30 ratio between backward and developed States.

However, there was general welcome to the nucleus plant development programme and some of the participants requested the Centre to take early decision regarding incentive package to be made available to investors in nucleus plant locations.

Special problems of the North-Eastern States were also mentioned.

DELHI STEPS UP WATCH ON TERRORIST GROUPS

Madras THE HINDU in English 28 Sep 81 p 1

[Article by G. K. Reddy]

[Text] New Delhi, Sept 27--Security procedures are being tightened all over the country, under orders of the Central Government, for keeping a close watch on the activities and movements of suspected foreigners and their local accomplices connected with international or domestic terrorist organisations.

Indian intelligence agencies, working in concert with Interpol, have compiled lists of suspects, to be brought under surveillance on the basis of computer records of their antecedents.

The Government is also taking parallel action to step up vigilance against known criminals, communal elements, political activists and others prone to inciting violence.

Police experts in criminal investigation, counter-espionage and forensic sciences have been analysing every unusual case of arson, loot, sabotage, murder, subversion, smuggling, terrorism and even disinformation to detect possible patterns behind such offences which require further probing to track down the culprits.

Revival Seen in Many Countries

After a relative lull of over a year, there is a rivival of international terrorism which is compelling many countries to take stringent action to forestall the danger, if possible, or face the threat with deterrent measures to combat it.

As a coordinating agency, Interpol pools and analyses all available information and alerts the countries concerned.

Threats of foreign-inspired terrorism take different forms in different countries depending on their political vulnerability, laxity in security and exposure to external subversion. At the internal level, terrorism assumes the dimension of insurgency and incitement to violence depending on the prevailing unrest in a particular region.

Border Security Force and other paramilitary units assist the army in preventing infiltration across the borders in places like Kashmir and the north-east region.

Security forces also cooperate with the local police in coping with insurgency in these places.

Threats From Outside

But, when it comes to international terrorism, it had to be handled by the internal and external intelligence services with the cooperation of the governments concerned. The External Affairs and Home Ministries have to act together in first assessing the nature of the threat and then dealing with it.

Apart from protecting the top leaders of the Government, the security agencies have to ensure that the diplomatic missions are not exposed to terrorism. They have also to prevent sabotage of essential services during times of external threat or internal subversion.

It is in this context that a serious view has been taken of the involvement of the Iraqi embassy staff in a shooting incident, since it has demonstrated how easily a foreign diplomatic establishment can bring firearms into the country without authorisation.

The Government proposes to send out a circular to all missions drawing their attention to the relevant provisions of the Vienna Convention and asking them to declare and surrender any unauthorised arms in their possession.

Arms Smuggling

The smuggling of arms into the country is being supplemented by the illicit manufacture of weapons which find their way into the hands of terrorists and other anti-social elements. According to police experts, hardly 10 per cent of such unlicensed weapons are detected while the other 90 per cent remains with unauthorised persons.

A disquieting feature is that a good many of the weapons captured from criminals are of foreign manufacture, which indicates a flourishing underground trade in unlicensed arms. The Government is taking steps to plug loopholes in the licensing procedures to ensure that owners of smuggled weapons do not regularise their possession by obtaining licences for them.

There will be stricter control hereafter of imports by diplomatic missions to prevent abuse of this privilege for bringing in unauthorised arms and ammunition. Only the sealed diplomatic pouch containing reports and other communications the host country cannot insist on inspecting. It can insist on a customs scrutiny of all other imports, although no duty can be levied on them.

STATES TOLD TO PREPARE PLAN FOR RURAL PROJECTS

Bombay THE TIMES OF INDIA in English 2 Oct 81 p 15

[Text] New Delhi, October 1--The ministry of rural reconstruction has asked the states to prepare a shelf of projects, district-block wise, on a priority basis as a continuous process on a sufficiently dispersed scale, under the national rural employment programme.

The rationale is that its precursor, the food-for-work programme, which while creating numerous assets did not ensure the selection and execution of works on a systematic basis.

Besides, according to the government, the programme's dimensions having increased considerably, the concept of a shelf of projects is appropriate.

Basic Facilities

The states have been told that while preparing the shelf of projects, it is not necessary that it should fit into the annual or five-year plans. The basic idea is that it should cover all the minimum needs of the people with a view to providing them with basic facilities.

The number of works to be executed during a given year out of these shelf of projects, will depend on the resources being made available in each block or district.

The population of marginal farmers and farm labour on the one hand and the incidence of poverty on the other constitute the basis for allocation of resources. As much as 75 per cent weightage is given to the number of farm workers and marginal farmers in making the allocations.

Technical institutions like the IITs, agricultural universities and engineering colleges as also voluntary agencies will be associated in the preparation of the shelf of projects. A system for the periodic review of the projects and monitoring of the progress in execution will be evolved by the states.

A note circulated among participants in a government-sponsored workshop on the programme says that the maximum quantity of grains given to workers is now restricted to one kg per head per day. Some state governments insist that the quantity should be doubled.

Acknowledging the "tight position of grains stocks," the note says supply had been irregular or delayed.

The ministry has suggested that for smooth implementation of the programme, the states should build up their own stocks of coarse grains to meet the requirements of the programme. It is suggested that the state governments should procure grains like jowar, bajra, maize and ragi which are locally grown. This will also save the cost of transport.

The ministry has pointed out that since 50 per cent of the funds are now provided in the state budget and half of the remaining 50 per cent are made available to the states at the beginning of the year itself, the states could arrange the procurement of locally-available grains.

CHAIRMAN REPORTS STATE TRADING CENTER OPERATIONS

Calcutta THE STATESMAN in English 30 Sep 81 p 9

[Text] New Delhi, Sept. 29--The State Trading Corporation achieved an all-time record turnover of Rs. 1,670 crores during 1980-81 compared with Rs. 1,529 crores in the previous year, thus registering a 9 per cent increase, Mr Abid Hussain, STC's chairman, said today.

He claimed at the end of the 25th annual general meeting that the turnover of the STC group comprising the STC and its five subsidiaries, namely the Projects and Equipment Corporation, State Chemicals and Pharmaceuticals Corporation, Handicrafts and Handlooms Export Corporation (including Central Cottage Industries Corporation) and Cashew Corporation has risen to Rs 1,875 crores compared with Rs 1,752 crores during 1979-80--an increase of 7 per cent.

During the year 1980-81, the corporation contributed to the Government exchequer Rs 3 crores by way of dividends and Rs 37.50 crores by way of taxes. In the 25 years of its existence, the corporation has contributed directly to the national exchequer Rs 231 crores as corporate taxes and Rs 24 crores as dividend.

Explaining the reasons for lower exports (Rs 440 crores against Rs 626 crores last year), Mr Hussain said this was due to a substantial decline (of nearly 48 per cent) in exports of mainly canalized items like sugar, molasses, castor oil and semi-processed leather. Export of sugar dwindled because of a ban on the export imposed by the Government and of molasses because of restricted availability in the domestic market.

Castor oil exports suffered a setback owing to lack of parity in the international and domestic prices. Exports of semi-processed leather were low, partly because of the Government's policy of discouraging semi-processed leather exports to make more leather available for value-added goods and partly because of a general slump in the market. Mr Hussain said the corporation laid more emphasis on the export of non-canalized items. For the first time during 1980-81, non-canalized exports exceeded canalized exports.

During the year, the corporation introduced a number of new items of exports and found new markets for a number of traditional items. It gave special attention to various promotional measures like making improvements in quality, grading and packaging and providing infrastructural facilities to export units. For example, supply of leather, soling materials and imported sole and elastic was arranged for shoe-manufacturing units. Production of machine grade shoes was centrally organized to standardize the size and fittings.

The corporation played an important part in meeting the domestic needs of items like edible oils, newsprint, sugar, cement and white printing paper. Import turnover of the corporation touched new heights during the year, viz Rs 1,214 crores in 1980-81, against Rs 884 crores in 1979-80. The import of edible oils during the year reached a level of 1,100,000 tons against 840,000 tons in the previous year--to meet the increased requirements under the public distribution system, and meet the needs of the vanaspati units.

To handle the higher level of imports efficiently and maintain buffer stocks, the corporation maintained 400,000 tons of storage capacity in various port towns, and inland destinations. Import of sugar during the current year was 215,000 tons (against 181,000 tons in the previous year) of which 170,000 tons had already landed and the balance was expected to arrive in the next 10 days. There are no plans for import of further sugar. The landed price per kg of sugar is Rs 5.50.

BACKWARD AREAS DEVELOPMENT GROUP ADVICE REPORTED

Bombay THE TIMES OF INDIA in English 2 Oct 81 p 5

[Text] New Delhi, October 1 (PTI)--The establishment of industrial development authorities with sufficient administrative and financial powers in identified industrial growth centres has been recommended by the Sivaraman committee for development of backward areas.

This, in the committee's view, would help in co-ordinated efforts to develop the infrastructure and planned growth of industries.

Some of the recommendations of the committee were outlined by the Union minister for industry, Mr. N. D. Tiwari, today while addressing state industry ministers meeting here to consider them.

The department of industrial development, Mr. Tiwari said was considering further measures for rationalising industrial approvals specially for units to be set up in the backward areas.

The Sivaraman committee had drawn the conclusion that while schemes for development of backward areas had induced investors to those regions, the results had been uneven. In particular, the committee had noted that availability of infrastructure, including skilled workforce, governed investment decisions.

The committee had stressed the importance of concentrating all promotional efforts by the Central and state agencies in certain identified growth centres with some available infrastructure. In the committee's view, this would be the quickest way to generate growth impulses in selected points within the concerned backward areas, which could be transmitted down the line.

For implementing the growth centre approach, the committee had suggested setting up of industrial development authorities at those centres with sufficient administrative and financial powers delegated to them for co-ordinated development of infrastructure and planned growth of industries.

Mr. Tiwari said while the final report of the committee was awaited, the present meeting had been called to consider its report on industrial dispersal in a wider perspective of evolving alternative strategies for development of backward areas in accordance with the plan objective.

According to the committee, Mr. Tiwari said, the industrial estate programme launched some years ago did not seem to have achieved its objective of relocating industries away from developed areas.

The licensing policy did not also possess sufficient positive content to direct investment to chosen backward areas resulting in congregation of industries at certain locations even within the backward areas with well-developed infrastructural facilities.

Solanki's Objection

The committee has also recommended a criterion of varying cut-off distances from the developed urban centres depending on the number of persons engaged in non-household manufacturing employment beyond which both Central subsidy and concessional finance should be equally applicable.

A bigger role had been suggested for the Industrial Development Bank of India (IDBI) and various Central and state agencies in the promotion and development of entrepreneurship in backward areas.

The committee has outlined the framework within which the financing of these arrangements could be shared between the Centre and the states on the one hand and between budgetary and institutional funds on the other.

Mr. Tiwari said industrial development of backward areas must serve three purposes--dispersal of industry, diffusion of entrepreneurship and generation of employment and income to the local population. These should be the tests, which could apply while accepting or amending the recommendations of the committee.

Underlining the need for purposeful and concerted efforts by the state industrial administration in the development of backward areas, Mr. Tiwari urged the states to create effective monitoring cells to ensure utilisation of letters of intent and licences and ensure that industrial approvals were translated into projects, especially in backward areas.

He also suggested opening more industrial training institutes in backward areas to develop skilled manpower.

The Gujarat chief minister, Mr. Madhasinh Solanki, termed the committee's recommendation on dispersal of industrial units to backward areas as "rather arbitrary and unrealistic."

Mr. Solanki generally welcomed the committee's recommendation. But he did not agree with the recommendation that dispersal should be done on a cut-off distance of 50 to 150 km away from the industrial centres. This would leave more than three-fourths of Gujarat's underdeveloped tribal areas from the scope of industrialisation.

He pointed out his government's experience that taking large industrial units like a public-sector project to an underdeveloped area did not solve the problem of backwardness of the local area.

The Tamil Nadu industry minister, Mr. S. Tirunavukarasu, rejected the recommendations on dispersal of units and said that the recommendation would hit hard the state as only two or three of the 159 talukas in the state would be eligible to be called "backward."

"Tamil Nadu will be penalised only for having ensured industrial dispersal in the past," he said.

He felt that the committee should have noted that even within 30 to 40 km of major metropolitan centres, there were a number of villages as backward as in far away places.

DACCA TREATMENT OF CHITTAGONG TRIBALS SCORED

Bombay THE TIMES OF INDIA in English 1 Oct 81 p 4

[Editorial: "Escape From Terror"]

[Text] It is truly extraordinary that Dacca should deny that a large-scale influx of tribals has taken place into the Indian state of Tripura from the Chittagong Hills Tract, the south-eastern district of Bangladesh. They are there for anyone to see. About 15,000 of them have crossed over into the Indian border state in the last two weeks alone. They have been provided shelter in makeshift camps. This exodus is the result of a new wave of terror unleashed against the tribals--Hindus, Christians and Buddhists--by Muslims who have been trying to seize their lands. The authorities, needless to add, have been siding with the aggressors. Shanti Vahini, the organisation which has spearheaded a movement for tribal autonomy, has been involved in clashes not only with Muslim militants but also the security forces. Instead of trying to redress the tribals' legitimate grievances, the authorities have sought to crush them in the name of combating terrorism. Last year, a number of western correspondents visited the area. They returned with shocking accounts of atrocities, particularly against the Chakmas, the Buddhist tribals. The protests then voiced by foreign humanitarian organisations and the Buddhist countries in Asia appeared to have had a salutary effect in Dacca. But things have deteriorated once again for the minorities in Bangladesh.

The latest outbreak of large-scale violence in the Chittagong Hills Tract has followed troubles in the capital as well as other towns in the wake of the recent execution of 12 army officers convicted of being involved in the assassination of President Zia-ur-Rahman last summer. It is difficult to say whether there is any connection between the two developments. But it is possible that the executions represent the triumph of Islamic crusaders against the saner and more secular elements in Bangladesh. The executed officers were freedom fighters who had taken part in the 1971 struggle. But that apart, extremists have in recent weeks again felt free to renew their attacks on the non-Muslim tribals. The Bangladesh government has been guilty of a grave abdication of responsibility by failing to check this systematic violence against the minorities. It is compounding its irresponsibility by denying the fact of the exodus. New Delhi has been tolerant, in fact too tolerant. It has contented itself with drawing Dacca's attention to the flight of the tribals and asking it to stop it. This apparently does not impress those in charge of affairs in Dacca. India will need to act more firmly if it is not to be saddled with lakhs of tribal refugees. To begin with, it can ask the U.N. authorities to verify the facts. Once that is done, it must insist that Bangladesh makes it possible for them to return to their ancestral homes.

OVERSEAS PROJECTS USING INDIAN TECHNOLOGY NOTED

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 30 Sep 81 p 5

[Text] Over 200 projects, based on Indian technology, are in production or in the process of implementation in 39 countries, according to the Indian Investment Centre (IIC) in Delhi, reports PTI.

Most of these have been set up with Indian equity participation. In a move to make Indian capabilities known more widely, the IIC has brought out a series of publications like "India Offers Technology" and "Technologies from India."

The publication provides information as to the areas where technologies are available in India and on Indian companies interested in providing such assistance.

Chairman and executive Director of IIC Harbans Singh points out that besides the 200 joint ventures, there has been a "phenomenal growth" of Indian consultancy services in the fields of design and process engineering, management and accounting.

The IIC has also published an investment guide for non-resident Indians listing all facilities provided by the Central Government and some of the State Governments to attract investments and remittances.

There are over six million Indians and persons of Indian origin abroad. Among them are thousands of professionals in various discipline as well as large number of skilled and semi-skilled workers employed in various countries.

The publication brings out the series of policy liberalisations effected in recent years and incorporates government's industrial licensing and foreign collaboration policies.

A guide to entrepreneurs "investing in India" has also been brought out by the IIC intended to give all essential information relating to licensing, collaboration, investment and other procedures, incentives and exchange control regulations.

BACKGROUND ON 29 SEP HIJACK LEADER GIVEN

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 30 Sep 81 pp 1, 7

[Text] Chandigarh, Sept 29--Mr Gajinder Singh, the leader of the hijackers, is one of the five members of "Dal Khalsa Panchayat," the supreme government body of young Sikhs.

Mr Singh, a handsome young man in his late twenties, is a graduate from a local college. He is married and has a six-month-old daughter. His wife is reported to be teaching in some private school at the Sahibzada Ajit Singh Nagar (Mohali) near here where Mr Gajinder Singh's residence is.

His mother Ranjit Kaur in mid-fifties and father Manohar Singh in mid-sixties live in Sector 23 of Chandigarh. The father has a small kirpana and general provision shop.

When this correspondent informed the father about his son's role in the hijacking, he appeared surprised but not shocked. The mother instead looked in complete balance.

Mrs Ranjit Kaur is a deeply religious woman and said that "her son had been always like that. He was a fanatic believer of 'Khalsa Raj.' Ever since he crossed matriculation he had been nurturing the idea of 'Khalistan.' He graduated from a local college and the thought of 'Khalsa Raj' was in him all the time," she told this correspondent.

The living room of his parental house looked to be the entire making of a man who was unbreakably wedded to an idea. The photo of Kapur Singh, former ICS and 'national professor of Sikhism' decorated the corner table in the room. A strip of photographs of Guru Nanak on one hand and Guru Gobind Singh on the other and two Sahibzadas between was another framed article to decorate the table.

Mr Gajinder Singh's sister Mrs Indermoham Kaur had contested the famous case pleading that Sikh women could not be forced to wear helmet while driving a two wheeler as per the law. The case in which SGPC president Gurcharan Singh Tohra, MP, had appeared as witness had been won by Mrs Indermohan Kaur leading to the exemption by the administration here and in Punjab from wearing helmet by all women driving two-wheelers, as the identification as to which lady was a sikh and which not was too tedious.

Slogans

Khalistan zindabad was among the slogans that decorated the main wall of the parental house of Mr Gajinder Singh. A sticker on almirah glass proclaimed 'tere sarian dukhan da daru--Raj Khalsa" (the treatment for all your ills--is Raj Khalsa). The almirah contained all sorts of books on religio-political matters dear to Dal Khalsa.

According to reports available from all over the State Mr Gajinder Singh had been staying for the last many days in room number 37 of Guru Nanak Niwas, an imposing mansion in the premises of SGPC controlled Golden Temple at Amritsar.

He left the place along with some others only five days back. The CID and police had instructions for his arrest but he managed to escape. He was last seen by an agency reporter along with Mr Sukhjinder Singh, MLA at Jullundur.

Another young man again a member of the five member top command of Dal Khalsa, Mr Harsimran Singh was also with him. Mr Harsimran Singh had been in service till about two months back in the Bhai Vir Singh Studies in Punjabi literature, headed by professor Vishwa Nath Tewari, politically close to the Congress-I.

Mr Harsimran Singh, who reportedly also included among those who hijacked the plane had, however, recently resigned his job. Mr Gajinder Singh on the other hand had been dismissed from Punjab Education Department as clerk when he wrote a book titled 'Panj Tir Hor' (five more arrows). The book had been banned by both the State and the Central Governments.

The CID file on Mr Gajinder Singh, by now a volumous thing, reveals that he was an old supporter of demand for Sikh homeland.

These Dal Khalsa leaders had addressed a press conference here only a fortnight ago. They had been acting mostly from a gurdwara at Sahibzada Ajit Singh Nagar (Mohali), a small upcoming new industrial township adjoining Chandigarh but falling in Ropar district of Punjab.

The news that hijackers were Dal Khalsa people has benumbed the entire top civil and police administration.

REPORT ON RAO 28 SEP SPEECH TO GENERAL ASSEMBLY

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 29 Sep 81 p 3

[Text] United Nations, Sept 28 (PTI)--External Affairs Minister P. V. Narasimha Rao today expressed India's grave concern over the deteriorating security environment in the South Asia region.

While India does not find itself helpless in any way, we view with deep concern the possibility of the strategic calculations of outside powers engulfing countries in our region, he said.

Speaking during the general debate in the general assembly Mr Rao said that, on its part, India wanted to have strong and self-reliant neighbours. India was convinced that this was necessary in its own interests.

All the countries in the region faced similar economic problems and they should devote their energies towards development, he added.

Regional Cooperation

Some constructive steps have been considered in the direction of strengthening regional cooperation among the states of South Asia, Mr Rao said. He praised the late Bangladesh President Zia-ur-Rahman for the dedicated efforts he made in this direction.

India based its relations with neighbours on sovereign equality, recognition of mutuality of interests and perceptions.

India, he said, was also committed to the principles of the UN charter and non-alignment. Our twin commitments, in the field of foreign policy, are based on the objective of necessity to contribute in a positive manner towards the creation of a peaceful and cooperative world, he said.

There is a conscious and declared attempt to make relations with the developing countries a function of the East-West variable and to evaluate these relations in terms of the utility factor in the East-West game. Consideration of the material well-being, peace or stability of a country are being subordinated to those of strategic superiority and containment, Mr Rao said in a conference to the world situation.

Referring to Afghanistan, Mr Rao said India had unequivocally opposed the presence of foreign troops in any country.

For us, he said, this includes Afghanistan, whereas presumably to some other countries, this should apply only to Afghanistan.

He hoped the UN Secretary General's request to start a dialogue would succeed. The people of Afghanistan had a big stake in his success.

On Kampuchea, Mr Rao said, India would join in all constructive efforts aimed at seeking a peaceful solution of the problems of South East Asia.

It was necessary to reassure the Kampuchean people that their erstwhile persecutors--the Pol Pot regime--would never be allowed to return and unleash once again a reign of terror upon them.

He also objected to the presence of the Pol Pot delegation in the Assembly. It is a great irony of the times that the same despotic regime should bring the stench of their genocidal acts into this august chamber and to represent, as it were, their own victims, in a bizzare inversion of the principles of the Charter," he added.

Regarding the West Asia, he reaffirmed that a just and comprehensive solution could be found only through the total and unconditional withdrawal of Israel from the occupied Arab territories including Jerusalem city and through the exercise of their inalienable rights by the Palestinian people.

Referring to the Namibia problem Mr Rao urged the implementation of the UN independence plan as contained in the Security Council resolution.

He expressed India's solidarity with the South West Africa People's Organization and pledged moral and material support to it in its liberation struggle against South Africa.

RESOLUTIONS OF AITUC COUNCIL PARLEY REPORTED

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 28 Sep 81 p 7

[Text] The General Council of the All-India Trade Union Congress wants further strengthening of trade union unity at all levels in order to meet the rising attacks on trade union rights mounted by the Government of late.

This is highlighted in one of the resolutions adopted by the general council whose meeting was held in the Capital from 23 to 25 September.

The AITUC hailed the Bombay Convention of Trade Unions and the programme for united movement of the working class it has chalked out. But it described as "unfortunate" the fact that "in some States the unity seen at the Bombay Convention has not been fully reflected due to certain continuing differences." In this context, it appealed to all unions, organisations and federations to shed their reservations and play their full role in achieving all-round unity "without which we cannot succeed in the struggle to win our demands."

AITUC general secretary Indrajit Gupta said his organisation was keen to approach the INTUC as well notwithstanding the fact that the INTUC leadership had been extending support to the Government.

Analysing the Essential Services' Maintenance Act, the general council observed: "When the definition of 'strike' has been made so wide that any worker who for genuine reasons is not able to work is brought under its ambit, when the police are given such sweeping powers to arrest any worker without warrant and on suspicion, the diabolical intentions of the Government to beat down the working class and snatch away its rights are crystal-clear considering that the Act provides for severe punishment of summary dismissals, huge fines and imprisonment for one year, this measure is more intended to strike terror in the working class using the arm of law, instead of governing industrial relations in a proper manner."

On the recommendations of the Ramanujam Committee set up to review the working of the Employees' Provident Fund Scheme, the council strongly opposed the proposal for decentralisation and removal of departmentally run public sector units out of the EPF Act's purview. However, it conveyed full support to the other recommendations unanimously endorsed by the central TU organisations.

It further called for amendment of the Minimum Wages Law of 1948 to bring in a number of employments not covered, make Cost of Living allowance mandatory, keep the minimum wage in no case less than Rs 400 and in the range of Rs 400 to Rs 500 depending on the nature of employment, enforce the Act's implementation with a strong hand meting out stringent punishment in case of non-implementation and mal-implementation.

The general council called upon the entire trade union movement as well as peace-loving democratic forces to condemn the US move to arm Pakistan with latest F-16 fighters, tanks, etc. and exhorted them to rally in defence of peace in this area.

It also pleaded for immediate implementation of the recommendations of the Rath Committee for correction of consumer price index based on 1960, a campaign for amending the Gratuity Act, launching prosecutions against all persons and organisations named in the Jamshedpur riot inquiry commission report, minimum bonus to all with raised quantum and widest possible movement against the US decision to manufacture neutron bomb.

INDIAN COOPERATION WITH DPRK REPORTED WIDENING

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 28 Sep 81 p 3

[Text] Pyongyang, Sept 27 (PTI)--Indo-North Korean cooperation in economic, technical and cultural fields, which began on a modest scale a few years ago, is gradually widening both in scope and dimension.

This is becoming a reality as North Korea, makes determined efforts to increase industrial potential apart from liberalising some orthodox concepts of the past thanks to its joining the non-aligned movement in 1975. North Korea is a member of the coordinating bureau of non-aligned countries.

Pyongyang recently hosted one of the largest international conferences at which 81 non-aligned and other developing countries participated in a symposium on food and agricultural production besides a dozen major international organisations. It demonstrated clearly that the country is keen to embrace the outer world after remaining in seclusion for over two and a half decades.

"There has been a vast improvement in our relations, and it is still increasing," India's ambassador in Pyongyang Raj Krishan Manucha, told PTI recently.

The process of coming together of both countries appears to have received an impetus from the meeting of Prime Minister Indira Gandhi and North Korean President Kim Il Sung at late Yugoslav President Tito's funeral at Belgrade last year.

Since then several high level delegations visited either countries, and there is increasing evidence of identity of view between India and North Korea on many issues.

An Indian economic delegation led by Minister for Agriculture Rao Birendra Singh, visited here in November, while secretary (east) of the External Affairs Ministry Eric Gonsalves, was in Pyongyang in June last year.

INDO-GDR FRIENDSHIP DELEGATION ENDS GDR VISIT

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 2 Oct 81 p 3

[Text]

BERLIN, Oct 1—An eleven-member Indo-GDR friendship delegation headed by Mr R P Yadav MP left for India yesterday after a 14-day tour of the GDR.

In a statement, the delegation said they 'saw flourishing democracy and all-round progress in various spheres of life in the GDR'. They felt after visiting factories and agricultural cooperatives that production has increased tremendously without an increase in the number of workers engaged. Though mechanisation has reduced the number of workers, yet there is no unemployment in the GDR, the statement added.

Members of the delegation felt that the exchange of experiences between the peoples of India and the GDR in various spheres of life may prove useful for both the countries.

They appreciated the anti-imperialist and anti-racist policies of the GDR. The statement condemned the US global strategy of suppressing national liberation movements and denounced the US decision to produce neutron bomb, its build-up around Diego Garcia and the Indian Ocean and arming of Pakistan.

The statement issued in Berlin yesterday was signed by Mr R P Yadav MP, Prof A K Sanyal, Prof K K Nigam, Prof C P Bhambri Mr Y K Sabharwal, Mr Mohan Dungalia, Mr V P Raghavachari, Mrs M M Sehgal, Mr Alka Roy and Miss Laish Ram Sarojini all social workers and Mr B K Pal, advocate.

The delegation was received by GDR-India friendship committee president and State Secretary Kurt Loeffler besides other officials. Members of the delegation called on Indian ambassador Krishnan Raghunath.

Members of the delegation visited, besides other places, Berlin, Gera, kindergartens, pioneer camps, printing works, rural health centre, Goethe house in Weimar and world famous Dresden art galleries.

CORRESPONDENT REPORTS SITUATION IN PUNJAB

Madras THE HINDU in English 30 Sep, 1, 2 Oct 81

[Article by K. K. Katyal]

[30 Sep 81 p 8]

[Text]

WHAT is this Bhindranwale phenomenon in Sikh politics? And how strong is the extremists' demand for a separate Sikh State, Khalistan? Is there a linkage between them? The two, it can be said after a six-day study tour of Punjab are the outcome of different motivations and may converge now or later. But there is a technical possibility of their following separate, if not conflicting courses.

Then there are the Akali party, of which the former Punjab Chief Minister, Mr. Prakash Singh Badal, is a leading light, and a splinter group, led by the former President of the united party, Mr. Jasdev Singh Talwandi which do not hesitate to draw political advantage from the two thought currents, without identifying themselves with either. Why is it so? Sikh affairs are indeed, a jumble of enigmas.

To take the Khalistan demand first, it was clear that the Government had turned a Nelson's eye to its protagonists in the belief that they may get some respectability out of official attention, even though negative. They, however, made use of this indifference to step up their activities which were confined to a small band.

Sitting in a second-storey room in Nanak Niwas, the pilgrims' serai in the Golden Temple complex at Amritsar, Mr. Balbir Singh Sandhu gave me some details of the campaign. He called himself General Secretary of the National Council of Khalistan of which Dr. Jagjit Singh, a former Akali leader, now abroad, was mentioned as President. Under secret instructions from his chief, he said, they had organised rallies, hoisted their 'flag' on Aug. 15, circulated 'Khalistan currency' and sent letters with Khalistan stamps to senior officials and politicians in authority.

"Republic of Khalistan"

This was the initial phase of the campaign and therefore comprised symbolic action but he promised concrete steps later.

Mr. Sandhu gave details of the next phase including the plan to set up a "radio station", as he worked on the stove in a corner of the room to prepare tea for me. "The next time you come here, you will be an honoured guest of the 'Republic of Khalistan'", he said, as he handed over a cup to me. "You write this in your paper", he said seeing my puzzled look. "Even if I write, people won't believe me—and you', I replied. 'Why not?' he shot back.

Who is Dr. Jagjit Singh? A small-town medical practitioner of Hoshiarpur district and a middle-rank Akali, he, in the mid-sixties, became a Minister in a Cabinet of defectors supported by the Congress. That Government did not last long but the doctor did not relish the idea of being in the political wilderness and instead went abroad to begin the campaign for a separate State. Barring the two-year period of the Janata rule when he was in India, he has since remained in foreign countries, establishing contacts with the Sikhs settled abroad and getting their support, moral and material.

In another room of the Serai sat five or six young men—members of the Dal Khalsa, a PLO-type organisation, as they put it. They, too, had the same objective but concentrated on the youth, they said. "We do not know who killed Lala Jagat Narain but whoever did it, did a magnificent job', was their comment on the recent developments, as they detailed their tactical approach.

They knew, said one of them Mr. Satnam Singh (35), they would not be able to achieve their objective without armed struggle and without confrontation with the Government. "And in this, we see no harm in seeking the support of other countries who may be willing to help us." There would be nothing wrong "in our seeking and others extending help to us. Did not the Indian Government interfere in the affairs of Pakistan before Bangladesh was formed," said another.

Dal Khalsa does not have an elaborate organisational network and its activities are conducted by a five-member "presidium". Mr. Satnam Singh is one of them.

Theirs was a small group of activists it was conceded but they, as Mr. Sandhu also said earlier, "had been effective in setting into motion the new thought currents" and in "influencing the minds of the Sikh masses." They were aware they were beyond the reach of the law enforcement authorities. The Sarai is a part of the holy complex, and police do not enter the Gurdwara lest it should inflame the religious sentiments of the Sikhs.

None of the organised Sikh parties has adopted the Khalistan platform. Some of them disown it feebly but none denounces the concept firmly, categorically. On the other hand, their leaders tend to explain the rationale of the extremists' plea with an implied threat: "You concede our demands, otherwise the extremists would carry the day." In Sikh politics, moderation is equated with cowardice and even those who profess to be opposed to Khalistan take care to see that they are not dubbed as weaklings.

Some propound the theory that the Sikhs are a separate nation, others say they would seek associate membership of the U.N. and still others talk of 'Desh Punjab', or a Sikh homeland with nominal links with the Centre.

Anandpur Sahib resolution

The organised groups swear by the resolution adopted by the united Akali party in October 1973 at Anandpur Sahib near Nangal which, because of its vague wording lends itself to several interpretations. Its central point is the demand for a State where the Panth's ascendancy is ensured. It means different things to different groups to suit their political convenience from time to time.

Sant Jarnail Singh Bhindranwale represents an essentially religious force—even in Sikh affairs where religion and politics are mixable, he confined himself to his field though occasional interest in the other side could not be avoided. He is the head of a 'Taksal' or mint, the name given to the institution which is concerned with religious teachings, and interprets the Sikh scriptures in what is regarded as the only correct or pure form, just as a mint turns out pure coins as against base ones, produced clandestinely.

A devout Sikh, the Sant, at 35, is a well-known figure because of his crusading zeal to ensure the purity of the Sikh religion. A fundamentalist, one could say. He sees the Nirankari sect as the gravest threat to the Panth and does not mince words in expressing his resolve to crush them. Religious teaching is his wholetime job; though married and with two children he, according to the norms that go with his position, has virtually renounced family life.

He visits his family members along with his disciples who too have accepted the same rigid discipline. Because they keep arms as part of the Sikh tradition, they are confused with a militant sect, the Nihangs.

When it was first set up, "Taksal" was located at a village near Moga, called Bhinder, from which it derived the appellation "Bhindranwale." It was later shifted to the present location, Chowk Mehta in Amritsar district.

Not on best of terms

Sant Bhindranwale had not been on the best of terms with the Akalis, when they were in the Government or out of it. At the time of a fierce clash between his followers and the Nirankaris—on April 13, 1978, the holy day of Baisakhi—he took a senior Akali leader, Mr. Jiwan Singh Umranangal, then Revenue Minister in the coalition Government, to task publicly.

At a massive religious congregation in the Golden Temple complex that day, he snatched the mike from Mr. Umranangal and demanded official action to disperse the Nirankari convention, being held in another part of the city and failing to get an assurance, led a march to the "enemy camp."

In the confrontation that followed, his disciples suffered heavily and the memory of that day—of the Akali Government's inaction, in his view, to protect the Panth from the Nirankari attack—rankles in his mind even today.

Last year, the Sant nominated his right-hand man, the son of his predecessor, Mr. Amrik Singh, to confront Mr. Umranangal in the prestigious elections to SGPC (Shiromani Gurdwara Prabandhak Committee). Even otherwise, the Sant threw his weight against the Akalis and, in the process, was backed—hold your breath—by the Congress (I) or a section of it.

Whether it was part of a conscious policy decision or the tactical game of some in the ruling party, the impression prevailed that the Congress (I) sought to build the Sant as a counter to the Akalis, in the same way as Pratap Singh Kairon, a former Chief Minister, gave a boost to Sant Fateh Singh in the early Sixties to contain Master Tara Singh, the irrepressible Akali leader whose challenge could not be met otherwise.

Kairon's calculations were upset as his protege not only eclipsed the Master but posed a serious threat to the Government. Some such thing seems to be happening now.

Sant Bhindranwale shot into prominence with stunning suddenness, much to the discomfort of the State Government —and the Akalis. The Akali Dal, the extremists faction, in any case, backed Sant Bhindranwale to the hilt during the pre-surrender period, with emotion-packed assurances of a do-or-die struggle in the cause, taken up by the latter.

But are the Akalis happy, in their heart of hearts, over the emergence of a new force? Opinions differ. Some say, they may go slow in their championship of the Sant.

Congress fervour

Not all among the keen observers of the Punjab scene rule out the possibility of a renewed Congress fervour for this new force. Not all are prepared to believe that the Congress (I)'s links with the Sant are totally snapped carry conviction. What else is the meaning of the presence at the Chowk Mehta congregations of Jathedar Santokh Singh, President of the Delhi Gurdwara Prabandhak Committee and his emotional affirmation of solidarity with the Sant before he offered himself for arrest? The Jathedar recently captured the Delhi Gurdwara body with the help of the Congress (I) elements through an election process which the Akalis believe was rigged.

It was this case of Governmental 'interference' in the religious affairs of the Sikhs that chagrined the Akalis into planning for a "Dharam Yudh" or a holy war. Could they afford to ignore the presence of the Jathedar in the Bhindranwale camp and the pointers it threw up?

It is wrong to lump together the many centres of the Sikh politico-religious power. It is again wrong to treat the main Akali party and Sant Bhindranwale and his cult as one; or to regard the Sant and the pro-Khalistan activists as products of the same phenomenon or to suggest that Mr. Talwandi is a boson friend of the protagonists of a Sikh State. Wrong even to regard the Akali Dal as a compact, unified force.

Akali affairs deserve a detailed exposition. The party at best is an uneasy coalition of moderates, led by Mr. Badal, and not-so-moderates of which the President of Gurdwara Prabandhak Committee, Mr. Gurcharan Singh Tohra, is the rallying figure and functions under the nominal leadership of the party chief, Sant Harchand Singh Longowal. Mr. Badal and Mr. Tohra make no secret of their dislike for each other through their actions while taking care to present a facade of unity.

Mr. Badal is clear that the Sikhs, constituting 58 per cent of the population, have no chance of capturing political power without the support of a section of the Hindus, and that the Akalis could not have ruled the State in 1977-79 had they not been backed in the post-Emergency elections by the Janata Party (which in Punjab had the then Jan Sangh group as the main component), and shared power with the latter in a composite Government.

Inter-communal approach

In his opinion, there is no escape from the inter-communal approach, if the Congress is to be effectively countered. Of course, a section of Mr. Badal's associates, with a former Speaker, Mr. Ravinder Singh as its spokesman, would prefer a deal with the Congress (I) and had worked towards this end on the eve of the Assembly elections in June last year. That its efforts did not click was a different matter.

Mr. Badal's rivals in the party taunt him for his obsession and craze for office and his readiness, as they put it, to sacrifice the interests of the community in the pursuit of political power. In this tussle, Mr. Tohra is normally ranged against Mr. Badal at times with the support of Sant Longowal, at times, without it.

Was it a coincidence that Mr. Badal did not visit Chowk Mehta, while Mr. Tohra and others made a beeline towards the place last week? Left to himself, Mr. Badal would have attended the Kirya ceremony of Lala Jagat Narain. Did he refrain from doing so because of the fear that he would be misunderstood by Mr. Tohra and others?

The party stands by the Anandpur Sahib resolution which, whatever else it might say, does not call for secession. And yet there are suspicions about the Akali intentions in the minds of not only their political rivals but among the people generally in and outside Punjab. The Akalis blame it on the Congress (I). "To keep itself in power, the Congress (I) dubs us secessionists. Its idea is to create a scare among the Hindus and to keep them and the Sikhs divided for its political gains," Mr. Badal says.

This may be one side of the coin; but the other is different. The Akalis have refrained from condemning the secessionists unequivocally while the idioms, used by its extremists, are only slightly different from those employed by the votaries of Khalistan. Even while disapproving secessionist activities the party puts the blame on those responsible for the present climate of discrimination against the Sikhs, because of which "some misguided persons" talk of secession. This is not the same thing as unequivocal denunciation of Khalistan. Secondly, the Akali-controlled SGPC allows the extremists to use Gurdwaras as sanctuaries.

All this and the talk of discrimination by Sikh politicians of various hues, a section of intellectuals and others add up to silent endorsement of the extremists' platform. That is a big danger. The situation could become still more difficult if religious fundamentalists join hands with secessionists.

Akali Dal Postulates

THE following is the English text of the Anandpur Sahib resolution translated from the Punjabi by an Akali senior, Mr. Amar Singh Ambalvi.

(A) Postulates: The Akali Dal is the only body which represents and is duly authorised to represent the collective will of the Sikh Panth—a society grounded in certain postulates concerning certain mutual human inter-relationships, the condition of man and his relationship with reality.

These postulates are enshrined in the triad of the Commandments of Guru Nanak—"Kirt karo, nam japo, wand chhako" (meaning that in his relation to society man must work and share the fruits of his labour with others and in his relation to reality he must try to have a communion with the essence of things). Coupled with this triad is the trifocal doctrine of Guru Gobind Singh laying down that (a) the individual is the true source of power, (b) that he is an end in himself and must never be enslaved or exploited by others, and (c) that prosperity and happiness, in an ever increasing measure, are the birthright and destiny of mankind.

General Aims: The Akali Dal shall be active and committed to the realisation of the following aims:

(i) Propagation of the Sikh way of life and removal of atheism and un-Sikh thinking.

(ii) Maintaining the feeling of a separate independent entity of the Sikh Panth and creation of an environment in which the "national expression" of the Sikhs can be full and satisfactory.

(iii) Driving away poverty and want and efforts to increase production in order to set up a just system in place of the present unjust distribution of wealth and exploitation.

(iv) Banishing illiteracy, untouchability, social inequities and caste-based discrimination which are contrary to the great teachings of the great Gurus.

(v) An end to the causes of ill health and disease, and condemnation and banning of narcotics and other intoxicants to promote proper physical growth of people in order to prepare the nation for national defence.

Religious Aims: (i) Bringing about a new all-India Gurdwara law which will ensure a more efficient and meaningful management of places of worship and community centres than at present and helping in the achievement of re-integration of ancient Sikh preaching orders (such as Udasis and Nirmalas) into a dynamic Sikh society without encroaching upon their financial resources and property.

(ii) Bringing all the gurdwaras of the world under the banner of one organisation to make the Sikh religious procedures and proceedings uniform throughout the world and pooling and making effective the aggregate resources of religious propagation.

(iii) Obtaining free and self-regulated access to and control of Sri Nankana Sahib and other Sikh sacred places from which Sikhs have been torn asunder in the recent past.

Political Aims: The political aims of the Panth are definitely ingrained in the orders of the 10th Guru, in the pages of Sikh history and in the perspective of the Khalsa Panth, the purpose of which is the pre-eminence of the Khalsa.

To give this "birthright" of the Khalsa a practical shape, creation of the necessary environment and achievement of a political constitution are the basic ideological planks of the Akali Dal.

To achieve this end the Akali Dal will use all possible means and struggle so that:

(A) The areas which have deliberately and intentionally been kept out of Punjab—Dalhousie in Gurdaspur district, Chandigarh, Pinjore, Kalka and Ambala, Una tehsil (Hoshiarpur district), the Nalagarh region, Shehbad and Guhla blocks of Karnal district, Sirsa tehsil, Tohana sub-tehsil and Raba block of Hissar district, six tehsils of Ganganagar district in Rajasthan and other contiguous Punjabi-speaking and Sikh areas—should be immediately included in Punjab and made into a single administrative unit wherein Sikhism and the interests of the Sikhs can be especially protected."

(B) In "New Punjab" the authority of the Centre should be confined to the defence of the country, foreign relations, communications, railways and currency. All the residuary subjects (departments) should be under the jurisdiction of "New Punjab" which should have the right to frame its own Constitution for these subjects."

In the Central subject "New Punjab" should contribute its share of the necessary finances in the ratio of its members in the Lok Sabha.

(C) Suitable constitutional and political safeguards should be provided to the Sikhs and other communities residing in other States to protect them from discrimination.

(D) The Akali Dal will strive to make the Constitution of India federal in the real sense and ensure that the authority and representation of all the States are equal at the Centre.

(E) The organisation considers the present foreign policy (framed by the Congress Government) "defective, ineffective and dangerous for the country and harmful for mankind." The Akali Dal will support a foreign policy based on peace and helpfulness to the cause of promotion of national interests, especially the cause of friendship with the goodwill for the neighbouring countries where Sikhs live and their sacred places are situated. The Dal is firmly of the view that its foreign policy should not be subservient to the foreign policy of any other country.

(F) To obtain justice for Sikhs and other servants of the State and Central Governments and raise an effective voice and wage a struggle in the event of injustice done to any of them are special planks of the Akali Dal programme.

(G) The Akali Dal will specially work for the maintenance of the traditional position of the Sikhs in the three wings of the defence forces and try to ensure that the demands and requirements of the Sikhs in the defence services get the required attention of the Panth. The Dal will also seek to make the Kirpan part of the uniforms of the Sikhs in the defence establishments.

(H) The organisation considers it its primary duty to obtain proper facilities for the rehabilitation of the former members of the defence forces in civil life, to organise them for safeguarding their rights and self-respect and to make their voice effective.

(I) The party is of the view that all men and women, who have not been convicted of any offence involving moral turpitude by a court of law, have the right to possess small arms, such as revolvers, pistols, guns, rifles or carbines; and no licence is necessary. Registration would suffice for their possession.

(J) The Akali Dal wants a ban on drinking and smoking at public places.

THE people of the Western border region of Amritsar, Jullundur and other places live, to repeat a cliche, in two states these days—in the State of Punjab and in a state of turmoil.

The ugly events sparked by the surrender to the police of Sant Jarnail Singh Bhindranwale threatened to unleash an orgy of violence. That situation was happily averted but beneath the present calm surface, there is tension and uncertainty and a thoughtless move from any side, be it the Government or a political party could cause complications.

More ominous is the new militancy that showed itself in the shoot-outs in two cities. The culprits responsible for these incidents as also for the murder of Lala Jagat Narain, a veteran political figure and editor of a widely-read chain of papers, are yet to be apprehended (with the exception of one suspect). All this has, naturally, shaken the confidence of vast sections.

Mrs Gandhi's visit to Punjab on the eve of her trip abroad could not have been timed better. It helped to reverse, somewhat the prevailing trends and to evolve an all-party consensus on the need for maintaining peace and communal harmony. It would be a mistake to believe that her job ended with that. On the other hand, it was the beginning of what promises to be a long haul.

The present situation has several disturbing features some of which however look larger than life for various reasons. At the same time there is a lot positive, that could be built upon. Here is one instance: At Tarn Taran the scene of one of the two shooting incidents regarded to be handiwork of Sikh militants, the co-religionists of the attackers willingly joined the protest hartal by the Hindus and were in the forefront in offering blood for the injured.

Such manifestations of goodwill, commendable no doubt, are no insurance against determined fanaticism and violence.

New militancy

A brand new phenomenon, the militancy of what from all accounts is a tiny section of the Sikh youth contrasts sharply with the spirit of sacrifice and service of the earlier generation. What after all was the extreme step, threatened by Master Tara Singh and Sant Fateh Singh, who strode the Akali stage in the Sixties, to achieve their goal of a Punjabi-speaking State? That they would fast unto death or immolate themselves.

The militants have yet to be identified. No organised party owns them or approves of their action (there is no public denunciation either). Though they might have succeeded in creating a scare, the day-to-day life was not disrupted and there was normal turn-out of shoppers in the bazars and business centres of Jullundur and Tarn Taran two days after the shootings.

The offices of newspapers owned by Lala Jagat Narain, the slain leader, functioned normally but had security guards outside. Editors of Jullundur papers, whether supporters of the Akali Dal, Arya Samaj or others, had police escorts for protection.

Police posses guarded official buildings and manned improvised check-posts on the main approaches to the city.

Patrolling by the Punjab police, assisted by the Border Security force and the Provincial Armed Constabulary from U.P. was noticeably intensive.

Schools and colleges remained closed last week. Apart from ensuring peace, the police presence served another wholesome purpose. The Government became the bigger target of mischief-makers and to that extent the communal tension subsided.

CM's task

The task of the Punjab Chief Minister, Mr. Darbara Singh, was unenviable. It was not easy to nab Sant Jarnail Singh Bhindranwale, especially when he became a symbol of religious fervour, a somewhat mythical figure who gave a slip to the combined forces of Punjab and Haryana police, despite the care taken by them in working out a joint strategy.

The police could not keep track of the Sant's movements, after the warrants for his arrest had been issued and he was able to motor down undetected from his abode in Haryana to his headquarters at Chowk Mehta in Amritsar district, some 300 km away. But even if it were aware of his movement could it have apprehended him without bloodshed as the Sant had a lorry-load of armed supporters for escort?

Hypothetical issue

That in any case became a hypothetical issue after the Sant announced his intention to surrender to the police at the place and time of his choosing. This was so, despite the conflicting claims on what led to the surrender—while the authorities maintained they saw to it that he got the right advice, the Sant's top aide, Mr. Amrik Singh, was categorical that the arrest "would not have been possible without our cooperation, offered voluntarily and without any pressure."

The accounts one heard of the post-surrender happenings left no doubt about two points—one, that some miscreants among the crowd that had collected at Chowk Mehta were primarily responsible for the trouble and, two, that the police had not only been tactless but failed to take into account the mob psychology in an emotion-charged atmosphere.

Sanctuaries

The Sant episode and the events before and after it would make it difficult for the Punjab Government to continue with the old approach of benign neglect of the activities of the extremists. Also it may not be possible to defer action on certain basic issues, for instance, ways to deal with those who challenge the authority of the Government, but use Gurdwaras—outside the reach of the police, because of political considerations—as sanctuaries, or to delay a well-considered policy on arms.

The present situation creates strong compulsions for a Central move to deal with the complaints of discrimination against Singh. Whether the grievances are genuine, and whether or not there are political motives behind the Akali campaign (the Akalis did not raise these issues that insistently, when they were in power), New Delhi cannot say the problem was non-existent. Going by Mrs. Gandhi's observations during her brief visit to Chandigarh, a Central initiative appeared on the cards.

Mr. Darbara Singh has already written to the SGPC President Mr. Gurcharan Singh Tohra, suggesting steps by the Gurdwara Managing Committee against the use of places of worship by those wanted by law. Mr. Tohra's reply was considered encouraging—he was not aware of anti-national elements taking refuge in Gurdwaras and would like to be told of specific cases. Mr. Tohra said implying that he had the same ideas on the use of places of worship as the Government. May be there was a catch in what the Government said or what Mr. Tohra meant. But the ground was now set for pursuing the issue to a logical end.

Arms control

The control of arms is not an exclusive problem of Punjab though, here, it is more complicated because of the possibility of flow from across the border. Statistically, the situation may not be grave, there being only 2.15 lakh licensed arms with a population of 1.70 crores or less than 1.5 per cent. But a precise estimate of unlicensed arms with the people or the flow from Pakistan is not possible, which naturally creates problems for the authorities. Also, the weapons, both licensed and others are not evenly distributed among various sections. Individuals with militant leanings, political extremists have a disproportionately larger number.

Any examination of the Sikh grievances can only begin with a scrutiny of the demands put forward by the Akali Dal apart from other channels, through a memorandum given to the Government after the recent rally in Delhi. These include the transfer of Chandigarh and contiguous Punjabi-speaking areas of Haryana, Himachal Pradesh and Rajasthan to Punjab, direct transmission by radio of religious hymns from the Golden Temple, Amritsar, permission to Sikhs to carry Kirpans during travel by Indian Airlines and Air India, transfer of Bhakra-Nangal headworks to Punjab, revocation of the "rigged" elections of the Delhi Gurdwara Prabandhak Committee and an all-India legislation for the management of Gurdwaras throughout the country on the Punjab SGPC pattern. It is clear that even if a dialogue begins, an amicable settlement would not be easy.

'Hindu imperialism'

The problem posed by the Dal Khalsa, the extremist youth group, or the protagonists of Khalistan, owing allegiance to Dr. Jagjit Singh, falls in a different category which obviously would not be resolved even if the Akali demands were to be met by the Government.

According to the Dal Khalsa spokesman "Hindu imperialism" posed a major threat to the Sikh religion. Mr. Prakash Singh Badal was their enemy number one. So strongly did he feel about the moderate views of the former Chief Minister.

By "Hindu imperialism" was meant attempts to project the Sikh Gurus as worshippers of Hindu Gods and similar other interpretations of the Sikh scriptures which, it was alleged, were intended to dilute the Panthic entity. They single out the Hindu press of Jullundur for attacks on this count.

During Mrs. Gandhi's Chandigarh visit, Opposition parties complained against the way the Home Ministry and the Punjab Government worked at cross-purposes. This was a reference to the none too cordial relations between the Chief Minister, Mr. Darbara Singh and the Union Home Minister, Mr. Zail Singh which were often played up by the regional press.

Many stories were current in Chandigarh last week on the subject—that influential anti-Darbara Singh politicians advised Mrs. Gandhi to impose President's rule in Punjab, that a section of the Congress (I) extended moral support to Sant Jarnail Singh Bhindranwale and that Mr. Darbara Singh plainly told the Prime Minister about the activities of "some" in New Delhi who were creating problems for him.

Can the ruling party afford the luxury of factional in-fighting at this juncture?

[Text]

IN an on-the-record interview in Chandigarh the other day, the Punjab Chief Minister, Mr. Darbara Singh, answered questions on the present situation repeatedly stressing the point that his Government would be firm and ruthless in its dealings with secessionists. He had initiated steps, he said, to ensure that anti-national elements do not get refuge in places of worship. Those familiar with the Punjab scene will vouchsafe that the efficacy and speed of his action would determine to a large measure the shape of things to come.

The telephone bell rang several times as he replied to queries in the office room of his official residence. It was Sunday the day the Akali Dal Working Committee met at a gurdwara near Ludhiana to chalk out its next plan for action. And his callers obviously kept him posted with developments throughout the State. He wanted them to keep two things in mind—speed and accuracy.

The misadventure

For official measures to be effective, this, it was clear, will have to be the guiding principle in all cases. As the developments of the last four days showed, Mr. Darbara Singh's would not be an easy job. The main Akali Dal, which participated in the discussions during Mrs. Gandhi's visit to Chandigarh on ways to restore normality later decided not to join the all party peace committee.

The militants among Khalistan campaigners dramatised their protest through the hijacking of the Indian Airlines plane and although the adventure misfired, the Dal Khalsa, the group responsible for it is unlikely to feel discouraged and may, at best, change its tactics. Though prominent members of the Sikh community were prompt in their denunciation, there were no such public comments by any of the Akali groups.

Even the moderates who are convinced of the harmful repercussions of such acts as hijacking have yet to pick up courage to say so in public. The extremists among the Akalis (who are different from militants), in any case, are not repentant. In support they cite the case of the two Pandeys, the Congress (I) activists who hijacked an I.A. plane to Varanasi in 1978 without being condemned by their party.

The Government, both at the Centre and in the State, had often described occasional pro-Khalistan rallies and other symbolic actions as the handiwork of a handful of people. The hijacking showed that though the movement might not have a wide base, the official complacency is misplaced. It adds a new urgency to Mr. Darbara Singh's resolve to be tough with extremists.

Here are his replies to some of the questions:

Question: In regard to the Bhindranwale episode, the Punjab Government is being blamed on two counts—(1) that it unnecessarily provoked the Sikh community by its decision to nab the Sant in the absence of firm evidence against him and (2) that the situation immediately after his surrender was not handled tactfully and was allowed to cause avoidable loss of life. What is the official view on it?

None above law

Answer: It is not our intention to provoke any community unnecessarily. Warrants for the arrest of Sant Bhindranwale were issued on the basis of circumstantial evidence as also the statement given, on his own, by the suspect who had been arrested after the murder of Lala Jagat Narain (reference to Nichittar Singh).

In such cases the evidence can be indirect. It is not always necessary that we have direct evidence of the involvement of whosoever has taken part in the crime. If after interrogation and inquiry, nothing is found against the Sant, we would not come in the way of the law taking its course (and freeing him—he implied). But no person, big or small, is above the law.

The events at Chowk Mehta, on the day of the Sant's arrest, have to be seen in proper perspective. A crowd of 40,000 to 50,000 was there and had started dispersing after the arrest. The police were nowhere near the Sant's headquarters and had pitched their tents 1.25 km. away. They were not visible at all in the midst of the crowd, except four or five of them on traffic duty.

Unprovoked attack

Nearly half an hour after the arrest, when the police were rolling their tents, there was an unprovoked attack on them. The attackers were pushed back but regrouped themselves and advanced for another fling at the police. In the process, 11 tents were burnt, four vehicles and a fire-extinguisher were damaged and the duty magistrate was injured.

The police, including the mounted force, fell back but the attack continued with injuries to more of its members. It was at this point that the decision was taken to resort to firing—in self-defence against the unprovoked attack. There was no alternative. The police personnel had reasons to believe that they would have been done to death, had they not acted.

Q.: Would this process have been smooth, with better coordination between the law enforcement authorities of Punjab and Haryana, on the one hand, and Punjab and the Centre on the other?

Coordination

A.: So far as the Haryana and Punjab police were concerned, the coordination was very much there. I and my opposite number from Haryana, along with our Chief Secretaries and Inspectors-General of Police reviewed the situation (soon after the Sant's warrants were issued) and decided upon broad points of strategy. The Haryana police fully knew what is what. As regards the Centre, there was no missing link in coordination.

Q.: How do you plan to counter, politically and administratively, the cult of violence that has raised its head now?

A.: To promote amity and goodwill among different communities we have formed citizens' committees at the State headquarters and among parties and religious groups. With their help and consultation, we will formulate specific programmes of action. The authorities will be prompt in implementing the decisions taken by these bodies.

Intensive patrolling

Secondly, the Government had stepped up its vigilance. We will not leave anything to chance or let miscreants or undesirable elements continue their activities. We will try our best to contain militancy. We will enforce the law firmly and leave no doubt in anybody's mind that we mean business. Already the intensified police patrolling in various cities and the deployment of the BSF and other forces have helped restore confidence. This process will be built upon.

At the party level, we propose to organise a State-wide campaign to create public opinion against violence and militancy and take steps to strengthen the traditional good relations among different communities in Punjab. With its organisational network spread over all the State the Congress (I) could effectively discharge this function.

Q.: Is this new militancy, with its secessionist overtones, a sudden phenomenon? How strong is the Khalistan movement and could it not have been contained by timely action earlier? What are the factors and forces behind it?

Political motive

A.: In part, secessionist tendencies are fed by some sections of overseas Indians who have links with communal elements here. This is a general proposition. It can be examined in two parts.

One, there is a small section of militants who make no secret of their secessionist ideas. It is, however, not uncontrollable and we are going to take steps to counter them effectively and without delay.

Two, the extremist ideas are encouraged, perhaps, unwittingly, by the statements and agitations of those who talk of discrimination against Sikhs. The object of this section is political—it hopes to achieve its political ends by propagating alleged grievances of Sikhs. In practice, however, they lend support to extremist tendencies. You call it Khalistan or give it any other name.

Sanctuaries

Q.: Your views on the use of gurdwaras as sanctuaries by those indulging in anti-national activities?

A.: It is not proper that law-breakers are given shelter in gurdwaras, temples or mosques. There is a sanctity about places of worship which, obviously, cannot be maintained if criminals or anti-national elements are allowed to stay there. I have written to the leaders of various religious organisations, SGPC, Sanatan Dharam, Arya Samaj and others, drawing their attention to the responsibility that devolves on them, and suggesting immediate action to throw out anti-national elements who are using the places of worship as sanctuaries.

It is unfortunate that this should be so. It is the job of the management of places of worship to take steps and not the responsibility of the Government. It is unexceptionable that religious places should not be used as springboards for anti-national activities. We have several communities which have their respective places of worship and the Government has respect for all of them. It has no intention to send the police into gurdwaras. It did not do so in the past and would not do in the future. Because of this the responsibility of the management is all the greater.

Drive against arms

Q.: What has been the role of arms, big and small, licensed and illicit, with the people and do you think it is possible to reduce the quantum of these arms to manageable levels?

A.: The drive against unlicensed arms is a continuous process and there has been no slackening. Last year we were able to seize some 300 pistols believed to have been smuggled from across the border. The drive would be stepped up.

Even in the case of licensees we would not hesitate from seizing arms if there is fear of misutilisation. The idea is that arms should not be allowed to remain with those who may use it for undesirable ends. There may be irregularities in the grant of arms to bona fide licensees. We will detect such cases and cancel the licences.

Q.: Will it be worthwhile attempting a long-term solution on the basis of power sharing with the moderate section of the Akalis?

A.: All those who subscribe to the ideology and policies of the Congress (I) and are willing to join the national mainstream are welcome to our fold. The Government cannot and will not have any truck with communal parties however.

RESERVE POLICE DIRECTOR TALKS TO NEWSMEN

Bombay THE TIMES OF INDIA in English 26 Sep 81 p 10

[Text] Gandhinagar, September 25--The relevant provisions of the Cr. P.C. should be amended to give the Central Reserve Police Force (CRPF) the necessary authority like armed forces for maintaining internal security in the country, according to Mr. R. N. Sheopory, director-general of the CRPF.

Mr. Sheopory told newsmen yesterday that the overall law and order situation in the country was quite grim and the responsibility of the CRPF was growing every day.

He regretted that the CRPF units were deployed for long periods at places such as Aligarh, Moradabad and in the eastern part of the country. The law and order was the responsibility of the local authorities and the CRPF should only be deployed to assist them. Instead of taking long-term remedial measures, the local authorities were seeking the help of the CRPF too frequently and for longer periods, he added.

When asked at how many places the CRPF was being deployed, Mr. Sheopory said, "Please ask me at how many places CRPF units were not being engaged".

He said the CRPF was being reorganised and its training system was also being changed to make it more useful in tackling riots, agitations and insurgencies.

Referring to its past performance, he said that during the 1965 war, the CRPF was deployed against the Pakistanis. Earlier, in 1959, its soldiers were killed by the Chinese army while patrolling the Himalayan borders.

The CRPF was raised during the second world war for watch and ward duties at concentration camps set up for the people suspected of having allegiance to the "axis" countries, for guarding the communication system and other activities. It was called "crown representative's police". Till 1948, its strength was only two battalions.

He said the strength of the force had been raised to 66 battalions, though two more paramilitary forces, Indo-Tibetan police and the Border Security Force, were created in 1962 and 1966 for taking over the responsibility of manning border posts.

Mr. Sheopory was here in connection with the passing out parade of 66 battalions of the CRPF. The parade will be held today.

MEETING MARKS INDO-SOVIET TREATY ANNIVERSARY

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 26 Sep 81 p 10

[Text] The Indo-Soviet Friendship Treaty, signed ten years ago, has shown the path for building bridges of friendship and cooperation between the peoples of the two countries.

This was the consensus at a meeting held in Delhi on Friday to mark the conclusion of the month-long celebrations of the treaty anniversary.

ISCUS National Council vice-president Mrs Aruna Asaf Ali presided over the meeting.

Soviet Nari (Hindi edition) editor I. Y. Golubyev, who is also the general secretary of the Soviet Indian Friendship Society, described the friendship of the two peoples as the Soviet people's apple of the eye.

Peace and stability were extremely necessary in any region that aspired for prosperity and progress, he said.

Mr Golubyev said that Mrs Gandhi was considered an outstanding international leader in the Soviet Union who had contributed a lot to the cause of world peace and understanding.

He said that the popularity of the Indian Prime Minister could be gauged from the fact that her name was a household word in his country and one daughter in every few homes was named 'Indira.'

CPI member of Parliament Indrajit Gupta told the gathering that both the countries had mutually resolved to maintain peace in the region.

The atmosphere in which the friendship treaty had been signed was vitiated by dangers of war, and the dangers still prevailed with Pakistan acquiring arms from USA and China.

In spite of claims to the contrary, Pakistan had in the past, used its acquired arms against India, Mr Gupta reminded the gathering. It was at a critical juncture that India and the Soviet Union had signed the friendship treaty.

Eminent writer and novelist Rajendra Yadav recalled how Tagore and Premchand had been influenced by Soviet thought and had reflected it in their works.

A book on "Indian Independence movement and the Soviet Revolution" in Hindi, written by Mr B. M. Upadhyaya, was released by Mr Golubyev to mark the occasion.

FINANCE MINISTER'S SPEECH TO IMF MEET REPORTED

Bombay THE TIMES OF INDIA in English 28 Sep 81 p 1

[Excerpt] Washington, September 27 (PTI)--The finance minister, Mr. R. Venkataraman, has called upon the world community to provide the necessary resources to the International Monetary Fund (IMF) to enable it to play a major role in helping countries undertake adjustment programmes for overcoming their present balance-of-payments problems.

He was addressing the interim committee of the IMF yesterday which was meeting in advance of the annual meetings of the fund and the World Bank next week.

He drew attention of the committee to the "extraordinarily difficult" situation faced by the oil importing developing countries. These countries, he said, were facing a huge current account deficit which had been made worse by a weakening export demand for their products, stagnant and declined aid flows, the very high rate of interests and the weakening commitments to multilateral institutions.

Mr. Venkataraman said that the need for countries to undertake adjustment programmes was both necessary and urgent, and referred to the strong measures undertaken by India to overcome the present critical economic situation confronting it.

The investment programmes in India, he said, reflected the attempt to reduce dependence on imported oil, promote the shift from oil to non-oil energy resources and accord priority in other areas of import substitution and export promotion. He said that till these efforts at adjustment begin to take effect, country like India would require their balance of payments deficits to be financed.

Mr. Venkataraman emphasized that the size of deficit faced by developing countries was very much beyond the capacity of private capital flows to meet. Besides, the low-income countries that did not have adequate access to private markets would not be expected to borrow at prevailing rates of interest on these markets.

Under the circumstance, he said, the significant role of the IMF and the World Bank to assist the developing countries must be realised. There was a need for a substantial increase in multilateral aid flows.

While commending some of the recent measures undertaken by the IMF to provide substantial amounts over longer periods, Mr. Venkataraman expressed concern about the pressures to limit the scale of fund activity. He urged the fund management to redefine its approach to conditionality by moving away from the traditional short-term stabilisation measures and to reflect the requirements of medium-term adjustment process depending upon investment programmes towards this end.

He called upon the interim committee to give clear indications to the IMF management to explore all avenues for augmenting resources.

VENKATARAMAN'S WASHINGTON PRESS CONFERENCE REPORTED

Madras THE HINDU in English 29 Sep 81 p 1

[Article by N. Ram]

[Text] Washington, Sept 28--The proposal for a five billion Special Drawing Rights (SDR) extended loan to the Government of India goes before the International Monetary Fund's Executive Board on November 9, Mr. R. Venkataraman, Finance Minister, said here on Sunday.

The controversial proposal was originally scheduled to go to the 22-member body in the second half of October. Mr. Venkataraman explained the delay as being caused by the travel plans of the Fund's Managing Director.

He met Mr. J. de Larosiere here for a discussion on the loan and its terms.

Mr. Venkataraman told Indian correspondents here that the formal application--in the form of a "letter of intent" from the Government of India--would be "sent shortly" to the IMF.

Asked if he proposed to make the letter and the "performance clauses" public (in line with his promise in India to make them "almost a public document"), he clarified that the Government planned, after the loan was approved, to release a statement "summarising" the details. He took his stand on the ground that "these documents" were "never" released--although it was pointed out that some years ago the British Government placed, or was brought round to placing, documents on a massive loan from the IMF before Parliament.

Asked about the conditionality imposed by the Fund for the largest lending arrangement in its history, the Finance Minister responded, "There is no question of devaluation as a condition."

As for the U.S. stance towards it, he said that as "an optimist," he expected the arrangement to go through.

Commenting on suggestions in some American newspapers that the Government of India would use the IMF loan for "development financing," Mr. Venkataraman said it was "a categorical application for meeting balance of payments difficulties."

Shackles on Aid Agencies

Speaking earlier in the Interim Committee, the key policy-setting body of the Fund, he called attention to the "extraordinarily difficult economic situation" facing oil-importing developing countries. And in an obvious reference to U.S. and conservative Western stances, he noted that "the commitment to multilateralism has weakened and multilateral institutions are being put under undue and unwarranted restraint."

Attack on Monetarism

In this connection, Mr. Venkataraman had a dig at "misguided monetarism" that had pushed interest rates to unprecedented heights.

Asked after the meeting what specifically he had in mind when he criticised "monetarism," he listed, apart from an obsession with curbing money supply, "demand management as we know it...cutting down public expenditure...high interest rates...and less growth in the economy, leading to greater unemployment."

(Indian officials in the delegation explained that the Finance Minister had used the phrase with exclusive reference to developed countries, in particular U.S. and the United Kingdom. The negative results, they added, were most apparent in the case of the latter country.)

In the Interim Committee, Mr. Venkataraman defended the response of his Government as follows: "We...are in no doubt about the need for domestic adjustment and we have already taken very strong measures towards this end... Prices of crude oil and petroleum products have been raised to realistic levels. Fertilizer prices have also been raised by over 80 per cent. The burden of these price increases alone amounts to over three per cent of GNP. Adjustment on this scale is difficult in any circumstances and even more so at our levels of per capita income and within an open and democratic parliamentary system."

He added that "the logic of structural adjustment" was reflected in "an ambitious expansion programme" to increase domestic exploration and production of oil and also in the investment programmes in the Sixth Plan.

He went on to argue that "all this...takes time as well as money" and even given "the best effort at structural adjustment" it would be necessary to "finance substantial balance of payments deficits in the short run even as the adjustment measures begin to take effect."

Contending that the size of the new deficits were such that "private capital flows cannot possibly be an adequate answer by themselves," he said IMF and the World Bank could not be assigned "a residual role at this critical juncture."

He praised the IMF for responding "commendably to the needs of the situation in the past two years by making available substantial amounts over longer periods than was possible under its traditional stand-by arrangements."

He regretted the questioning of the Fund's "innovative developments" for "reasons hard to understand" and expressed "concern" over pressures to limit the scale of IMF activity and also for "stricter conditionality."

Addressing "the issue of conditionality" (which he recognised as "the specific and unique characteristic of Fund financing"), the Finance Minister said there could be "no dispute" that "the use of Fund resources must be accompanied by, and indeed support, the adoption of appropriate adjustment measures. But conditionality must be relevant to the needs of the situation and several aspects of the present situation call for a new approach to conditionality."

Using jargon in favour here, Mr. Venkataraman asserted (in the Interim Committee) that "an effective adjustment in the present situation depends heavily upon supplyside responses which in turn depend upon investment programmes."

He appealed to the Fund to "move away from its traditional, almost exclusive, focus on instruments of short-term stabilisation" and "move towards a broader definition of conditionality consistent with the requirements of a medium-term adjustment process."

INDIAN BUSINESS DELEGATION HOLDS MOSCOW TALKS

Calcutta THE STATESMAN in English 1 Oct 81 p 5

[Text]

MOSCOW, Sept. 30.—The Soviet Union has reportedly showed interest in an offer by a group of private Indian business men to set up a synthetic fibre unit in India with Western technology provided the USSR agreed to buy a substantial part of its output on a long-term basis, reports PTI.

The offer was made yesterday by a group of leading Indian business men now on a visit here at the invitation of the USSR Chamber of Commerce and Industry during a two-and-half hour meeting with the Soviet Foreign Trade Minister, Mr Nikolai Patolichev.

The group also offered to set up a shoe plant in India with Soviet equipment and technology for producing footwear for the USSR and third country markets.

It acquainted the Soviet Minister with the strides made by private industires in India, their potential for growth and absorption of the latest technology in keeping with national goals.

The two sides reportedly discussed various possibilities of collaboration with the Indian private sector to supplement cooperation already existing between State agencies in the two countries.

Earlier, during the group's discussions yesterday, the Soviet side is understood to have suggested setting up on a permanent basis some joint machinery like those the USSR has with private enterprises in Japan and West Germany.

While welcoming the idea, members of the visiting group are believed to have felt that arrangements already existing with the Federation of Indian Chambers of Commerce and Industry could be further strengthened to achieve the desired results.

As regards collaboration in third country ventures, any proposal will have to take into account the parameters within which the Soviet Union operates in its economic relations with foreign countries.

As a rule the Soviet Union does not invest in outlays of enterprises in other States on a partnership or ownership basis. It only provides the technology, equipment and necessary credits repayable over long periods. It does undertake turn-key projects but without stakes in ownership.

INDIAN BUSINESSMEN'S TEAM ENDS MOSCOW TALKS

Madras THE HINDU in English 2 Oct 81 p 5

[Text]

MOSCOW, Oct 1

The seven-member group of Indian businessmen concluded discussions on Wednesday with representatives of key Soviet economic Ministries on a hopeful note of new vistas opening up for fruitful collaboration between private Indian industry and Soviet commercial and industrial enterprises.

The group had prolonged discussions with the chairmen of the Soviet planning body and the State committee for economic relations with foreign countries Mr Nikolai Baibakov and Mr. Seymon Skatchkov.

During these discussions, as in the earlier meeting here, the group members outlined a large number of proposals that have relevance to the economies of the two countries.

They identified a long list of items which the group members felt could be supplied by India on a long-term basis for which the USSR is now spending substantial amounts in convertible currency against imports from the West.

Unlike in the past when India invariably ended up with a favourable balance of trade with the USSR, the Soviet Union is likely to turn the balance in its favour in the coming years and thus have enough trade surpluses to enlarge its imports from India.

The current year's trade turnover is expected to exceed Rs. 2600 crores and in 1982 both sides are aiming at raising the total two-way trade exchanges to almost Rs. 4000 crores.

Besides an export-oriented modern footwear plant in India with Soviet technology and equipment, and a synthetic fibre plant based on Western technology for meeting Soviet consumer needs, individual members of the group have indicated they could set up units to produce industrial robots which have a direct relevance to the acute labour shortage in the USSR.

The Soviet Union has already made a beginning in using industrial robots where human ingenuity is not altogether needed.

The talks covered bilateral, third country and export-oriented projects. It also proposed that the existing Indo-USSR Joint Chamber under the Federation of Indian Chambers of Commerce and Industry be broadbased and strengthened.

This will enable members of other industrial organisations like the Associated Chamber and the All-India Manufacturers Organisation, interested in promoting commercial and economic cooperation with the USSR, to join and participate in them.

However, there is no move to establish any permanent joint body of the Chambers of Commerce and Industry of the two countries, according to Mr K. N. Modi, a member of the group.

PRESS COUNCIL CHAIRMAN REPORTS ON MEETING

Calcutta THE STATESMAN in English 3 Oct 81 p 11

[Text] Bhubaneswar, Oct. 2--The Press Council of India is seeking the power to censor, reprimand and warn the Government for setting up commissions. At present it can merely record its observations on issues involving the Government. This was stated by the council's chairman, Mr Justice A. N. Grover here yesterday.

Addressing a Press conference after a two-day meeting of the Press Council, he said that the Council had finalized its observations on a speech delivered by the Union Minister for Information and Broadcasting, Mr Vasant Sathe in Calcutta. Mr Sathe had reportedly observed that if a journalist did not "behave properly" he should be put in jail. The Maharashtra Chief Minister Mr Antulay's remarks on journalists had also been noted. The observations would be released to the Press in Delhi.

Mr Justice Grover said in response to representations made by journalists that a sub-committee of the Press Council, in collaboration with the Indian Law Institute, was making a detailed study of the clauses of different laws which could inhibit the freedom of the Press. These related, among others, to the Official Secrets Act, contempt of court and parliamentary privileges. The Press Council would forward its views on the subject to the Government with a request to amend certain clauses of the Acts concerned in order to ensure Press freedom, he added.

The Press Council had till last month received 350 complaints against the Government and newspaper managements. Mr Justice Grover was against the Government curbing the release of advertisements to newspapers on ground that they indulged in "yellow journalism" or character assassination of Ministers or officials. The aggrieved persons could very well bring the matter before the Press Council, he pointed out. The Council was interested in ensuring Press freedom.

Under the provisions of the law, the Press Council was levying funds from newspapers to meet its expenses. He felt that newspapers particularly the larger ones, should agree to pay double the fund being levied at present to stop the dependence of the Press Council on Government funds.

Mr Justice Grover stressed the need for newspapers to deal more elaborately with socio-economic problems. A sample survey made by the Council revealed that six national English newspapers devoted negligible space to the coverage of such items, while four Hindi newspapers did slightly better. Some regional language papers provided more matter on the subject.

UNI adds: Mr Justice Grover said that the Council was satisfied with the replies given by the editors of Samaj and Prajatantra of Cuttack in connection with the attacks made by medical college students on the staff of their dailies.

Mr Justice Grover said the two editors had appeared before the Council and stated that they would not like to pursue the matter as because the Cuttack Medical College students and the police had apologized.

The Press Council had taken up the matter sue motto and had asked the State Government and the newspapers to give their versions. "It is disappointing that the State Government did not cooperate with us. It is the same in other States," Mr Justice Grover said. The newspapers maintained that the police had "connived" with students.

PRESS COUNCIL SEPTEMBER DECISION REPORTED

Calcutta THE STATESMAN in English 6 Oct 81 p 9

[Text] New Delhi, Oct. 5--The Minister of External Affairs had asked the Press Council to evolve rules governing acceptance by the Indian Press of advertisements from foreign missions denouncing third countries with which India had friendly relations.

The council, however, decided at its meeting held at Bhubaneswar on September 29-30, 1981, to remit the case back to the External Affairs Ministry with a view to taking such action as it deemed proper through the diplomatic channels, requesting foreign Embassies in India not to use our media for any such purpose.

The Authors Guild of India drew the attention of the council to the cavalier treatment meted out to freelance writers by editors of newspapers, and requested it to draw up some conventions or rules with regard to this matter. The council was, however, of the view that no principles should be evolved in this behalf and that it could consider specific cases on the merits whenever they are brought before it.

The council decided to notify certain associations and news agencies in terms of the provisions of the Press Council Act, 1978, for the purpose of nominating members to the council, which will be reconstituted with effect from March 1, 1982.

A complaint lodged by a member of the council alleged that Mr A. R. Antulay, Chief Minister of Maharashtra, made some derogatory remarks against journalists. The council noted that its appeal to responsible public men and journalists made some time in the past to desist from using objectionable language against each other had not been taken seriously.

It accordingly resolved to reiterate the appeal to all concerned to refrain from making such statements which tend to undermine the freedom of the Press and interfere with the role expected of it in a democratic society. At the same time, the Press is also expected to maintain high standards of public taste and professional responsibility.

TATA TALKS TO NEWSMEN ON VISIT TO USSR

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 3 Oct 81 p 3

[Article by Vinod Taksal]

[Text] Moscow, Oct 2--The Soviet Union might go in for collaborative ventures with the Indian private sector in a big way in the near future following talks here between an Indian industrialist's delegation and top managers of the Soviet economy.

According to sources, the Soviet Union has put forward a number of proposals for joint collaborative and third country ventures in the non-government spheres before the Indian delegation. Equity participation of the Soviet Union with the private sector has also been hinted at.

Delegation leader Naval Tata said today that they had "very useful" and constructive talks with top managers of the Soviet economy and foreign trade, including first Deputy Premier Ivan Arkhipov, who is also co-chairman of the Indo-Soviet Joint Commission, State Foreign Economic Relations Committee Chairman Seymon Skachkov, Planning Commission Chief Baibakov and Soviet Chamber of Commerce Acting Chief Plitnov.

Indian businessmen and Soviet authorities both of whom seem eager to cooperate with each other in the coming years in fulfilment of the goals set in the Brezhnev-Indira Gandhi documents signed in New Delhi last December.

Speaking at a largely attended reception yesterday by the group, Mr Seymon Skachkov, repeatedly emphasised that the discussions would lead to tangible results.

Later talking to newsmen, Mr Tata said several proposals were exchanged by the group and Soviet authorities which are to be pursued in the coming months.

Mr Grishin is due to visit India in December and the group has invited a delegation from the USSR Chamber of Commerce and Industry.

Mr Tata said all those to whom the group had spoken have indicated a willingness to cooperate with the private sector in India actively.

Photochemical Plant

The construction of a photochemical plant in India with Soviet assistance has been envisaged in a protocol signed during the visit of another Indian delegation.

A group of Soviet experts will soon arrive in India to discuss with their Indian colleagues the capacity of the plant and also to choose the site for its construction. They will also collect the required data for the preparation of a feasibility report for the construction of the plant.

The protocol, reports APN, also provides for the construction of new boilers with power houses at the antibiotics plant in Rishikesh and synthetic drugs plant in Hyderabad.

SINGH TALKS TO PRESS ON KHALISTAN, COMMUNAL PARTIES

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 4 Oct 81 p 1

[Text] Hyderabad, Oct. 3 (PTI)—Union Home Minister Zail Singh today said that foreign money might be involved in the "Khalistan Movement" as some nations "do not want political stability in India."

"This kind of movement attracts others and you can understand what they do and what they want," he told newsmen on his arrival here from Delhi.

Mr Zail Singh said the Government would consider a ban on parties generating hatred among communities. However, this would be done only as a last resort if persuasion and negotiation failed to solve the problem.

Mr Zail Singh said that there is no proposal to promulgate President's rule in Punjab on account of the threatened Akali agitation.

He said that the Union Government would provide all possible assistance to the Punjab Government to deal with the situation arising out of the agitation.

He said the situation would be further reviewed after the Prime Minister's return from the foreign tour.

"There is no danger to the law and order situation. It is under control. The State Government is having dialogue with the political parties on the problem," he added.

Mr Zail Singh said some "misguided elements" were behind the Khalistan movement. The Sikh community as such was not supporting the demand. "This demand is harmful to the country and the Sikh panth as well," he said.

"The Sikh leaders were opposed to the movement," he added.

Mr Zail Singh expressed the hope that the Punjabis would live up to their tradition and not allow lawlessness and communal riots in the State.

GANDHI PRESS CONFERENCE IN CANBERRA REPORTED

Calcutta THE STATESMAN in English 5 Oct 81 pp 1, 9

[Text] Canberra, Oct. 4--Mrs Gandhi said here tonight that India would not be "caught napping" by Pakistan which had jumped "a decade ahead of us" by acquiring sophisticated armaments, report PTI and UNI.

She told a dinner meeting of the National Press Club that she could not face people or Parliament if they thought that India, which had been invaded five times during the past three decades and which had been "caught napping" twice, was not fully prepared to meet any eventuality.

Mrs Gandhi's remarks came in reply to a reporter's question that how she reconciled her call for a halt to arms race when she herself was going to Paris next month to sign an agreement with France for purchase of 150 Mirages.

The Prime Minister expressed concern over Pakistan's preparations to acquire a nuclear weapon. "Naturally we do not approve of it."

The address to the Press Club was her last engagement here before she flew to Melbourne at the conclusion of the weekend retreat of Commonwealth leaders.

The New Zealand Prime Minister, Mr Robert Muldoon, was the only other Commonwealth leader to address the club. He preceded Mrs Gandhi by a few hours and drew small audience in contrast, nearly 800 people attended Mrs Gandhi's meeting.

Mrs Gandhi held Pakistan responsible for forcing India to make a huge defence expenditure to protect its security and integrity.

She said India had to divert funds for defence, which could have been used for the benefit of the poor.

In reply to another question the Prime Minister said India had protested against the supply of F16 aircraft by the USA to Pakistan though she did not know whether it could be described "as a formal protest" in diplomatic parlance.

On Afghanistan, she said India had publicly and privately told the Soviet leaders that their troops should quit Afghanistan, "but they feel encircled." She said that a proper way out would be to find a solution to the problem rather than make a big noise about it.

Criticizing the double standards practised by some countries in this regard, Mrs Gandhi asked why there had been "no mobilization of world opinion or even a condemnation" when some other major Powers had indulged in similar interventions." She said amid laughter: "We in India are different in this respect."

The Prime Minister, who answered a wide range of questions in an hour-long conference, including those on Pakistan's entry into the Commonwealth sports contacts with South Africa, and the plight of Harijans in India and the recent conversion to Islam, defended the utility of the Commonwealth, though it is a loose forum.

Mrs Gandhi said even a body like the Commonwealth could play a very useful role in arresting the growing confrontation between big Powers and their arms race and thus arrest the drift to war and in expediting North-South dialogue.

Mrs Gandhi explained that the Pokhran experiment was only the explosion of a nuclear device without any fall-out. India was interested in harnessing nuclear energy only for peaceful purposes like agriculture, power generation and the like.

Asked if this was one reason why India was blocking Pakistan's readmission into the Commonwealth, she replied in the negative.

She confirmed India had strong reservations on the issue and said there had been no change either in the Commonwealth or in Pakistan to warrant India supporting Pakistan's readmission. The decision to opt out of the Commonwealth was taken by an elected Government in Pakistan.

Since then there had been no elections there. "It is only the voice of one man, which need not be given great weight," she said, referring to the military dictatorship headed by General Zia-ul-Haq.

Further, where was the guarantee that Pakistan would not opt out again. She feared that Pakistan would utilize the forum as it had done in other international platforms to bring up bilateral questions, contrary to the accepted convention in the Commonwealth.

Without revealing name, Mrs Gandhi said a prominent international leader had told her: "It is so sad. Nobody wants war but the world seems to be drifting to it."

The Prime Minister said that in her view "we are moving towards greater confrontation" with the increase of the armaments industry and the spread of armaments. This drift should be arrested, she said.

The second danger to world stability and peace was "the widening gap between richer and poorer nations." Mrs Gandhi said action to eliminate this disparity should be taken immediately.

The Prime Minister, who was asked a number of questions suggesting that India was over-reacting to the situation, quipped: "Are you suggesting that Pakistan is going to use American-supplied F-16 aircraft and other equipment against the Soviet Union?"

Comparing the Indian and British systems, Mrs Gandhi said that the British Queen was completely non-political but in India the President belonged to political parties and right now he (the President) belonged to an Opposition party.

India, she said, sought genuine friendship with every country. This was India's attitude towards Pakistan and China too, she said.

PATIL ADDRESSES EASTERN NAVAL COMMAND OFFICERS

Bombay THE TIMES OF INDIA in English 5 Oct 81 p 5

[Text] Visakhapatnam, October 4--The minister of state for defence, Mr. Shivraj Patil, said today India would spare no efforts in strengthening its armed forces for the better defence of the country.

Addressing officers of the Eastern Naval Command here, Mr. Patil said the country was aware of its neighbours being armed with some sophisticated weapons, including F-16 aircraft, by big powers. But our defence forces were also equally well equipped with modern arms, he said.

He warned that India's endeavour to promote peace in the world should not be mistaken for its weakness.

The Union minister said that some countries, which were envious of our rapid economic development, were trying to exploit India's internal problems like parochialism and casteism. The government was taking every care to safeguard the interests of the people and, at the same time, our armed forces were prepared to meet any threat to the country's integrity and sovereignty, he added.

Mr. Patil said the government was now engaged in improving the economic conditions of the weaker sections. He appealed to the people to help the government in this gigantic task. He also made a special mention of the important role the press had to play in this regard.

Mr. Patil, who was on a two-day visit to Visakhapatnam to inspect the naval establishments, was received by Vice-Admiral M. K. Roy.

CONCERN SHOWN OVER NEWSPRINT COMMITTEE PROPOSAL

Bombay THE TIMES OF INDIA in English 3 Oct 81 p 5

[Text] New Delhi, October 2 (PTI)--The Editors' Guild of India at a meeting here noted with "profound concern" the newsprint advisory committee's proposal to deny newsprint to papers engaging in "anti-national" activities and to impose a 60:40 news-advertisement ratio.

The guild is of the view that "not only do these proposals go against the assurances held out to industry by persons in authority that, apart from the normal law of the land no other restrictions of any type would be imposed on the newspapers, but are calculated to jeopardise the freedom of the press," a guild release said.

"The guild is shocked to note that these suggestions should originally come from the Press Council. The guild has always been of the view that the Press Council's functions are solely of a regulatory nature and that it is not for the council to punish newspapers. As such its demand for 'teeth' is wholly misguided and in any case against informal assurances given to the guild," the guild resolution said.

The guild congratulated members of the newsprint advisory committee who opposed the Press Council's demand and urged the government to drop "this dangerous idea."

The guild welcomed the ruling given by the chairman of the Rajya Sabha, Mr. Hidayatullah, on the privilege motion against the executive editor of "Indian Express," Mr. Arun Shourie, over the "Antulay affair."

"Particularly noteworthy is his observation that newspapers are the eyes and ears of the public and if every citizen has the right to criticise the actions of others, so have newspapers whose job it is to turn the light of publicity on the irregularities of public action."

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 27 Sep 81 p 5

[Text] The Centre has instructed the State Government to take up the scrutiny and evaluation of school textbooks from class one to seven with a view to replacing them if they are found to instil in young minds feelings of animosity between different communities, reports PTI.

The Centre's instruction followed the recommendations by the National Integration Council and the Minorities Commission which have laid emphasis on the vital role of education in bringing about national integration.

The two bodies had recommended replacement of such objectionable textbooks and their replacement by such textbooks as encourage feelings of equality and brotherhood between members of all communities.

Emphasizing the urgency of such evaluation, the Centre has told the States in a communication that to begin with, the programme may be confirmed to evaluation of history and language textbooks. The textbooks in language would cover the first language, the second language and English.

History textbooks would include books taught either as an independent subject or as a part of social studies.

The Centre has also told them that efforts should be made to ensure that revised textbooks, where necessary, become available for the 1982 academic session. School textbooks in other subjects can be taken up in later phases for similar review. The Centre has issued detailed procedure in making the evaluation.

Besides the States, the National Council of Educational Research and Training will organise a national conference to coordinate evaluation.

The Union Government is also considering the question of setting up a high-level steering committee at the national level to coordinate such evaluation.

INDIA MAY REPLACE SOVIET-BUILT TRANSPORT PLANES

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 3 Oct 81 p 5

[Text] India is examining the possibility of acquiring wide-bodied modern transport planes to replace its present fleet of Soviet-built planes, reports PTI.

According to new Chief of the Air Staff Air Chief Marshal Dilbagh Singh the Government would 'soon take a decision as to which model of the transport plane it should acquire to replace the A. N. 12 planes which had been phased out by its producer country--the Soviet Union.

In an informal chat with newsmen on Thursday night he said that these Soviet planes had to be phased out by India because of the difficulty in getting spares for them in future.

The AN 12 planes described as the 'work-horse' of the Indian Air Force in the western and eastern maintenance command were inducted into the air force in 1960s.

In reply to questions the Air Force Chief said that suitability of various models of transport planes were at present being examined in the world market and a final decision would soon be taken.

India is the only country in the world which has an air field at the height of about 10,000 feet above sea level.

Air Marshal Dilbagh Singh told a questioner that a final decision for replacement of 'Packet' and Dakota transport planes with the air force had already been taken. These planes would be phased out as the new replacement Soviet planes A.N. 32 were received, he said.

ECONOMIST PREDICTS PROBLEMS CAUSED BY IMF LOAN

Calcutta THE STATESMAN in English 3 Oct 81 p 8

[Article by Amiya Kumar Bagchi, professor of economics at the Center for Studies in Social Sciences]

[Text] Last week we published an article by Mr K. Rangachari on the IMF loan. Amiya Kumar Bagchi takes a critical view of the loan conditions but says that the Indian Government has already taken a number of the measures the Fund is likely to insist on if the loan is to be sanctioned. He feels that the loan, if it finally comes through, will lead to an enormous increase in the country's debt burden. Given the protectionist trade climate and the poor aid prospects, there is no guarantee that exports will increase at a sufficiently rapid pace to take care of the higher interest payments. Apart from the balance of payments, there is also the problem of "disciplining the economy" which may lead to the death of sick industries and the birth of new units of production.

Dr Bagchi, who studied Economics at Calcutta and Cambridge, is Professor of Economics at the Centre for Studies in Social Sciences; he was earlier head of the Department of Economics at Presidency College, Calcutta.

When an application to the International Monetary Fund for a large loan is publicly announced and when an IMF team is officially appointed to examine the application, it means that negotiations have been going on for some time between Fund officials and the Government concerned. It also implies that an assurance of success has been given to the applicant, subject, of course, to the satisfaction of IMF "conditionality" (or conditions in plain English). President Reagan and his team have committed a diplomatic solecism by wanting to revoke the assurance at this stage.

Indian spokesmen are seeking, rightly, to convert this threatened revocation into an international issue. The postponement of the date of formal application by more than a month must be seen as a move in this diplomatic battle. But what Indian Government spokesmen are also seeking to do is to convert it into an issue of national honour and interest. As things stand, however, the success or failure of the IMF loan is a matter of Hobson's choice as far as the general Indian public is concerned. And this situation is the cumulative result of a disastrous series of economic policies pursued by the Government during the past 15 years.

"Conditionality"

The success of the loan application will depend on the fulfilment of the usual "conditionality" imposed by the IMF in the case of loans for extended facility. Loans from this facility are granted for a period of up to three years to overcome balance of payments problems caused by structural imbalances. The IMF would then insist on adoption of policies to effect "structural readjustment." Now, structural problems and structural readjustment mean different things to different people. To economists following the lead of Raul Prebisch, structural problems mean problems resulting from lack of development of industry, narrowness of the home market, inelasticity of supplies of agricultural products, and so on, for which industrialization is considered to be the basic remedy.

To the IMF, however, structural readjustment essentially means allowing market forces a free play in the allocation of resources, and minimizing government intervention in the economy. Curbs on public expenditure, particularly of the unproductive variety (such as expenditure on defence and administration, social welfare measures and subsidies on foodgrain, fertilizer, etc.) are among the conditions required by the Fund. It also insists on removal of restrictions on both internal and external trade and on foreign exchange movements. It regards devaluation as the most desirable solution for recurring balance of payments deficits, for the shifting of resources towards the export sector and encouraging inflows of capital from abroad. The IMF also favours an incomes policy, which is a euphemism for wage restrictions.

It is important to realize that the Government of India has already gone a long way towards meeting some of the conditions likely to be imposed by the Fund for granting the loan. The World Bank, in its latest report, had kind things to say about the recent economic performance of the country and approvingly took note of a shift in its economic policy. One of the factors, paradoxically enough, contributing to our balance of payments crisis, has precisely been the relaxation of restrictions so favoured by the World Bank and the Fund.

The Government has also sought to improve the climate for foreign investment by widening the area in which foreign firms are allowed to invest, and by removing various restrictions on capacity expansion and diversification by monopoly houses and transnational corporations. The decision to impound 50 per cent of additional dearness allowances accruing to wage and salary earners in future is a step restricting wage increases. (Indexation of wages to the price level has generally been regarded with distaste by the Fund.) The passing of the Essential Services Maintenance Act has been rightly regarded by trade unions and Opposition parties as a potent instrument for curbing wage demands and workers' rights in general.

The Government has also brought down the planned rate of expansion of the public sector. The target share of the public sector in the outlay under the Sixth Five Year Plan is 56.6 per cent, which is below the 70 per cent projected for the public sector under the Fifth Plan and is in fact below the share of the public sector outlay in every Five Year Plan since 1951. For 1981-82, the Government has budgeted for only a 10.6 per cent increase in governmental gross capital formation as against an increase of 26.5 per cent in 1980-81. Thus, with an inflation rate of 15 per cent, there will be an actual fall in the real capital formation under governmental auspices particularly since the resources of the State Governments and most non-departmental public enterprises for capital formation have also been adversely affected by Central Government decisions and inflation (partly fuelled by the latest round of price increases effected by the Central Government).

Good Boy

While the Central Government has slashed the value of public sector capital formation in real terms, the subsidies under the Budget for 1981-82 amount to Rs 2,090 crores, a large amount by any criterion. A major part of these subsidies will almost certainly be justified as being needed for pushing forward with the strategy of export-led growth.

Suppose that with all this ground preparation and with the "good boy" certificate from the World Bank, the Government is successful in its application for a loan for five billion Special Drawing Rights ($5.7 billion-$5.8 billion at the current rate of exchange). What does the Government expect out of such a loan? First of all, it expects an amelioration of the current balance of payments difficulties and an easy solution of its own ways and means problems. Such an amelioration will, of course, be at the expense of increasing the debt servicing burden enormously.

The current interest burden on India's debt is of the order of Rs 450 crores. Even though the Fund loan would amount to about a third of the current external debt of India, the interest burden will be doubled for the rate of interest will be much higher (around 9 to 10 per cent on an average) than on the IDA loans of which India has been a major recipient. When repayment of the loan starts in full, even assuming a maximum repayment period of 10 years permitted under the current Fund regulations, another Rs 500 crores will be added to the debt servicing burden. If the Fund insists on any major devaluation of the rupee (even though the Government has allowed the value of the rupee to slide downward by an appreciable margin), the rupee burden of repayment will increase further.

The Government expects an inflow of foreign capital into the country. International banks have indicated that their willingness to lend will be boosted if the Fund loan comes through. But the basic reason for this hidden "conditionality" should itself make the Indian public beware of such loans. With the enormous increase in the debt burden of the so-called developing countries--mostly non-oil exporting countries--the commercial banks have shown an eagerness to have the World Bank-IMF as their watchdog, and of course the USA as the final overseer. The interest rate on such commercial loans will be very high and unless there is a corresponding expansion of exports, India will find itself bound to a treadmill which forces continual external borrowing on a country in order to enable it to repay past debts. We have had some experience of servicing such a treadmill, but not with the rates of interest in prospect.

Does the Government seriously believe that exports will go up enough for this risky step to be taken calmly? Even if the reallocation of resources towards the export sector takes place, will protectionism and continued recession in the advanced capitalist countries permit us to export our goods at remunerative prices? (Our external terms of trade have seriously declined during the last few years.) Or is the Government's horizon bound only by the date of the next election (or the next succession)?

Bitter Medicine

But there is more to the Government's (and the Fund's) calculation than just the amelioration of balance of payments problems. There is the serious business of disciplining the economy. Even many economists of the Fund or the monetarist school now admit that devaluation is likely to lead to an aggravation of inflation because of the inelasticity of demand for imported inputs and to recession. But they would judge that if the medicine is continued long enough, only the sick units will die and new units of production (or services) will be born out of the tribulations of market forces.

Is the Indian public prepared for such a medicine as a result of which whole industries will die? And is it likely to have the confidence that the growth of new business will be enough to compensate for the death of old industries? Only in severely repressive regimes has the government been able to "persuade" the general public to have this confidence and such confidence has as often been belied by events as justified by them. The Government, in the name of the Fund, may want to administer such a medicine to workers and salaried employees. But will all capitalist groups find such a medicine palatable?

Will wage-restraint, however, be enough for the Government to carry out the necessary tasks, even for the Fund's variety of readjustment? Year after year railway freight has increased, programmes of construction of power stations have fallen badly behind schedule (this is also true of 1980-81, the first year of the Sixth Plan), public sector projects have got delayed, and inventories have accumulated with both public and private sector units. (This has had the result of inflating the measured rate of "saving"--unintended saving--of the Indian economy.) For overcoming these problems, massive investments in the public sector along with "discipline" will be necessary. But the Fund guidelines will preclude such a stepping up of investment.

There are many other unanswered questions surrounding the Indian application for the loan. The ability of the Government to curtail non-developmental expenditure, particularly on defence, in view of its perception of a threat from a U.S.-equipped Pakistani military establishment, its ability to enforce discipline on a heterogeneous bourgeoisie, the prospects of success of its loan application in view of a serious deterioration of the international environment for aid and loans to poor countries are all subjects that merit a closer look. But the anodyne phrases and the occasionally nationalistic postures of the Government should not blind the public to its short-term perspective or to its demonstrated willingness to apply some of the medicine usually recommended by the IMF and--if necessary--to apply stronger medicines even if they prove oppressive or even lethal to ordinary people.

LOK DAL ENDORSES OPPOSITION UNITY BID

Calcutta THE STATESMAN in English 3 Oct 81 pp 1, 9

[Text] New Delhi, Oct. 2--The national executive of the Lok Dal today is pleased with the informal talks Mr Charan Singh, its president, recently had with Opposition leaders and for the first time since the break-up of the Janata party, it "unanimously expressed itself in favour of unity of all Opposition forces."

The meeting, which heard a gist from Mr Charan Singh of the informal talks he had with representatives of the Congress (S), Bharatiya Janata party and the Janata party, gave him an almost "go ahead" signal by adopting a one-para resolution which said: "In view of the stupendous challenge with which the nation is confronted today and the ardent desire of the people for a viable and credible alternative, the national executive of the Lok Dal unanimously expresses itself in favour of unity of all Opposition forces wedded to democracy and social and economic changes."

The resolution signified a distinct change in the party's attitude on this issue of unity, since all along it had given the impression that although it was not opposed to unity, but the initiative must come from others.

However, this continued to be the stand when the party general secretary, Mr Madhu Limaye, briefing reporters after the meeting, continued to harp on the factor that the initiative had come from leaders like Mr Devaraj Urs and but for it, Mr Charan Singh would not have been in the picture.

Mr Limaye was ruffled when asked to name the Opposition leaders with whom Mr Charan Singh had held talks. He said that to know the details one would have to wait till the formal talks take place but he was unable to say when. Apart from saying that it was "affirmative and positive in manner," he was unwilling to say anything more on the resolution.

The national executive passed two other resolutions, one on corruption in public life and the other on parity price. The resolutions on law and order, which was termed as "law of the jungle," the Asian Games and Khalistan, were held over for tomorrow.

Commenting on the "rampant corruption prevailing in the ruling party," the national executive demanded the immediate dismissal of all the Congress (I) Chief

Ministers and the removal of Mrs Gandhi "by organizing public opinion against her continuance in the top political office."

The resolution further said that with the installation of the Congress Governments in the States in June 1980, "fleecing" the Indian people had become the chief activity of the Congress (I) and Chief Ministers were selected not for their ability but for their "capacity to collect money by hook or by crook."

According to the resolution, it has been estimated that the various Congress (I) Chief Ministers have been contributing to the central fund of Mrs Gandhi at least Rs 10 million a day. "It is Prime Minister Indira Gandhi herself who is the fountainhead of corruption," the resolution added.

The resolution congratulated Mr Arun Shourie of The Indian Express and other fearless journalists "whose number is necessarily limited" and it expressed concern over the growing ineffectiveness of the representative institutions in the country.

In another resolution, the national executive demanded that the cane price should not be less than Rs 40 a quintal, and paddy support price of Rs 160. Similarly a fair support price for jute and cotton should be fixed and the Government agencies must ensure that the growers actually get that price.

The Lok Dal warned the farming community that unless they organized themselves and developed power of resistance, they would be increasingly exploited by the "unholy" alliance of ruling party politicians, corrupt bureaucrats, trade and industry.

The national executive condoled the death of CPI leader Bhupesh Gupta and Lala Jagat Narain.

About 27, out of 34 members, attended the national executive meeting. Among those present were Mr Karpoori Thakur, Mr Biju Patnaik, Mr Devi Lal, Mr Kumbharak Arya Sheikh Abdur Rahman, Mr Rabi Ray, Mr Satyanarayana Reddy, Mr Chimanbhai Patel, Mr Purushottam Kaushik and Mr Sharad Yadav.

GENERAL DESCRIBES TESTS FOR ARMY RECRUITS

Calcutta THE STATESMAN in English 26 Sep 81 p 9

[Text] Sept. 25--Young men seeking to enlist in the Indian Army will have to undergo a written examination from now on. A physiological examination is to be introduced and soon a psychological test will be added. All this is to ensure that soldiers-to-be have the intelligence to handle the increasingly sophisticated and complex weapons and equipment issued to the Army.

The tests have been carefully designed to make sure that the rural bias in recruitment remains unchanged. Eighty per cent of the recruitment is done from the villages and the Army would like it stay that way, the Director of Recruitment, Major General A. E. Joseph said in New Delhi today. The tests will begin on October 1.

Apart from enabling the Army to select personnel of better quality, the tests will obviate some of the malpractices that are committed in the hope of recruitment. A lesser advantage will be that since more than one officer will be handling the tests there will be fewer allegations levelled at the recruiting officers--allegations which General Joseph maintained were baseless.

The written examination would be of the type that any student who had studied till Class V ought to pass fairly easily. The physiological and psychological tests would aim at selecting men with quick reflexes. The overall gain would be that instead of just accepting people who had the minimal physical standards, and were literate, the Army would be getting recruits better suited to the requirements of modern warfare.

In the past, all that the Army asked an applicant to produce was a certificate of literacy from his school. He had to be literate in any language of the region. It had been observed that very many fake certificates were being presented.

The recruiting officers had had always sought to have suspect certificates verified from the local education officials. In many cases people who presented fake certificate were later handed over to the police. According to General Joseph, the main value of the certificate was that it contained the date of birth of the candidate. A medical examination was also conducted to try and establish whether or not a man was of recruitable age--17 to 20 years.

General Joseph said that aptitude tests would not be conducted at the recruitment stage. That would be, as is now done, at the Regimental Centre at which a recruit was given his basic military training. He explained that recruitment was done at two levels. What the Army called the normal rate was for fit young men who were literate, and the matric rate in which matriculates were asked to take a competitive examination and then selected. Many of these went in for the more technical arms and services.

Asked whether young men from the urban areas would have an advantage in the written examination, General Joseph said that he did not think so. But if there was such advantage the rural boys would probably have the edge in the physiological test. An overall assessment would be made. Nobody would start with a handicap.

Why was the Class V level chosen? He said that it was a very basic level, though even now young people who had studied till much higher were seeking recruitment. He felt that, if necessary, the level could be raised at a later stage. It would be preferable to raise a standard based on what actually took place rather than start with a high standard and then be forced to reduce it.

The basic class composition would remain unaffected. Depending upon the number of vacancies in each regiment, recruiting officers in different parts of the country were given a quota of vacancies to be filled. This ensured that recruitment was broad-based. He observed that almost all States were fulfilling their quotas. At times there had been shortages but were never of a nature critical enough to warrant the quota of one State being transferred to another.

Regarding the physical requirements, General Joseph said that a survey had been conducted. It had established the height, weight and chest measurement to be expected of physically fit young men of each caste or race. If a candidate possessed the requisite physique he was then subjected to a detailed medical examination.

General Joseph said that though the educational standard for recruitment was low, all soldiers continued to receive general education during the training and even when on active service. They did a series of certificate examinations and the special certificate was accepted as being equivalent to the Class X examination.

OFFICIAL NOTES INCIDENCE OF INDUSTRIAL SICKNESS

Calcutta THE SUNDAY STATESMAN in English 4 Oct 81 p 9

[Text] Mr Maganbhai Barot, Union Deputy Minister for Finance, said in Calcutta on Saturday that "defaulting management" was responsible for the "sickness" of 54 per cent of the large industrial units which had fallen sick. At present, Rs 1,100 crores of advances from banks and other financial institutions were blocked in 378 such units. Another Rs 345 crores were blocked in 22,000 "sick" small industrial units. Mr Barot said that the incidence of industrial sickness was highest in West Bengal.

Addressing a meeting of the Bengal National Chamber of Commerce and Industry, the Minister urged the industry to look at itself and inquire if it had made enough contributions to the country's progress. Speaking on banks and industrial growth, he said that there was hardly anything to be said about the banks' performance in relation to the industry. But industry had to answer for rather poor utilization and realization of bank lendings, he said.

Mr Barot also complained that the number of mandays lost in industry due to strikes and lock-outs was the highest in West Bengal, closely followed by Maharashtra. Last year, over 3.6 million mandays were lost in West Bengal against nearly 2.5 million in Maharashtra. He wondered how the loss of mandays could be reduced in West Bengal, while the State Government had opposed the Essential Services Maintenance Act.

The Minister also complained that the West Bengal Government's figures for its overdrafts did not tally with the figures given by the Reserve Bank of India. While the State Government maintained that its overdraft amounted to Rs 65 crores, the RBI accounts showed it at Rs 117 crores. The State Government said that the RBI figure was not "correct" and that it could not get the "correct" figure because of the strike in the RBI for some time earlier this year.

Overdrafts beyond a limit created difficulties for any State, Mr Barot said and added that it was to the State's advantage to reduce it. He suggested that the State Government put its financial house in order.

The Minister claimed, however, that despite various constraints, production in the country had gone up in all sectors. Till August this year, power generation had increased by 15 per cent, production of coal 9.9 per cent and earnings from railway and other traffic by 15 per cent. There had been considerable improvement in the production of steel, cement, sugar as well as industrial items. He declined, however, to reply to a question why huge stocks of steel were lying unsold at different steel plants and at Bombay port. It was for Mr Pranab Mukherjee, Union Commerce Minister, to answer the question, he said.

Discussing the Centre's plans for rural development, Mr Barot said that till the end of last year, the banks had advanced Rs 66 crores at differential rates of interest to the Scheduled Castes and Tribes. The banks had been asked to give emphasis on lendings to the poor at these interest rates. Rural families with an annual income of up to Rs 2,000 and urban families earning up to Rs 3,000 were eligible for bank loans at these rates for self-employment.

The Minister said that the Centre had decided to increase bank loans to the agricultural sector to 16 per cent by 1985. Even if the banks could not achieve this 50 per cent of the advances would be given to small landholders, artisans and the self-employed in villages. According to him, the Centre also had plans to bring 1.5 crore people above the poverty line during the Sixth Plan. For this purpose, Government agencies and commercial banks would identify 600 families every year in each block in the country and help them with loans and subsidy.

Mr H. N. Datta Gupta, president of the Chamber, suggested that banks give to agricultural and other rural development projects more credit on liberal terms. He pleaded that the Centre examine the possibility of reducing the interest rates of bank loans to the tea gardens in the eastern region since these were beset with problems.

MORE CONTROL OF FOREIGN MISSION ARMS PROPOSED

Madras THE HINDU in English 4 Oct 81 p 1

[Article by G. K. Reddy]

[Text] New Delhi, Oct. 3--After the recent involvement of some Iraqi diplomats in a shooting incident in Delhi, the Government of India is taking steps to enforce stricter control on possession of firearms by foreign missions to eliminate the grey areas of law relating to the import and re-export of weapons by them.

Three of the five Iraqis, who had opened fire on the Iranian demonstrators near their Embassy premises, are being sent back to Baghdad in the next few days, and the other two would follow a week later if the pleas for reconsidering their cases are rejected by the Government.

All these years the Government has been turning a blind eye at the import of firearms by diplomats as part of their personal baggage, because the Vienna Convention is pretty vague on the subject. It has hitherto raised no objections to diplomats importing firearms and sporting weapons of standard bore, nor insisted on licensing them.

Clandestine Import

The trouble has arisen over the growing tendency of some of the foreign missions to import clandestinely weapons of prohibited bores normally used by the army and the police. The Government is well aware that some of the diplomats have exceeded all limits of tolerance by bringing in automatic weapons which is not permissible under any convention.

It is generally assumed that such weapons, whether of permitted or prohibited bores, are brought in with or without declaration as part of personal baggage, or smuggled in through the diplomatic bags without the knowledge of the Government. It is possible for the Customs authorities to exercise a stricter check on what can be deemed to be personal baggage, but there is no unanimity at the international level on what should legitimately constitute a diplomatic bag that cannot be subjected to any inspection.

The International Law Commission, of which India is a member, has been looking into this problem to define the size and contents of a diplomatic bag, determine whether it is absolutely inviolable, and what should be done when the host has reasonable suspicion that it is being misused for purposes for which it is not intended under the Geneva Convention. It is India's contention that, in the event of some doubt about the nature of the contents, there is no harm in subjecting a diplomatic bag to electronic inspection.

Vienna Convention

Though the 25-member Commission is generally agreed on the need for some sort of surveillance to prevent smuggling of arms, narcotics and even bullion, it is sharply divided on the degree of discretion a host country should exercise in asserting its right of inspection within the framework of the Vienna Convention. The Indian view is that the secrecy of the documents in a diplomatic bag cannot be violated by merely checking it with electronic gadgets for any hidden weapons.

In the old days, a diplomatic bag was only a sealed pouch, which was brought in by a courier on his person. But over the years, it has assumed the dimensions of a big postal bag weighing a quintal or more, with each mission receiving at regular intervals several such consignments of varying sizes and weights. There was an instance recently when a foreign mission tried to bring in a highly sophisticated portable computer for some undisclosed purpose.

Second Class Bags

A country like India, which is quite new to this game used to indulge in some innocent violations in the early years of its independence. The horrified Customs at Delhi airport had to call the Chief of Protocol to inspect an Indian diplomatic bag dripping with oil, and it was discovered on opening it that some jars of pickle were being sent along with some highly secret foreign policy documents.

From then on, the Government introduced the system of second class diplomatic bags for permitting on a quota basis the Indian personnel stationed abroad to import edible articles and other gift packets from relations.

ENGINEERING EXPORTS REPORTED TO INCREASE EIGHTFOLD

Bombay THE TIMES OF INDIA in English 30 Sep 81 p 9

[Text] Bangalore, September 29 (UNI)--The country's engineering exports have registered an impressive near eight-fold increase in the last one decade with an annual average growth rate of 27.5 per cent.

The exports, which were a mere Rs. 115.76 crores in 1970-71, jumped to an estimated Rs. 900 crores in 1980-81 with the southern region alone contributing to over 12 per cent of the growth, according to the Engineering Export Promotion Council.

In the southern region, the exports went up from Rs. 15.17 crores in the beginning of the decade to over Rs. 100 crores in 1980-81. Capital goods and consumer durables contributed to the bulk of the engineering exports from the southern region comprising Karnataka, Tamil Nadu, Andhra Pradesh and Kerala.

Tamil Nadu and Karnataka accounted for nearly 90 per cent of the exports with an export of Rs. 49.27 crores and 47.01 crores, respectively, last year.

A significant percentage of the exports had gone to develop West European markets and South-East Asia constituted the major market for Indian engineering goods among the developing nations.

Mr. Kumar Mahadevan, chairman, EEPC (southern region), told a party of newsmen, which visited the engineering units in Madras and Bangalore recently, that power was the major constraint to boosting engineering exports. Port facilities in the country should be expanded.

Mr. Mahadevan also suggested that the states could allocate specific quota of critical inputs such as power and cement to export units on a uniform basis. Such an idea had been successfully tried out in Haryana, he said.

Madras (PTI): The setting up of two units on a priority basis for manufacturing electronic equipment in the public sector has been suggested.

Mr. H. R. Bapu Sitaram, general manager and executive director of the public sector, Bharat Electronics Limited (BEL), Bangalore, told a party of visiting newsmen last week that the exact location had not been decided though they would be outside Karnataka.

He said production in the two units, with an expected turnover of Rs. 60 crores in the next five years, would be rationalised.

Mr. Sitaram said a glass shell unit was likely to be set up near Bombay where one million pieces would be produced.

TASK FORCE STUDIES EXPORT-PROCESSING ZONES

Bombay THE TIMES OF INDIA in English 5 Oct 81 p 5

[Article by L. K. Sharma]

[Text] New Delhi, October 4--The mounting trade deficit and the phenomenal success of the free trade zones in Sri Lanka and South-East Asia have brought about a change in the government's thinking on export-processing zones.

It is examining what more incentives can be given to the entrepreneurs in the free trade zones and whether new zones could be established in the face of demand for these by several states.

A task force headed by Mr. Prakash Tandon is at present studying the working of the existing zones and the feasibility of setting up additional free zones. The task force includes representatives of different ministries and has Mr. K. G. Ramanathan, joint secretary in the commerce ministry, as its member-secretary. The government is expected to announce by April next year a package of measures to promote the free trade zones.

The states, which have demanded the establishment of free trade zones, are Karnataka, Kerala, Tamil Nadu, Andhra Pradesh, West Bengal, Goa and Pondicherry.

Present Zones

The present zones in Kandla and Santa Cruz have taken a long time to pick up and it is only during the last two years that their performance has shown some improvement.

In Kandla, a general production zone started in 1965. There are 56 units from which exports amounted to Rs. 2,551 lakhs last year. Significantly, the product pattern and the size of the units have been changing. Till 1976, simple goods like stainless steel utensils, embroidered sarees, roasted peanut and plastic goods were produced. Now the exports from the zone include capacitors, fur fabrics, machine-made woollen carpets, acrylic knitwear and cosmetics. There are also units with foreign collaboration.

The Santa Cruz Electronics Export-Processing Zone, which was started in 1974, has 37 projects with a total investment of Rs. 13 crores. It exported goods worth Rs. 1,880 lakhs last year. The free trade zone in the area of electronics was considered vital since in the ordinary course, licensing delays would make the technology obsolete by the time the project got going.

For long, not much official attention was paid to the languishing free trade zones. There was complacency because of the satisfactory foreign exchange position in the mid-seventies. Then came the Janata government which did not believe in export-led growth. There are still some inhibitions about following the development model of Sri Lanka or Philippines but the new realities of the trade deficit and the foreign exchange situation have compelled the government to revise its thinking.

The government has already announced a scheme for cent per cent export-oriented units in areas other than the free trade zones. The task force will also examine how this scheme would affect the free trade zones.

The zones enjoy several concessions, including exemption from the payment of import duty on capital goods, raw materials and components. In the last budget, the government announced a tax holiday for five initial assessment years to the units in both the free trade zones.

These incentives are still no match for those offered by the free trade zones in Sri Lanka and South-East Asia. The Sri Lanka zone, for example, places no limits on equity holding of foreign investors and allows free transfers of shares within or outside the island. There are no import duties and exchange control procedures. It offers a tax holiday up to 10 years and a further concessionary period. Little wonder that this zone in our neighbourhood was able to attract 121 projects within the first two years and now employs more than 35,000 workers.

The entrepreneurs in the India free trade zones have been asking for permission to sell part of their production in the domestic market. There has been criticism of the present decision-making machinery and procedures and the infrastructural facilities in the zones.

The Indian investor, who enters the zone often finds that his expectations are not fulfilled. The foreign investor compares the zone with others in the neighbourhood and sees the Indian one as less attractive. The controlled Indian industrial environment does not permit the free trade zone to be as free as the foreign investor would like it to be.

ISRO DEVELOPS TECHNOLOGY FOR POLYOL PRODUCTION

Madras THE HINDU in English 26 Sep 81 p 7

[Text] Cochin, Sept. 25--One spin off from space research in the country is the scope provided by its results for commercial exploitation.

A joint sector project between the Kerala State Industrial Development Corporation (KSIDC) and Fibro Plast Private Limited, Cochin, is to come up near Kuttippuram (Malappuram district) in Kerala based on the technology developed by the Indian Space Research Organisation for the manufacture of polyols from castor oil.

Polyols are the raw material for a variety of flexible and rigid polyurethane foams which find application in such areas as mattresses and cushions, insulation for refrigerators, cold storages and air conditioning systems, fish net floats, paints and varnishes, anti-corrosion coating materials, roof insulation for railway and road coaches, flush doors, decorative furniture, shoe soles and printing rollers.

Polyols are manufactured from petroleum derivatives. ISRO developed its technology for producing polyols from castor oil during the work on a solid propellant for rockets.

Mr. V. R. Menon, General Manager (Technical) of KSIDC, said the Corporation was investing 40 per cent of the investment of Rs. 97 lakhs on the project because this was a 'special project.' In the normal course KSIDC financial participation in a joint sector project would be only to the tune of 26 per cent, he said.

Patents: Mr. Menon said ISRO held Indian and international patents for this technology and it was for the first time that a major technology was developed for commercial exploitation in the joint sector. ISRO would be providing comprehensive engineering support for setting up the plant which is expected to go on stream within 15 months from now.

At present, Mr. Menon said, India imported about 1,000 tonnes of polyols but it was mainly used for the manufacture of flexible foams. The polyols to be manufactured in the new project which would have an annual capacity of 1,000 tonnes, would be, to begin with, for the manufacture of rigid foams.

There were over a dozen units manufacturing flexible foams in the country.

Mr. G. K. Kuruvilla, Manager, Propellant Fuel Complex in ISRO, said already, a few other technologies developed by ISRO had been released for commercial exploitation like manufacture of plasticides (Andhra Pradesh Small Scale Industries Corporation), pressure transducers (a private firm in Lucknow) and metal fire fighting powder (a private firm in Gujarat which will commence production shortly).

Mr. U. T. Menon, Managing Director of Castols (India) Limited, said the project would employ about 75 persons. Besides it would open up several opportunities for setting up downstream units, particularly in the small scale sector.

SCIENTISTS CHALLENGE THEORY OF SUPERCONDUCTIVITY

Madras THE HINDU in English 26 Sep 81 p 6

[Text]

NEW DELHI, Sept. 25.

Physicists at the National Physical Laboratory (NPL) here claim to have obtained massive evidence that challenges the 24-year-old theory of superconductivity for which three Americans won a Nobel prize in 1972.

Superconductivity is a fascinating phenomenon exhibited by certain materials which abruptly lose all their electrical resistance when cooled to very low temperatures.

Using this property, tremendously huge magnets can be built employing superconducting coils because such magnets do not consume electric power. But these magnets have to be kept at very low temperatures less than —250 degree Celcius.

Now the three NPL physicists — Dr. S. N. Ekbote, Dr. S. K. Gupta and Dr. A. V. Narlikar (younger brother of the astrophysicist Dr. Jayant Narlikar) — have postulated a new theory of superconductivity that can potentially enable construction of superconducting magnets operating at higher temperatures, easy to maintain and control.

Old theory: Physicists at Max Plank Institute in Karlsruhe, West Germany, have already started work to verify the new theory and develop methods for the search of promising superconducting materials.

Dr. Narlikar and his colleagues first reported their work at a conference in Germany in March this year.

The scientists said their experiments on three different types of superconducting materials have shown positive evidence that the superconducting phenomenon is not explained by the currently held theory.

According to the theory proposed in 1957 by the Nobel prize winners Dr. John Bardeen, Dr. Leon Cooper and Dr. John Shrieffer, superconductivity arose due to the "pairing" of oppositely spinning conduction electrons in the material.

They said the pairing took place due to the influence of the vibrations of the crystal lattice (phonons).

Dr. Narlikar and his colleagues said their experiments have for the first time shown that electron pairs are formed not due to phonons but due to magnetic interactions of the spinning electrons.

Dr. Ekbote said the technique called "conduction Electron Spin Resonance (CESR)" was used by them for the first time to study the electrons in the superconducting state.

Many uses: Asked about the implications of their discovery, the scientists said it might help develop newer compounds that can become superconductors at temperatures higher than for the presently known materials.

If such materials are found, the day will come soon when superconductivity can be exploited for industrial uses like magnets for producing fusion energy, energy storage and high speed transport on rails. — PTI.

SEMINAR ON ELECTRONICS COMPONENTS INDUSTRY HELD

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 26 Sep 81 p 7

[Text] Bangalore, Sept. 25 (PTI)--Union Minister of State for Science and Technology C. P. N. Singh, today underscored the need for a balanced, viable base for electronic components, which was essential to make the electronics industry self-reliant.

The component sector had confined itself to producing out-dated high-priced items, he said. The absence of research and the prevailing sellers' market had perpetuated the situation which was "highly detrimental to the growth of the electronics industry."

Inaugurating a national seminar here on the "Electronic Components Industry--Status and Prospects" the Minister expressed concern at the lack of emphasis on production of professional grade components, which had resulted in needless imports.

"This is a very unhappy situation and deserves urgent attention" the Minister said.

To expedite all aspects of industrial licensing for components the Government had set up an inter-departmental task force. Existing units were being encouraged to expand and modernise their technological base. "New capacities are being created on an internationally viable basis because of the immense potential for export of components, he said.

New entrepreneurs had shown keen desire to enter the components area, but initiative from existing units was lacking, he said.

The seminar has been organised jointly by the Karnataka state electronics development corporation and the Electronics Components Industries Association (ELCINA).

Karnataka Chief Minister R. Gundu Rao in his presidential address said his State produced Rs 250 crore worth of electronic goods out of the country's total production of Rs 700 crore. To help integrated development of the industry, his Government had taken up the construction of a pollution-free "electronic city" near Bangalore. He invited entrepreneurs to make full use of the facilities provided.

Mr M. Wadhwa, president of ELCINA, said outmoded technology and limited capacity had hampered production of quality components. India lagged behind other countries in technology by at least 15 years. He called for delicencing of electronic industries at least for five years and abolition of import duty on capital goods used in the manufacture of electronic components.

KOLHAN TRIBALS REPORTED TO WANT INDEPENDENCE

Calcutta THE SUNDAY STATESMAN in English 27 Sep 81 p 7

[Text]

PATNA, Sept. 26.—The underground movement for the creation of an independent sovereign State for Kolhan tribals took a new turn with Mr Narayan Joke and Mr C. A. Topno, legal advisers of the self-styled Kolhan Government, reportedly leaving for the United Nations and the Commonwealth headquarters last fortnight to place their case before international authorities. The Kolhan area comprises the predominently tribal regions of Bihar, Orissa and Madhya Pradesh around the old Chaibasa sub-division.

A Press release recently issued to local reporters at Chaibasa by Mr K. C. Hembrom, State secretary of the so-called Kolhan Government, said that their legal advisers had been deputed to seek interviews with leaders of different world panels with a view to mobilising support for their cause. They would, the Press release added, also visit Germany, France and some other countries for the purpose. The release denounced what they described as suppression of tribals by the Bihar Government.

The secessionists case, according to the release, is that the Kolhan area had "never merged with the Indian Union during or after the transfer of power by the British Government". Their area, there-

Official sources in the State capital confirmed that "some anti-national elements" had been active in Chotanagpur. But they did not confirm if the legal advisers of the self-styled Kolhan Government had really slipped out of the country.

The sources alleged that some tribals, aided and abetted by a few foreign missionaries, had been trying to build up a secessionist movement in and around Chaibasa. The foreign missionaries had their offices in Goa and Bangalore too, the sources added.

However, observers here wonder why the Bihar Government had been trying to curb the activities of the Jharkhand Mukti Morcha—an organisation which had been acting as a counter-force in the area lately. The Morcha leaders, time and again, have denounced the activities of the secessionists. And significantly, the Congress (I) and the Morcha were poll partners last time.

RESURGENCE OF NAXALITE ACTIVITIES REPORTED

Calcutta THE SUNDAY STATESMAN in English 27 Sep 81 pp 1, 7

[Text]

MR Tarapada Basu (40), a sub-inspector of Calcutta Police attached to the Special Branch, was shot dead near Dolpiri Bazar, at Ariadaha in the 24-Parganas, on Saturday morning.

The Police suspect that pro Lin-Biao group of Naxalites, led by Mr Nisith Bhattacharyya and Mr Azizul Haque, to be behind the killing. Several posters and leaflets denouncing the administration and the police and urging the people to take to the path of annihilation were found by the police at the place of the incident.

According to senior officials, about four to five men attacked Mr Basu while he was starting his scooter after shopping at the market. He reportedly tried to grapple with them, but was gunned down. The assailants escaped after the incident.

He was taken to the local hospital, where he died shortly afterwards. The body bore four to five bullet wounds. Later, the police found two empty cartridges at the spot. The cartridges were from "small firearms", the officials said. No arrest has been made so far.

Mr Basu was reportedly attached to the section of the Special Branch which deals with Naxalites. He lived in the police quarters at Belghoria.

The incident seemed to have surprised and confused police officials both in Calcutta and the 24-Parganas, since no policeman had been murdered in Calcutta and its neighbouring suburbs since the early seventies, when the Naxalite movement was at its peak.

The last murder of a policeman in West Bengal occurred in 1980, when alleged pro Lin-Biao supporters attacked a police camp and snatched away several arms.

Senior officials, including the Superintendent of Police, 24-Parganas, the Commissioner of Police, Calcutta, the Deputy Inspector General of the Criminal Investigation Branch and the Deputy Commissioner of the Special Branch, visited the spot.

A senior police official said, however, that no special alert had been issued following the incident. He said policemen throughout the State had already been asked to be wary of extremists.

Meanwhile, the Criminal Investigation Department has been entrusted with the investigation.

Mr A. K. Sen, Chief Secretary to the West Bengal Government, told reporters at Writers Building during the day that Naxalite activities, including involvement in violent incidents, were assuming a serious proportion in eight of the 18 districts of the State. The districts were the 24-Parganas, Birbhum, Nadia, West Dinajpur, Jalpaiguri, Malda, Darjeeling and Burdwan.

Although Naxalities had not till now involved themselves in violent incidents in Calcutta, they had increased their operations in the city considerably without attracting publicity. The people must be alert against renewed Naxalite acticities, he added.

Public opinion was to be mobilized and the people's cooperation sought to identify and track down the Naxalities, Mr Sen said. It was learnt that the police had requested the State Government to give it powers similar to those envisaged in the Preventive Detention Act which had helped it counter Naxalite violence in the past.

Till September 15 this year, Naxalites were allegedly involved in 38 violent incidents in which 27 people were killed and 12 injured, including nine policemen. As many as 1,288 people were arrested in connexion with these incidents. The number of rifles snatched was 74, of which 38 were recovered. Ten such incidents occurred in West Dinajpur and eight in Nadia.

In 1980, there were 31 incidents in which 28 people were killed and 25 injured. Among those killed were two policemen. West Dinajpur recorded the highest number of deaths, 14 last year. In 1979, six people were killed in nine incidents.

Mr Sen alleged that the murders had been committed by the pro Lin Biao group of Naxalites, led by Mr Azizul Haque and Mr Nisith Bhattacharyya, which believed in secret killings and collection of arms.

HEAVY INDUSTRY UNITS REACH 98 PERCENT TARGET

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 29 Sep 81 p 7

[Text] Public sector undertakings under the Department of Heavy Industry achieved 98 per cent production target in August 1981. This was 30 per cent higher compared to the production during the same period last year.

The production achieved in August 1981 was Rs 121.89 crores, which is 98 per cent of the target of Rs 124.23 crores.

This production of Rs 121.89 crores is higher by 30 per cent compared to Rs 93.42 crores during the corresponding period of the previous year.

Production of these units cumulatively during five months--April to August 1981--was Rs 493 crores which is 91 per cent of the target of Rs 542.65 crores. This production is 22 per cent higher compared to the same period last year.

Among the six public sector undertakings which exceeded their targets during August included HMT (110 per cent), Burn Standard Co Ltd (131 per cent) and Bharat Heavy Plates and Vessels Ltd (113 per cent).

Units which fell short of achieving their targets included Bharat Heavy Electricals Ltd (97 per cent), Mining and Allied Machinery Corporation Ltd (92 per cent) and Bharat Wagon and Engineering Co Ltd (89 per cent).

For the period April-August 1981 the production figures were: HMT (112 per cent), Burn Standard (113 per cent) and BHEL (87 per cent).

Industries which have recorded significant increases in production during April-August 1981 over the corresponding period of the previous year are cement machinery (64.4 per cent), cars (105 per cent), mopeds (59 per cent), commercial vehicles (42 per cent), tractors (33 per cent) and railway wagons (33 per cent).

However, production of sugar and paper and pulp machinery showed a decline during April-August 1981.

HYDERABAD FACTORY TO MAKE LIGHT VEHICLES

Madras THE HINDU in English 1 Oct 81 p 7

[Text] Hyderabad, Sept. 30--The Central Government has granted a letter of intent to Hyderabad Allwyn Metal Works Limited, a State Government company, for annual production of 10,000 light commercial vehicles such as mini-buses, pick-up vans and small trucks.

This will be the first public sector company in the country to enter the field of commercial vehicles production. At present, the production of commercial vehicles is completely in the hands of the private sector.

The letter of intent granted to Allwyn covers a wide range of vehicles up to three-tonne pay-load.

This was announced by the Andhra Pradesh Chief Minister, Mr. T. Anjiah and the State Minister for Industry, Mr. M. Baga Reddi, here on Wednesday.

The project is proposed to be located in Medak district, the Prime Minister, Mrs. Indira Gandhi's constituency. It will provide direct employment to about 10,000 persons, besides generating indirect employment in the many ancillary industries expected to grow up in and around Medak district. It will also help to optimise the capacity of various automobile ancillary units in and around Hyderabad.

Allwyn is negotiating with a number of leading automobile companies for technical and financial collaboration for the production of light commercial vehicles. A number of teams from Japan and elsewhere have already visited the facilities at Allwyn and confirmed that it is in a good position to take up production of such vehicles.

Allwyn already has a letter of intent for the manufacture of integral buses and has been building bus bodies with know-how from Park Royal, London, a subsidiary of British Leyland. It is also manufacturing scooters under the name of "Allwyn Pushpak."

At present it is negotiating with a number of international companies for production of mini-motor cycles and mopeds as part of its programme of expansion and diversification.

FOOD MINISTER SINGH HOLDS PRESS CONFERENCE

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 2 Oct 81 pp 1, 8

[Text] India may import more foodgrains, Food and Agriculture Minister Rao Birendra Singh said on Wednesday.

At a press conference, he also announced that the minimum sugarcane price for the new crushing season would be Rs 13 a quintal, same as in the last season.

Mr Singh said that no team had yet gone abroad for purchase of foodgrains. However, additional imports would not be ruled out.

He would not say categorically that more imports were planned but added that additional quantities may be purchased, for "the hoarders cannot be allowed to hold the field to themselves, unchecked."

Mr Singh justified imports saying that recent imports of foodgrains, sugar and edible oils had the desired sobering effect on domestic prices.

Asked how imported sugar would be distributed, he said that the stocks were put to auction, but private bidders did not offer a reasonable price. Unless a good price was offered, the sugar would be kept as buffer stock or diverted for consumption through the public distribution system.

Mr Singh viewed the recent rainfall as "very beneficial" not only for the standing kharif crop but also for rabi sowing. He claimed that the kharif prospects this year were "better than last year."

He estimated that the kharif yield would exceed last year's record figure of 79 million tonnes.

In Gujarat, a bumper groundnut crop was expected, he also added.

Levy Sugar

Mr Singh said the levy price for sugar was still being worked out. However, since the formula for calculation was the same as for the last season, he did not expect much of a change in the levy price.

Asked about the ratio of levy and free sale sugar fixed for the sugar mills, Mr Birendra Singh said: "We have not yet decided that."

He said the concessions to mills for early and late crushing were proposed to be continued.

Mr Birendra Singh said the minimum price fixed for sugarcane was not likely to affect adversely the interests of the farmer as was evident last year. Last year, he pointed out, farmers got as much as Rs 26 a quintal for sugarcane.

AGRICULTURAL DEVELOPMENT BODY TO SEEK LOAN

Bombay THE TIMES OF INDIA in English 29 Sep 81 p 1

[Text] Bombay, September 28--The Agricultural Refinance and Development Corporation (ARDC) proposes to raise $350 million from the International Development Association (IDA), an affiliate of the World Bank. Negotiations for this line of credit are expected to be concluded in November. A World Bank team was here recently in this connection.

Disclosing this in Bombay today, Mr. M. Ramakrishnayya, deputy governor of the Reserve Bank of India and chairman of ARDC, told newsmen that this money would be made available to the ARDC by the Centre in rupees for disbursements in 1982 and 1983.

He said the third $250-million IDA-assisted ARDC credit project was for the period ending December, 1981, but was expected to be exhausted earlier.

For the year ending June, 1982, the corporation had set a target for the total disbursements of Rs. 550 crores against the actual record disbursements of Rs. 499 crores during 1980-81.

Mr. Ramakrishnayya said that the overall overdues of member banks were nearly 50 per cent.

He pointed out that a few years ago, Maharashtra, Gujarat, Karnataka, Bihar and Tamil Nadu had shown unsatisfactory performance in the matter of overdues.

Mr. Ramakrishnayya said that the National Bank for Agriculture and Rural Development (NABARD) was expected to be set up soon. ARDC would be merged with this apex institution, which would be concerned not only with long-term but also short-term agricultural credit. He said Agricultural Finance Corporation Ltd. (AFC) might remain as a separate entity under the style Agricultural Finance Consultants Ltd. and would look after only consultancy work as at present.

SHORTFALL IN MANIPUR AUTUMN HARVEST PREDICTED

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 27 Sep 81 p 5

[Text] Imphal, Sept. 26 (PTI)--Manipur expects to harvest this year a kharif crop of about 2,32,000 tonnes against last year's output of 2,90,000, official sources said here today.

Sources attributed the shortfall in production to a long spell of drought this year and consequent reduction in the area under paddy to 9,17,000 hectares from 1,14,900 hectares last year.

1,200 hectares in Thoubal and Bishenpur subdivisions, the rice bowl of Manipur, could not be cultivated due to waterlogging caused by excessive rainfall, while another 10,500 hectares in Thoubal area were hit by drought, they added.

On Sixth Plan agricultural programme, sources said, it was proposed to introduce improved agronomical practices in 'Jhum' land and set up potato production farms at high altitude areas.

The physical target for the former is 1,000 hectares during the Plan period spread over all the hill district of the State. This programme envisaged supply of incentives for jungle clearance, wood collection and ploughing of valleys for growing rabi, beside demonstrations deploying staff of the agricultural department.

Potato production farms would be set up at Ukhrul in Manipur East district where quality seed would be supplied to cultivators to ensure optimum production to meet not only the State's needs but also neighbouring States, sources added.

STATES CONFER ON 1981-82 AGRICULTURE PROGRAMS

Bombay THE TIMES OF INDIA in English 29 Sep 81 p 15

[Text] New Delhi, September 28 (UNI)--State government representatives at a two-day regional meeting held here to discuss ways of effectively implementing agricultural development programmes during 1981-82 have indicated that they have adequate supplies of fertilisers, pesticides and seeds to meet the requirements of both the kharif and the rabi crop.

At this first of six meetings, proposed to be held by the department of agriculture and co-operation during the current agricultural year, the representatives, in the discussion on rabi production strategy, laid emphasis on the proper use of available water resources and the gearing-up of the extension machinery for quick transfer of technology to the farmers.

They also indicated the need for increased consumption of fertilisers and good-quality seeds, having larger areas under high-yielding varieties, integrated pest control and surveillance, and ensuring availability of weedicides for control of phalaris minor and wild oats.

Animal Husbandry

The meeting, which concluded here yesterday, also discussed allied subjects like animal husbandry, dairy development, fishery, forestry, co-operation and agricultural credit, and constituted various working groups for in-depth discussion of the various subjects on the agenda.

Those attending noted with satisfaction that the drought-affected states of Punjab and Haryana had arranged for power supply to farmers for 12 to 14 hours a day providing life-saving irrigation to the standing kharif crop and had also provided them with adequate supplies of diesel.

To synchronise water release from irrigation projects like Bhakra, the meeting recommended representation of the states concerned on the Bhakra management board during the coming season.

The meeting further urged the states to make the fullest use of the facilities available at the fertiliser, pesticide and seed-testing laboratories to check the quality of inputs like seeds and fertilisers. It recommended deterrent action against those found guilty of adulteration.

The meeting laid emphasis on the development of post-harvesting facilities like marketing, processing and storage in Himachal Pradesh and Jammu and Kashmir. It called for building up a reliable data base for horticultural crops and implementing the World Bank-assisted projects in these areas.

Cross-Breeding Plans

In the animal husbandry sector, the meeting recommended that states like Punjab and Haryana having high buffalo concentration should assign priority to buffalo development programmes, with emphasis on cattle cross-breeding programmes to increase milk production.

The meeting noted that all the four states represented--Punjab, Haryana, Himachal Pradesh and Jammu and Kashmir--have successfully completed preparations for the implementation of Operation Flood-II project.

In the fisheries sector, the states were urged to take measures to promote production of fish seed to improve the development of inland fisheries in these states. In this connection, the meeting recommended the setting up of fish-seed farms and hatcheries.

Regarding forestry, the meeting emphasised the need for accelerating afforestation in these states since the percentage of the forest area is much below that recommended under the national forest policy. It said that in Haryana and Punjab, possibilities lie only in the development of agro-forestry under the social forestry programme.

The conference was addressed by, amongst others, Dr. M. S. Swaminathan, member, planning commission.

DELHI ACCUSED OF REDUCING BENGAL WHEAT QUOTA

Calcutta THE STATESMAN in English 5 Oct 81 p 9

[Text] Bangalore, Oct. 4--The West Bengal Revenue Minister, Mr Benoy Krishna Chaudhury, has alleged that the Central allotment of wheat to his State under the food-for-work programme (now renamed the National Rural Economic Development Programme) had been "reduced deliberately."

He told a Press conference here today that West Bengal had asked for 40,000 tons of wheat under the programme in order to provide employment to 26 million unemployed and partially-employed agricultural workers in the State. Till now it had received less than 12,000 tons. As a result the State Government was forced to reduce the quantum of grain given to those employed from 3 kg to 1 kg and increase the cash component from Rs 2 to Rs 4.50. Owing to meagre wheat supplies from the Centre, even the one kilogram of grain was given in the form of either wheat or rice.

The Minister said the State Government had provided Rs 24 crores for the cash component of the programme. Of this Rs 12 crores had to come from the Centre. But even this was not forthcoming. "The Centre has sanctioned only Rs 6 crores which has remained confined to paper," he said.

Mr Chaudhury, who is also president of All-Kisan Sabha, was disappointed with the Centre's recent decision to fix cane price at Rs 13 per quintal and that of paddy at Rs 115. Taking into consideration the cost of inputs and cultivation, these were not remunerative prices. They were less than those recommended by the Agricultural Prices Commission.

The Minister said that the West Bengal Bill to amend the Land Reforms Act was now awaiting the President's assent. The amendments aimed at the plugging in the Act loopholes were utilized by landowners to declare large areas as non-agricultural land, he said. Under the Act, only about 500,000 hectares was vested in the Government as surplus. With the amendment, another 600,000 hectares would be available for distribution among landless workers.

Mr Chaudhury said the amendments proposed to do away with all exemptions provided for in the Land Reforms Act. Three conditions were laid down for self-cultivation. The owner had to prove that his main source of income was from the land and that he was living within 8 km of it, he and members of his family would have to cultivate the land. Occasionally, he could employ labour. The Minister said a Government committee appointed three years ago, had made a survey of tea gardens in West Bengal to determine the area actually under cultivation and the land needed for expansion. Surplus land would be taken over by the State-owned Tea Corporation, he said.

FOODGRAIN STOCK REPORTED TO BE SATISFACTORY

Calcutta THE STATESMAN in English 6 Oct 81 p 9

[Text] New Delhi, Oct. 5--Optimistic about the procurement of paddy, the Minister for Agriculture today clarified that the country had a satisfactory stock of foodgrain to last one year. But the picture is not as bright as it is sought to be painted officially.

The Minister's clarification was intended to allay fears about depleting stock of foodgrain. Though the Ministry did not give statistics about the present level of foodgrain, it was happy to note that the procurement of wheat at 6.57 million tons was the second highest figure till now though it fell short of the target 9.5 million tons.

While referring to "adequate stocks," not only does the Ministry pin its hopes on the coming procurement of paddy, but points out to the arrival of wheat from the USA. Two ships carrying 73,000 tons of wheat have already arrived from that country. The third ship carrying 30,000 tons is expected to reach Mangalore by day after tomorrow. The fourth ship with 20,000 tons of wheat is expected to reach Cochin on the 17th of this month.

Besides, three super tankers carrying 260,000 tons of wheat are scheduled to reach India soon. The wheat imported from the USA is to be stored in the south from where movement is easy. With the arrival of 1.5 million tons of wheat from the USA and bright prospects of paddy procurement, the Ministry does not anticipate any shortage. On the contrary, it expects a smooth sailing for at least one year.

But the Ministry is not able to hide its anxiety about foodstocks. A buffer stock about 15 million tons is regarded ideal. The Government is on record that the total foodstocks stood at 9.80 million tons on April 1. In addition, 6.57 million tons of wheat procured by State agencies and 1.5 million tons of wheat imported from the USA made a total of 17.87 million tons.

Monthly withdrawal from the central pool for the States has increased steadily from one million tons to 1.25 million tons. This means that the present stocks minus the imported wheat is around 10 million tons, which is not a very comfortable position.

That explains why the Government will not mind to import more wheat "if necessary" in case the kharif crop does not come up to its expectation and there is no problem about foreign exchange.

The recent advice of the Centre to the paddy-growing States to make suitable changes in their rules with a view to maximizing procurement is an index of Krishi Bhavan's anxiety about the foodstocks.

OIL MINISTER TALKS TO PRESS IN INDORE

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 4 Oct 81 p 5

[Text] Indore, Oct 3 (PTI)--Imports of petroleum products and crude oil is likely to fall from next year as a result of additional availability of oil from new sources in the country, Union Minister for Petroleum P. C. Sethi said here today.

The reduction in imports would result in a saving of Rs 1400 crore of foreign exchange, Mr Sethi told in a press conference.

He estimated the fall in import volume to be five to six million tonnes in petroleum products and two million tonnes in crude oil.

The Union Minister said there were indications of oil reserves at a point 35 km South-West of Bombay in the Konkan region.

The new find, 35 km away from the sea coast near the Palk Straits, had indicated availability of good quality of light oil, he said and added that the flow at this place was higher as compared to that at the B-57 structure of Bombay High. The commercial viability of the find would be known only after further investigation and tests.

The production at Bombay High was likely to reach 16 million tonnes by the end of this year, Mr Sethi added.

The country was at present importing 2.5 million tonnes of light oil from Saudi Arabia.

Fertiliser Plant

Mr Sethi said the final survey report for setting up the Rs 800-crore fertiliser plant based on Bombay High gas was not yet ready and hence there was no question of selecting Sawai Madhopur for location of the plant as reported in a section of press.

He said the survey report was likely to be available to the Government some time later this month. The survey was being undertaken to choose the best site from among Guna, Ratlam, Mandsaur and Budni in Madhya Pradesh and Sawai Madhopur and Bharatpur in Rajasthan.

The Minister added that prospects of oil finds are bright in the Konkan region of Maharashtra and experts were busy with experiments and survey work.

EXPERT PREDICTS SELF-SUFFICIENCY IN OIL

Bombay THE TIMES OF INDIA in English 5 Oct 81 p 14

[Text] New Delhi, October 4 (UNI)--A United Nations Development Programme oil expert has predicted that India could become self-sufficient in oil within the next ten years through enhanced recovery in existing fields and coverage of new areas.

Dr. N. Mungan, an expert on petroleum recovery who made an evaluation of India's capability of recovering maximum oil, told UNI that the average recovery of oil in India was only 20 per cent.

This meant that India was at the moment extracting only one-fifth of the oil available and the remaining four-fifths of the known reserves were left untapped.

The total oil production now in India is about 15 million tonnes. By using sophisticated equipment and technology, if 40 per cent of the reserves could be extracted, India's oil production could be doubled.

Dr. Mungan, who was here at the invitation of the government of India, had recommended that the institute of reservoir studies in Ahmedabad be funded in a significant way for the next two or three years.

Pat for Institute

Dr. Mungan, who has specialised in enhanced oil and gas recovery methods, said that the institute, set up in 1978, was doing a very good job. Part of the funds which he recommended could be in foreign exchange from UNDP, so that sophisticated equipment which was not available in India could be purchased for the institute. He was optimistic that the government of India and UNDP would realise the importance of the institute and make the necessary funds available.

He had discussions with the institute and Oil and Natural Gas Commission authorities on the characteristics of the oilfields in India, and the best recovery process for each of the oilfields.

Dr. Mungan said that he was impressed by the activities of India in the field of oil exploration, "even though these activities were relatively of recent times."

In North America, 40 per cent of the oil reserves was being extracted. India, which had no complicated oilfields, could easily go in for 40 per cent extraction.

Dr. Mungan said even countries like Brazil and France imported 85 per cent of their oil requirements. India, which was comparatively younger in oil exploration, had pulled ahead of a number of countries and was able to meet 50 per cent of its requirements indigenously, he added.

An enhanced recovery of oil could be achieved through water flooding, chemical flooding, miscible flooding, carbon dioxide flooding and by adopting thermal methods.

He said India was interested in carbon dioxide flooding and thermal methods, and the application of these two methods to recover more oil might be adopted in the country in the next two years.

INCREASED OIL PRODUCTION EXPECTED IN ASSAM

Calcutta THE STATESMAN in English 28 Sep 81 p 8

[Article by S. Guru Dev]

[Text] Oil exploration and production in the eastern region will get a "real big push" with improved technology, a dynamic strategy of optimization and new concepts of management. Funds are no constraints. Digboi is said to have been created by the pioneering slogan "dig boy, dig." Today's drillers also have their slogans, their towns to create and promises to keep. But the problem is one of pace; the energy crunch antiquates production targets.

ONGC's financial outlay for 1980-85 has yet to be approved. The original plan outlay was Rs 3,370 crores, of which Rs 1,107 crores was earmarked for onshore. The total outlay was revised upwards to Rs 4,788 crores because of the Centre's directive to step up production from offshore fields. An accelerated development plan for the eastern region is under consideration. This crude production plan aims at 12.2 million tons for the eastern region. A restricted document of 1969 hoped that ONGC crude from Assam would touch 1.75 million tons by 1973-74; current production is about 1.70 million tons per annum. Nazira is, however, confident of 2 million tons by the end of the year, 4.10 million tons by 1985-86 and 4.86 million tons by 1990-91.

ONGC, Nazira, came on the oil map with Rudrasagar in 1960 when only two structures, including Desangmukh, had been delineated. Today, the 31 structures taken up for drilling include Desangmukh, Rudrasagar, Lakwa, Geleki, Borholla, Amguri, Charali and Chargola in Assam, Champang in Nagaland and Bagimara and Gopinath Killa in Meghalaya. The perspective plan for 1980-85 envisages increasing the drilling rigs from 14 at present (including Cachar) to 19. Seven oilfields, Rudrasagar, Lakwa (including Lakhmani), Geleki, Amguri, Borholla, Charali and Champang, are regular producers; Demalgaon has yet to be developed.

Experts say that the best-known region for its hydrocarbon potential is the South Brahmaputra valley extending into the Dhansiri valley beyond Borholla up to the Barail ranges. Oil India's Nahorkatiya, Jorajan and Moran fields extend with a break of comparatively unexplored territory into ONGC's commercial fields. Further south is Badarpur where the Burmah Oil Company worked a well in the early twenties, producing 0.32 million tons before abandoning the well in 1932. Known gas fields of Bangladesh, like Chattak, Sylhet, Haripur and Habiganj, lie west of this zone.

Complications

The Cachar project activates exploration after nearly four decades. Drilling on the Chargola structure since July 1977 has primarily been to probe the lower Bhuban and upper Barail sands adjoining Badarpur. Chargola-1 was abandoned because of severe down hole complications, Barak-1 was found to be oil-bearing; drilling of Chargola-6 is continuing. Scientists hope to strike it rich in this belt in the near future. The belt includes Baramura, Rokhia and Gojalia in Tripura.

The foothills of the Arunachal Himalayas and the north Brahmaputra valley have yet to be drilled by ONGC; geological and geophysical work is being undertaken. Oil India has identified some prospects adjacent to the Mishmi hills in recent drilling. The Patkaibum region extending from Arunachal across Nagaland into the North Cachar hills, Mizo hills and the Manipur ranges is being investigated by ONGC but logistics is a problem, also along the southern foothills of Meghalaya. The area, like the Naga foothills, is characterized by oil and gas leaking from subsurface hidden reservoirs. ONGC is likely to discover some oil-fields in the near future; Oil India's Kusijan and Digboi are in this belt. As on January 1 this year, ONGC had established geological reserves of 271.33 million tons of crude and 5,320 million cubic metres of free gas. Of these, the initial recoverable crude reserves are estimated at 58.84 million tons.

In 1971 Oil India sold to the three refineries at Digboi, Gauhati and Barauni 3,103 million tons of crude, the full rated capacity since 1969. The throughput in subsequent years could have varied because of unforeseen refining problems and other factors. The Rs 45-crore pipeline from Duliajan to Barauni (1,157 kilometres) was expanded in 1977-78 at a cost of Rs 50 crores to carry 2.25 million tons per year. The total ONGC crude carried by the pipeline till July 31, 1981, was about 9.58 million tons.

Oil India's loss last year because of the blockade was estimated at Rs 36 crores, which may be recouped in five years considering the rate at which the company can generate profits. The approved outlay for the Sixth Plan (1980-81 to 1984-85) is Rs 327 crores, of which the major part (Rs 169 crores) covers exploration in Arunachal, Orissa and the Bay of Bengal; Rs 97 crores for capital equipment and Rs 39 crores to develop the Jorajan field. About Rs 15 crores is earmarked for the LPG project at Duliajan which should be operational by April 1982. The plant will produce 60,000 tons of LPG and 12,000 tons of natural gasolene, reducing import of kerosene and saving thereby Rs 15.5 crores of foreign exchange a year.

Gambles

Not much is known, however, of OIL's recent explorations in Arunachal. After establishing a drilling density of one well for every 23 sq. km. in Assam, the intensity of its Arunachal operations since 1968 is nothing to write about. The terrain is forbidding and discovering oil is a gamble. Nevertheless, one has the feeling that OIL seeks new fields to make up for the declining production from existing wells, not necessarily to augment the current flow. Oil and gas were discovered in five shallow wells at Kharsang in Tirap district. Thirty wells are to be drilled in the next five years. The Kumchai well drilled in 1979 was the deepest ever in India. Reports suggest that Bogapani in the alluvial plains west of Digboi and 50 km east of Duliajan in Upper Assam opens up interesting hydrocarbon prospects. A new oilfield is believed to be in the offing.

Major users of OIL gas include Hindustan Fertilizers, Assam SEB, Assam Petrochemicals, Assam Oil Company, Dum Duma, Tingri and Moran gas grids and small consumers, largely tea estates. Duliajan blames the major consumers for not using their quotas fully. OIL has committed more gas for HFC's phase III expansion. ONGC gas keeps going ASEB's Maibella project at Lakwa, the mobile generating sets at Geleki and some tea gardens. What will happen when the real big push raises production to about 8 million tons, including OIL's, in the late eighties? Can the throughput in the pipeline be increased further by "looping" a larger segment? ONGC officials prefer to cross their bridges when they come to them.

Because of the Assam agitation the IOC refinery at Gauhati processed only 0.639 million tons in the last financial year against a normal throughput of 0.82 million tons. It was "dry" during April and November last year. The refinery has plans to increase its storage facilities. Preliminary work has begun on new projects estimated to cost Rs 10 crores to Rs 12 crores. A naptha splitter facility is being built to cater to the Bongaigaon refinery and Petrochemicals Limited's special feedstock requirement. The facility is to be completed by 1982-83. Other projects include installing cooling towers and an effluent pipeline.

The refinery has ordered from BHEL an 8 MW turbo-generator to ensure uninterrupted power supply. The State Electricity Board has been given the contract for a 33 KV double transmission line from Chandrapur to the refinery to reduce dependence on the captive power plant. All the projects are to be commissioned by 1983 and that presupposes trouble-free working days. Crude processing was interrupted for 66 days in 1980-81 because of bandhs, non-cooperation, etc.

MORE DETAILS ON CAUVERY OIL FIND REPORTED

Madras THE HINDU in English 27 Sep 81 p 1

[Text] New Delhi, Sept. 26--The exact location of oil strike in the Cauvery offshore basin announced yesterday is about 50 km from the Vedaranyam coast.

The oil gushing out at the rate of 1,500 barrels a day from the well which has now reached a depth of 3,426 metres is very light and it is presumed sulphur-free.

The Oil and Natural Gas Commission will soon be testing a horizon at 200 metres above the depth of 2,301 metres where the oil was earlier struck.

ONGC is not in a position to say at the moment what the potential of the new oil field will be as two or three more assessment wells will have to be drilled. But both the Commission and the Petroleum Ministry are quite hopeful of speeding up the commencement of production once the commercial viability of the field is established and this should not take more than a year and a half.

An advantage with the new oil find is it has occurred at a very shallow depth (the seabed is at a depth of nine metres) and the erection of platforms should be an easier job than in Bombay High.

Hopes of the oil field around the Vedaranyam area giving a substantial yield are based on the fact that the oil has come from rocks estimated to be around 70 to 100 million years old. The locations where ONGC had earlier drilled did not apparently have these rocks and the wells turned out to be dry.

Since the "Gettysberg" has stumbled on these rocks now, it is hoped that the area contains more rocks of this kind and that they would be oil-bearing. The Bombay High rocks are relatively younger.

High-level meetings are now going on at the Petroleum Ministry with senior officials of ONGC and the Finance Ministry to decide the steps to be taken immediately in the wake of the new discovery.

Indications about the presence of oil in the structure where "Gettysberg" has been drilling since July 20 by way of "fluorescence" came nearly two weeks ago, but ONGC and the Petroleum Ministry remained silent as they did not want to give false hopes. Only on the night of September 24 the presence of oil was definitely known.

'UNI' REPORTS 14.1 PERCENT RISE IN COAL PRODUCTION

Calcutta THE STATESMAN in English 5 Oct 81 p 9

[Text] New Delhi, Oct. 4--Coal production in the country increased by 14.1 percent in September over the corresponding period last year, reports UNI.

According to an official release issued here today, 9.22 million tons of coal were produced in September 1981, against 8.08 million tons in the same month last year, marking an increase of 1.14 million tons.

Higher production was recorded by all the companies during the month (September 1981) over the corresponding month last year. Coal output at Bharat Coking Coal and Central Coalfield went up by 16 percent each, Western Coalfield 10 percent and Eastern Coalfield 8.8 percent. The Singareni Collieries recorded an increase of 29.6 percent in the month over the corresponding period last year.

The cumulative production during April to September 1981, also recorded an increase of 9.8 percent over the corresponding period last year.

This is against the original growth rate target of 6.1 percent for the whole year, 1981-82, and the raised target of 8.8 percent for the year.

During these six months, 54.94 million tons of coal were produced against 50.02 million tons produced during the corresponding period last year, marking an increase of 4.92 million tons.

Another notable achievement for the coal sector is that the production of 54.94 million tons in April-September 1981 was the highest achieved in a six-month period, surpassing the previous best of 50.02 million tons in April-September 1980.

Coal despatches during September 1981 recorded an increase of 14.9 percent over the corresponding month last year.

During the month, nine million tons of coal were despatched against 7.83 million tons in September 1980.

The cumulative despatches during April-September 1981 were 55.30 million tons, against 49.47 million tons during the corresponding period last year.

GAS STRUCK IN TRIPURA'S BARAMURA STRUCTURE

Calcutta THE STATESMAN in English 6 Oct 81 p 1

[Text] New Delhi, Oct. 5--Gas has been struck in the sixth well on the Baramura structure in Tripura, it was announced here today.

Drilling of the sixth well had started on February 18 this year and till September 10, the well had been drilled to a depth of 2,370 metres.

After testing the interval between 2,276 to 2,288 metres, gas started flowing at the rate of 90,000 cubic metres a day through a 6 mm beam at 130 atmospheric pressure.

The Oil and Natural Gas Commission has been exploring for hydrocarbons in Tripura since 1972 and so far, it has drilled six wells there. Gas was found in the first well on the Baramura structure in June 1975, but the subsequent drilling of four wells on the same structure was not successful due to severe difficulties encountered.

The ONGC, however, persisted and further exploration was carried out and once again, succeeded in striking hydrocarbons in Baramura. Further tests are proposed to be carried out to assess the potential of the latest gas find.

Meanwhile, the ONGC is drilling wells on two other structures in Tripura--Gojalia and Rokhia. The Gojalia well is projected to be drilled to a depth of 4,000 metres and the Rokhia well, being drilled with the assistance of Russian experts, will go to a depth of 5,000 metres.

There have been a number of gas finds in the last few years, both onshore and offshore, the largest being south Bassein gas field which has substantial recoverable gas reserves.

In addition to south Bassein, gas has been found in other offshore structures like B-55 and south and mid-Tapti. The total gas availability from these offshore fields is now established at about 20 to 25 million cubic metres a day.

Gas has also been struck in two separate offshore structures in the Andaman Islands and also off Porto Novo near Pondicherry.

In the onshore areas, gas was discovered in the first well in Dahej in Gujarat. A second well is now being drilled there. Gas was also struck at Narsapur in Andhra Pradesh some time ago and two further wells are being drilled there.

UNI adds: The State-owned Hindustan Petroleum Corporation has embarked on a Rs 400-crore expansion project in the Sixth Five-Year Plan period.

PROBLEMS, PROSPECTS IN STEEL INDUSTRY NOTED

Bombay THE TIMES OF INDIA in English 5, 6 Oct 81

[Article by J. D. Singh: "Problems and Prospects in Steel"]

[5 Oct 81 pp 1, 5]

[Text] Plants Face Supply Crisis

The public sector steel industry has been looking up in the past one year. But crisis keeps prowling round the corner like a hungry panther.

The beast has already drawn blood. A reversal of the trend towards infrastructural improvement is noticeable. Complaints are heard once again about shortfalls in coal and power supply and bottlenecks in rail transport.

As production picks up further, the requirements of the steel plants in respect of essential inputs and raw materials, as well as movement of finished products to distribution centres, will increase. The question is whether the authorities concerned will be able to cope with them. There is some doubt about it.

A visit to the steel plants after a gap of five years reveals a picture of great contrasts. In December 1976, the steel managers were exuberant and optimistic. There was a "surplus" of indigenous steel. True, it was the result of low production and lower demand. Still, in theory, there was a surplus. The then steel minister talked bravely of creating a capacity of 75 million tonnes by the end of the century. The target was wholly unrealistic, but it reflected the mood of the moment.

Today, the mood is a mixture of hope and uncertainty. Hope because steel production has picked up since October 1980. In the first six months of 1981-82, the five integrated steel plants under Steel Authority of India Ltd. (SAIL) produced 2.609 million tonnes of saleable steel. If this trend continues for the second half of the year, the total output will be 5.218 million tonnes.

This will be much lower than 5.432 million tonnes in 1976-77 and 5.293 million tonnes in 1977-78 (when, incidentally, the installed capacity was less), but substantially higher than the output in any of the previous three years.

Since the step-up in production has been due largely to an improvement in the infrastructure, an element of uncertainty creeps into the scene. Steel managers are apprehensive that infrastructural constraints would reappear in the near future.

The inadequacy of rail transport is a complaint shared by all steel plants. It has caused shortages of raw materials as well as unwanted stockpiles of finished products (like galvanised sheets at Rourkela). The total stock holding with SAIL exceeds seven-lakh tonnes. Rourkela alone holds stocks of 94,000 tonnes and Durgapur, 58,000 tonnes.

It is admitted that there has been some improvement in wagon movement, but this has not been sufficient. One of the problems is that the railways offer large unidirectional rakes, but not loose wagons which can carry the products to all or most of the distribution centres.

While saleable steel stocks have gone up (partly because of a "glut" in the market caused by liberal steel imports), coal stocks have gone down from 479,000 tonnes on July 1 to 343,000 tonnes on September 30.

The coal stocks are much below the safe level and the plants are forced to adjust oven-pushing rates frequently, thus running the risk of serious damage to coke ovens due to thermal variations.

Coking coal is not only in short supply, but is poor in quality, with the ash content as high as 18.5 to 21.8 per cent. It is blended with imported coking coal to reduce the ash content, but the foreign variety is unavailable in large quantities.

The steel plants are also starved of raw materials. The managing director of Bokaro (in Bihar) complained that stocks of all raw materials were running at an "alarmingly low level." Bokaro has captive mines at Kiriburu (iron ore fines) and Bhawanathpur and Kuteshwar (limestone). But it is not possible to move the fines and limestone due to railway bottlenecks.

The stocks of iron ore fines at Bokaro are 64,000 tonnes, against the normal requirement of 150,000 tonnes. When only three furnaces are in operation, the plant requires 8,000 tonnes of fines per day. Limestone stocks at Bokaro are even lower, a mere 3,900 tonnes (or just two days' consumption) as against the normal requirement of 40,000 tonnes.

Like railway transportation, power supply, which showed an improvement in recent months, also remains inadequate. Bhilai in Madhya Pradesh is the worst affected. The Madhya Pradesh electricity board imposed frequent and heavy restrictions during the year. In spite of the captive power generation being maximised by running all the three generators most of the time, the plant suffered a heavy loss of production. The output of captive iron ore and limestone mines also suffered due to frequent power trippings.

The Damodar Valley Corporation, on which Durgapur and IISCO at Burnpur (both in West Bengal) and Bokaro are dependent for their power, has performed better in the past few months, but supply still remains erratic.

Bokaro's total power requirement is 190 mva of which the DVC is expected to supply 100 to 120 mva, but last year it supplied only 40 to 60 mva. Bokaro's own power generation has a firm capacity of 67.5 mw (its installed capacity is 120 mw). The plant proposes to add three more sets of 60 mw each. But the developments in Poland, which is to supply the equipment, may delay shipments.

Power is a problem at the Salem plant (in Tamil Nadu), too. This is the newest plant to be set up in the country and it produces cold-rolled stainless steel sheets and strips. Its requirement of power is 13 mw. But its captive diesel set can generate only 6 mw.

All these factors as well as the quality of management, internal deficiencies and governmental policies affecting the public sector are responsible for the declining trend in SAIL production since 1976-77 (the best year for the industry). In that year, SAIL plants produced 5.432 million tonnes of saleable steel. The output declined steadily to 4.593 million tonnes in 1979-80. In 1980-81 it improved marginally to 4.746 million tonnes. If all goes well, it is expected to total 5.218 million tonnes this year.

Still, in view of the additions to installed capacity since 1976-77, this small increase in output can hardly be a matter of pride for SAIL. Indeed, capacity utilisation declined from 90 per cent in 1977-78 to 69 per cent in 1979-80.

As against the public sector steel plants, TISCO run by the Tatas at Jamshedpur (the oldest steel plant in the country), has notched up an almost 100 per cent capacity utilisation year after year.

This alone should call for some introspection on the part of SAIL and the steel ministry.

[6 Oct 81 pp 1, 5]

[Text] Short-Sighted Planning

A close and critical look at the public sector steel plants is apt to [illegible] diametrically opposite emotions--pride and disappointment.

There is pride in the fact that "we can do it" as well as any other n[illegible] world. Salem is an example of the most sophisticated technology in th[illegible] industry. Rourkela adopted the well-known LD process almost a quarter [illegible] tury ago. True, we have not followed Sweden's experiment in inred, elre[illegible] plasmared which are of potentially great relevance to the industry and the[illegible] scope for accepting the other latest trends in technology. But to say that [illegible] plants are outmoded would not be correct.

The spectacle of large volumes of red hot metal being poured mechanically from coke ovens into giant containers and then thrashed and beaten into ingots, bill[illegible] or snake-like strips and thin sheets--all under the supervision of indigenous [illegible] skills--is very impressive.

Instances of bungling and slovenliness are not wanting. But there is also much evidence of efficient and dynamic management and a degree of dedication on the part of engineers and ordinary workers.

By way of contrast, cold statistics bring a tinge of disappointment. A nation of 650 million people--the second largest in the world--is able to produce a mere six million tonnes of steel after three decades of independence and six five-year plans.

Even if we leave aside the United States, the Soviet Union and even Japan--each of which produces more than 100 million tonnes of steel a year--some of the smaller developing countries have done better than us. Unlike Japan which has to import most of the raw materials, India has coal and iron ore in abundance.

Insufficiency of financial resources has acted as a constraint, but it is not insurmountable. What has bedevilled the steel industry is the absence of imaginative long-term planning. The government's Rip Van Winkle-like attitude of fitful awakening after long periods of slumber has been responsible for the dismally low capacity in steel.

At the time of independence, our steel capacity was 1.5 million tonnes (one million tonnes for TISCO in Jamshedpur and 0.5 million tonnes for IISCO in Burnpur). Both were in the private sector. (IISCO was taken over by the government in 1972.) This capacity remained static until eight years after independence.

In the 1950s a decision was taken to set up three plants of one million tonnes capacity each in Rourkela, Bhilai and Durgapur with West German, Soviet and British collaboration, respectively.

Rourkela was the first to go into production in 1959 following a day later by Bhilai. Durgapur was commissioned later that year. The 1960s were characterised by expansion of capacities at these three plants. No new steel plant was commissioned until a decade later. This was in Bokaro, again with Soviet help, though it is claimed to be the first swadeshi plant because 80 per cent of its equipment is indigenous.

In 1970, it was decided to establish three more steel plants--in Salem, in Tamil Nadu, Visakhapatnam, in Andhra Pradesh, and Vijayanagar in Karnataka. However, 11 years were to elapse before the commissioning of the Salem unit and this too in a highly truncated form.

Final approval of the Visakhapatnam plant (with a capacity of 3.4 million tonnes a year) was made public only recently, while the fate of Vijayanagar still hangs in the balance. In the meantime, it has been decided to set up a shore-based plant at Paradip in Orissa.

As a result of the slow growth in capacity and the various infrastructural constraints mentioned in the previous article, steel production remained static at around 2.5 million tonnes until 1972-73. It picked up in the next three years but has not exceeded six million tonnes, of which five million tonnes is in the public sector.

Even though steel-making is heavily dependent on power, only half-hearted measures were taken to improve the capacity of public utility companies like the Damodar Valley Corporation and the state electricity boards. Nor did any one plan to make the steel plants self-sufficient in power by creating captive capacity. Captive power units have since been sanctioned for the plants, but only grudgingly and in a manner that they cannot meet the growing requirements.

Shortage of power, coal and railway wagons have all adversely affected steel production. Governmental policies in respect of steel pricing, product mix or imports have had an unhealthy effect on it, too.

The plight of the Salem steel plant provides a most graphic instance of bungling in planning. (It is a misnomer to call it a steel plant, for it makes no steel. It is only a rerolling mill.)

Salem depends wholly on imported hot-rolled bands which it rerolls into sheets and strips. Its requirement of 42,000 tonnes of imported bands is expected to cost Rs. 50 crores a year in foreign exchange. There is a proposal to produce the bands in Durgapur and hot-roll them in Bokaro for supply to Salem. But it may take years before it is put into practice. Till then bands will have to be imported to feed the Salem plant.

The decision to allow liberal imports of the kind of stainless steel sheets being made in Salem has also hit the plant. With a widespread recession in the world steel industry, the imported sheets are much cheaper (Rs. 5,600 per tonne) than the indigenous sheets made in Salem (Rs. 8,300 per tonne).

The production cost is high partly because Salem has to pay a customs duty of 325 per cent on the imported bands against 40 per cent charged on other raw materials.

Owing to faulty planning, Salem has got not an integrated steel plant but only a rerolling mill with only one sendzimir unit with a capacity of 32,000 tonnes when in full operation (30 per cent in the first year). The other facilities in Salem such as pickling and annealing can handle 70,000 tonnes. A second sendzimir unit can help double the production. The SAIL board is believed to have approved the installation of this second unit and the proposal is pending before the government.

Looking at the economics of Salem, it sounds ridiculous that the plant should start with a huge loss of Rs. 85 crores in the first year itself on an investment of Rs. 167 crores.

The Bokaro plant--the most modern of the steel plants in the country--is also expected to close the current financial year with a loss of Rs. 8 crores in spite of scoring new records in production in the first six months.

Thanks to pricing policy, the plant will make a loss on hot-rolled products though it will make a marginal profit on cold-rolled items. Since the demand for cold-rolled products has slumped, the plant has been forced to cut down its production by more than half--from 33,000 tonnes to 15,000 tonnes.

Durgapur is the steel industry's perpetually sick baby. So only Rourkela and Bhilai are expected to end the year with profits.

The steel sector demands considerable investments for expansion and modernisation. Hence steel executives are unanimous in their plea for a review of the formula governing prices. The piecemeal increases announced in recent months--the latest being in February--have not been found satisfactory.

The irony of the situation is that it is not the consumer but the middleman who benefits from the steel prices deliberately kept low. The steel-consuming industries get away with considerable profit because they are able to buy steel at low rates.

There is similarly need for a more realistic price for materials produced by the steel plants exclusively for government departments like the railways. Durgapur makes railway track materials like wheels and axles, fish-plates and sleepers, while Bhilai manufactures rails.

But neither gets a fair price. The managing director in Bhilai said: "We do not get even the primary cost of steel-making." This situation has gone on for almost two decades, with the government paying no heed to repeated pleas from the steel plants to revise the prices.

(To be concluded)

CORRESPONDENT REPORTS TROUBLES OF SALEM STEEL

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 5 Oct 81 pp 1, 7

[First of a series on Indian Steel Authority plants]

> [Text] Our special correspondent recently visited the plants of the Steel Authority of India at Bokaro, Bhilai, Rourkela and Salem. He reports on the status of the expansion plans being executed in the face of delayed supplies, of production plans gone awry for want of electricity and coal and of SAIL's gearing up its corporate sinews for the 10 million tonne target.

Salem--The Steel Authority of India's infant prodigy, the Salem Steel Plant is really not a steel plant at all. It is a re-rolling mill processing extremely expensive imported special steel, rolls, largely for use in the utensil making industry.

And by current indications, unless the government comes to its immediate rescue by making the imported hot rolled coils cheaper by reducing the duty, it threatens to become a long-term losing proposition.

The plant commissioned on 13 September this year, uses hot rolled coils imported at a customs duty of 325 per cent. With a current installed rolling capacity of 32,000 tonnes, the plant is entirely dependent on imports till such time that the government agrees to make alternate arrangements through the expansion projects at the other integrated steel plants of SAIL.

Price Pincer

In fact, according to executive director A. A. Raju, Salem has been caught in a price pincer, further aggravated by the ease with which ultimate consumers manage to import cold rolled special steels at a much cheaper price.

The market price of cold rolled stainless steel sheets for instance is Rs 56,000 a tonne. After paying import duties Salem can produce the same sheets at only at Rs 83,000 a tonne or nearly 50 per cent higher than the market price.

The plant began with an in-built loss of Rs 86 crores annually. Recently the Salem plant sold one of its first consignments of finished steel at a loss to the Tamilnadu Government's Southern Structurals Limited, which itself was a "sick" private sector firm before the State Government took it over.

Faced with this problem, the plant is pressing on the government to give it financial relief first by reducing the import duty from the present crippling level to something more reasonable, and secondly by importing steel slabs instead of hot rolled coils. The slabs with a 40 per cent duty only said Mr Raju, could be rolled at its sister plant at Bokaro within SAIL which will do the preliminary processing. Ultimately, Durgapur, it is hoped, will supply the special steels.

According to Mr Raju Salem's appeal is getting a favourable response from the highest quarters and a decision is likely soon. At present, the products are governed by the pricing schedule of the Joint Plant Committee which has so far not taken the production cost of Rs 83,000 per tonne into account as against the market price of Rs 56,000. SAIL has also pleaded for an outright ban, or at least drastic restrictions on the import of cold rolled stainless steel.

Pricing may be the more urgent need, but the problems of Salem are a decade old at least. Through the decade, what was conceived to be another modern integrated steel plant, making its own iron from nearby ores, converting it into steel ingots slabs and coils and then milling them to the fine quality required for the transport industry, utensils and chemical plants, has found itself truncated into a more rolling mill.

There seems no hopes in the next two decades of it ever becoming the integrated plant it was supposed to be.

Mr Mohan Kumaramangalam, the then Union Minister for Steel and Mines, who came from a nearby village, had planned for a plant that could utilise the iron ores in the picturesque foothills of the Kanjamalai range on Tamilnadu-Karnataka border with the Cauvery roaring by. In fact there are two huge hills made up of about 32 per cent iron in the sprawling 15.45 sq miles complex of the plant and its township which is speedily coming up on a very modern pattern.

The iron in the mountains was not economical to extract because far more enriched and cheaper ores were available in the country in abundant supply.

After a number of studies in the 60s, the site was chosen for one of the three new plants to be initiated in the fifth Plan together with Visakhapatnam and Vijayanagar in Karnataka. The work at the plant site was inaugurated by the Prime Minister on 17 September 1979. Construction was inaugurated by Mr Kumaramangalam two years later. According to the original schedule, the first phase--of setting up a cold rolling mill of 35,000 tonnes capacity--was expected to be completed in the fifth Plan itself, but there was no cash to carry on the plans.

Salem was almost forgotten for the next five years. There was no activity at all till March 13, 1977 on the eve of the general elections when the government gave its final clearance to SAIL to go ahead with the first phase and complete it within 54 months. The capacity was to be 32,000 tonnes using imported special steel in the hot rolled coils form.

A computer was pressed into service to ensure the completion of various projects on time. The cold rolling of special steels is a high technology field, for which the technical knowhow was received from the French concern Peugot Loire. Other equipment came from France, GDR, West Germany, Austria and Japan.

The heart of the Rs 167 crore first phase is a massive Sendzimir Mill which rolls the thick coils into various grades of very finely polished thin rolls or sheets in all specified gauges.

But before a steel coil can be rolled, it has to be cleaned (the process called pickling) and softened (annealing). The modern annealing and pickling units are said to be the best available in the world. Apart from the Sendizimir mill, which has a capacity of 32,000 tonnes a year, the annealing, pickling, shearing and slitting units are capable of handling 70,000 tonnes, sufficient for a further expansion. The SAIL board has already sanctioned a second Sendizimir mill and the proposal is now awaiting government sanction.

The plant has also the country's latest bulk handling structure for liquid petroleum gas used in the annealing furnaces. Three huge steel spheres of 500 tonnes capacity each are ready for use. The installation can unload 60 equivalent to about 30,000 cylinders of the type used in domestic cooking ranges. According to Mr Raju, the plant's profitability will increase once its production reaches 70,000 tonnes with the installation of the second Sendizimir mill.

As the facilities for smelting and continuous casting were being installed in the Durgapur modernisation scheme, the Salem mills could roll the entire product of the Durgapur unit, Mr Raju said.

Meanwhile, Salem is hopeful of catalysing a range of small-scale industries in the State to make use of its product. It has launched a massive campaign to educate the entrepreneurs of the region into the range of its special steels, and promises technical guidance to those who want to make use of it.

PLANS FOR SELF-SUFFICIENCY IN STEEL TOLD

Bombay THE TIMES OF INDIA in English 26 Sep 81 p 1

[Text]

NEW DELHI, September 25.

THE Union government's recent approval for setting up an integrated steel mill at Paradip with a capacity of three million tonnes per annum will enable the country to attain self-sufficiency in steel during the seventh plan period.

From a net exporter of steel during 1976-77 and 1977-78, India had become a net importer despite the slowing down in the rate of industrial growth. According to official sources here, the country will have to depend on imports of steel for meeting the domestic demand during the sixth plan period. This is in spite of vast improvement in the rate of capacity utilisation of the steel industry.

It is stated that there will be need for marginal import of steel even during the concluding year (1984-85) of the sixth plan, as there will be imbalances between various categories of steel. While there may be a surplus of flat products by 1984-85, the planners anticipate shortage of shaped products.

With the industrial growth rate showing positive signs of improvement, the demand for steel is also expected to go up. During the sixth plan period, the demand for steel is slated to grow at the rate of 8.8 per cent.

An all-out attempt is, therefore, being made to maximise steel production both from the integrated plants as well as the mini-steel mills. The steel ministry is keeping a close watch over the progress of the various expansion schemes. The idea is that there should be no slippages in the construction schedule.

Sources here point out that steps have also been initiated to start work at the Visakhapatnam steel plant, which had approved earlier by the Union cabinet. The first phase of the Vizag steel plant, which will have a capacity of 1.15 million tonnes, is expected to be completed during the final year of the sixth plan and it will go on stream in 1985-86. The second phase of the shore-based project with a total capacity of 2.25 million tonnes is expected to be completed in 1987-88 and it will start production during 1987-88.

The demand for steel is projected to go up to 12.9 million tonnes by 1984-85 and 18.4 million tonnes by the turn of this decade, starting from a consumption level of eight million tonnes in 1979-80.

The production of steel, including the output of mini-steel plants, has been planned to be increased from 7.4 million tonnes in 1979-80 to 11.5 million tonnes in 1984-85, and 17.4 million tonnes in 1989-90, provided the infrastructural constraints are adequately eradicated.

The short-term and long-term strategy on the iron and steel sector encompasses the removal of infrastructural constraints, including the import of coking coal, provision of captive power plants at Bokaro, Durgapur and Rourkela, and the speedy implementation of modernisation and expansion schemes.

The Bhilai steel plant's capacity is beinng expanded by four million tonnes, while the Bokaro expansion envisages an increase in the capacity to the tune of 8.75 million tonnes.

Bhubaneswar (PTI): Amidst thunderous applause, the chief minister of Orissa, Mr. J. B. Patnaik, announced in the state assembly on Friday the Centre's decision to locate the country's second shore-based steel-plant at Paradip.

Describing it as "historic" for Orissa, the chief minister said the plant, with an initial annual capacity of 1.5 million tonnes, would cost an estimated Rs. 3,000 crores. The capacity would go up to three million tonnes, he added.

WEST BENGAL ELECTIONS--Calcutta, Sept. 25--The ruling Left Front committee in West Bengal favours the holding of elections to the State Assembly in March and has decided to recommend to the State Government that it take steps to advance the poll by three months from its due date in June next year. Mr. Promode Daagupta, Chairman of the nine-party committee, told newsmen shortly after a meeting yesterday that June was not suitable for election campaign as it was too hot then and wet too. "If our recommendation is accepted the State Government, then, will have to request the Governor for dissolution of the State Assembly," he said. The CPI (M)-led Left Front Government will complete its full five-year term in June.--PTI. [Text] [Madras THE HINDU in English 26 Sep 81 p 7]

HALDIA REFINERY EXPANSION--The Haldia Refinery has taken up a project to expand the capacity of the propane deasphalting unit of the lube oil block to produce 15,000 tons of cylinder oil, in addition to 45,000 tons of "bright stock" annually, Mr N. L. Majumdar, general manager of the refinery, told reporters at Haldia on Friday. The cylinder oil to be produced at Haldia will be a special type of lubricant, which is at present imported mostly for the use of the railways. Mr Majumdar said the project was estimated to cost Rs 3 crores and expected to be completed by March 1983. Despite a shortfall in the availability of crude, the refinery gave priority to the production of high speed diesel, cooking gas and bitumen. As a result of the crude crisis the refinery, which produced mainly lube, had to handle about 12 types of crude. Its processing rate had gone up to 2.492 million tons in 1979-80 from 2.213 million tons the previous year. Mr Majumdar said foreign collaboration might be required for various new processing schemes now being examined. [Text] [Calcutta THE SUNDAY STATESMAN in English 27 Sep 81 p 12]

UTTAR PRADESH GOLD--Lucknow--Large deposits of commercially viable gold ore have been found in the hilly areas of Pauri Garhwal and Nainital districts of Uttar Pradesh, an official release said today. In the Upper Shiyalik hill reaches in the Kalachur region of Pauri Garhwal, a 60 km long and two to five km wide seam of gold deposit has been found. This seam of "placer" gold which in the west begins near Kalagarh between the Rai Ganga river, ends in the east near the Kosi river in Ramnagar. The belt stretches through the Corbett National Park, Pauri Garhwal and Nainital. In an earlier survey in May and June last, a nine km long and two to four kms wide seam of gold had been found in the Upper Shivalik reaches between Khara and Cheela in Pauri Garhwal district. Tests have revealed the ore has a recovery of 0.4 per ton of ore. [Text] [Madras THE HINDU in English 27 Sep 81 p 4]

FORMER AASU LEADER--Gauhati, Sept. 26 (UNI)--Former All Assam Students Union general secretary Prasanna Lal Choudhury who had been suffering from cancer for the last three years died in the Medical College Hospital here today. He was 35. AASU president Prafulla Kumar Mahanta and its general secretary Bhrigu Kumar Phukan along with other student and All Assam Gana Sangram leaders paid their last tribute to the departed leader by placing wreaths on the body. The body was later cremated at Navaraha cremation ground in the presence of a large number of people. [Text] [New Delhi PATRIOT in English 27 Sep 81 p 4]

CPI WIN--Vijayawada, September 28 (UNI)--The CPI, a constituent of the ruling united front, won a seat in the municipal corporation from the eighth division, trouncing the Congress (I) in the election field yesterday, the result of which was announced today. Election had been earlier countermanded because of the death of a candidate. The CPI candidate, Mr. M. Nasaraiah, polled 3,281 while his nearest Congress (I) rival secured 699. ORDER FROM USSR--A repeat order for 35 sets of hot water generating systems consisting of package boiler, water treatment plant, expansion tank, etc. was signed in Bombay, by IAEC Bombay and Machinoimport, USSR recently, says a press release of the Company. The order follows a visit of Soviet technical and commercial teams to IAEC's factory at Bhandup, Bombay, where the "hot test" of a complete hot water generating system was conducted in the presence of Soviet experts on 24 and 25 August, 1981. The efficiency achieved by the IAEC hot water generating system was 92 per cent which is more than the guaranteed efficiency of 88 per cent. This is an extremely creditable achievement and gives further proof of the capabilities of Indian engineering and expertise. [Text] [New Delhi PATRIOT in English 29 Sep 81 p 5]

GARHWAL REPOLL DATE--New Delhi, Sept. 29--The Election Commission today formally notified that the repoll in Garhwal Parliamentary Constituency would be held on November 22, reports PTI. The candidates will be the same as in the June 14 by-election, which was countermanded by the Election Commission on June 20 because of irregularities, including induction of policemen from outside Uttar Pradesh without the knowledge of the commission. There will be no fresh poll as far as postal ballots are concerned. Those received the last time would be counted along with the ballots of the repoll. The contest had assumed national significance in view of the personalities involved. Mr H. N. Banuguna, who had won the seat in the last general election on a Congress ticket and resigned after leaving the party, was seeking to assert his personal influence in the constituency. The Congress (I) was equally determined to defeat him and had put up Mr Chandra Mohan Singh Negi, a U.P. Minister. There are four other candidates. UNDP GRANTS REPORTED--New Delhi, Sept. 30--While world organizations such as the IMF have been constrained to assist India, the United Nations Development Programme has proved to be more liberal with its funds. It has raised its assistance to the University Grants Commission's nine selected university science departments from $1 million to $2.8 million, in the second phase of its programme covering October 1979 to December 1982. The UNDP's financial assistance is mainly for improving the research and development capacities of these departments in Indian universities. During the first phase of the programme, covering 1977 and 1978, the UNDP gave an assistance of about $1 million and on evaluation of the results, during the second phase covering October 1979 to December 1982, the UNDP's assistance has been stepped up to $2.8 million. The UNDP support covers equipment services of foreign consultants and training facilities abroad besides other material inputs. The purpose of the special assistance programme is to enable departments concerned to modernize and consolidate their training and research programmes on an inter-disciplinary basis and to engage themselves in problem-oriented and time-bound research programmes with distinct R and D value. The special assistance programme was started by the commission about 10 years ago. The commission, with the help of its expert committees, has so far identified 32 such departments. The commission has given them substantial support to add to their facilities, sophisticated equipment and academic and research staff. The UGC's assistance for the programme relating to the 32 science departments is about Rs 15 lakhs for each department over a 5-year period. [Text] [Calcutta THE STATESMAN in English 1 Oct 81 p 13]

WEST BENGAL CONGRESS-S--The West Bengal Congress (S) thinks that the CPI(M) is straying from the path of unity of Left and democratic forces and is indulging in parochialism under the leadership of Mr Promode Dasgupta. The State Congress (S) executive in its resolution has called upon other constituents of the Left Front to rise against the big brotherly attitude of the CPI(M). The CPI(M), it says, has been consistently parochial because it has all along opposed the progressive steps taken by the Congress. The resolution has also criticized the Left Front for deterioration of law and order in the districts. Because of the failure of the Left movement and acute unemployment, a deep frustration had set in among the youth. The Central Government had also completely failed to check the prices of essential commodities. [Text] [Calcutta THE STATESMAN in English 2 Oct 81 p 3]

POWER STATION PLANS--New Delhi, Oct. 3--The State-owned National Thermal Power Corporation will set up seven big power stations, including one in the capital, with a total capacity of 15,000 MW by 1995. The project sites are Talcher (Orissa), Kahalgaon (Bihar), Waidhan and Pench (Madhya Pradesh), Bhadrachalam (Andhra Pradesh), and Uttar Pradesh, the NTPC Chairman and Managing Director, Mr A. K. Sah told reporters here today. When commissioned, these would account for more than 30 per cent of the thermal power capacity additions till 1990, he said. The first stage of 1260 MW-Waidhan project--nearing completion--has received Soviet assistance. Mr Sah said feasibility reports on four projects had already been submitted to the Government for investment approval. Mr Sah said that the World Bank which has already contributed $1,500 million for the thermal power and projects, was expected to give $350 million for expansion work at the 1,500 MW-Ramagundam project. WARSHIPS IN TANZANIA--Dar-es-Salaam, Oct. 5--The command ship, INS Brahmaputra, fired a 21-gun salute as it sailed in to Dar-es-Saleem harbour along with INS Beas early this morning. The salute was reciprocated by Tanzanian shore batteries. The two warships are on a five-week goodwill mission to east African ports. The ships were received by the acting Indian High Commissioner, Mr U. N. Abhyankar, and Brigadier R. L. Makunda, Chief of the Tanzanian Naval Staff at the jetty. A large crowd lined the shores as the ships steamed into the harbour. The commanding officers of the two ships, Captain A. K. S. Chitre of INS Brahmaputra and Commander S. Pillai of INS Beas called on the Tanzanian Minister for Defence and National Service, Lieutenant-General Abdallah Twalipo, and the acting Chief of the Defence Forces of Tanzania, Lieutenant-General Musuguri. The Defence Minister expressed his country's gratitude at the various assistance, technical and other, offered by India to Tanzania. The Defence Forces Chief was grateful to India for training its armed forces. The captain of the command ship presented a crest to the Chief of the Defence Forces. The commanding officers of the two ships later called on the acting Indian High Commissioner. The ships arrived in Tanzania from Mombasa. [Text] [Calcutta THE STATESMAN in English 6 Oct 81 p 16]

ALL-INDIA CONGRESS COMMITTEE MEETS IN BOMBAY

Sharad Pawar Elected

Madras THE HINDU in English 21 Oct 81 p 1

[Text] Mr. Sharad Pawar was unanimously elected President of the Congress (S), here today.

Pawar's Presidential Speech

Madras THE HINDU in English 21 Oct 81 p 6

[Text] BOMBAY, Oct 20.

The Congress (S) President, Mr. Sharad Pawar today said it was time the party seriously considered the practicability of bringing together like-minded parties and forces for joint action "to check the country's drift towards lawless authoritarianism."

Mr. Pawar said in his presidential address to the All India Congress Committee that the high hopes with which the people elected the Congress (I) last year were turning sour and a deep ground-swell of discontent was feel building up. But though the Congress (I) was losing the confidence of the people, the Opposition had yet not been able to regain it.

The people were yearning for effective Opposition, but they were not certain if the Opposition, as it was today could provide it. As they saw it, the Opposition today was divided, uncertain and fractious, each of the constituent parties having its influence confined to certain pockets.

Mr. Pawar said that the past few months had been a trying period for the party. Some of the respected elders and younger colleagues had left it — some for the greener pastures of the Congress (I), while others for the sake of their own personal ambitions.

More homogeneous

With the departure of these friends, the party had become more homogeneous and there was a greater sense of unity and purpose, he said.

Mr. Sharad Pawar said the traditional thought and policies should be reassessed dispassionately and those that had only served to strengthen enormously the power of the State, thereby creating tremendous scope for corruption and reducing the citizen to a state of helpless dependence on the Government should be discarded.

He said while retaining the basic democratic socialist moorings, the party had much to imbibe from the Gandhian legacy.

Mr. Pawar said political corruption had not only become routine and all-perveerve, but had also been refined and perfected into an art of political profiteering, ostensibly in the name of the poor.

"Fertile ground for amassing money"

In an economy of shortages, administrative controls provided a fertile ground for amassing money. Most of the Congress (I) leaders today appeared to be preoccupied with raising funds in a variety of ways and forms. They had naturally developed a vested interest in creating and perpetuating shortages which enabled them to extract money by allocating quotas or effecting imports of scarce commodities.

Numerous scandals were coming to light involving important leaders, including Chief Ministers. What was, however, disturbing was the tendency to treat these scandals as matters affecting the party's interests and to defend the guilty without any sense of shame or to invent convenient excuses to belittle the guilt.

The President of the AICC (S) said that the Prime Minister recently asserted that corruption was a global phenomenon. This all pervasive corruption and its brazen defence were, in a way the inevitable product of the culture which the Congress (I) had tried to foster all these years, he remarked.

Soaring prices

Referring to the economic situation Mr. Pawar said that the economy had been plagued by soaring prices, growing shortages of essential commodities, a yawning gap in the country's external trade and the unchecked growth of the parallel economy.

The Government's economic policy was only helping to widen further the gap between the rich and the poor, and the distinct anti-farmer bias in its pricing policy was tending to aggravate the disparity between the rural and urban sectors.

PTI & UNI report:

"The earlier goal of economic self-reliance had been abandoned and there is now a growing dependence on imports and foreign loans," he said.

Backs KPCC (S) decision

Mr Pawar expressed the party high command's whole-hearted backing to the Kerala Pradesh Congress (S) Committee's decision to pull out of the marxist-dominated Left Democratic Front.

Deviating from he prepared speech Mr. Pawar explained that the KPCC (S) had been forced to take the step because it could not ignore the detenorating law and order situation in the State, the politicising of the police force and its "blatant use" for party purposes.

In spite of the party's warnings and efforts the CPI (M) had not changed its behaviour, he said and called on the marxists to mend their attitude to "maintain and strengthen" efforts towards unifying the opposition forces against the Conress (I)

Mr Pawar said a joint front of opposition parties could articulate specific issues which were uppermost in the people's mind and launch peaceful joint struggles for securing redress.

The formation of such a broad national front wedded to democratic, egalitarian and secular values and committed to the strengthening of national integration and communal harmony was the need of the hour.

"Attack on press and judiciary"

Mr. Pawar, deprecated the attempt by the Congress (I) Government to bring to a standstill the country's democratic pattern by undermining its system of checks and balances".

"A concerted attack is being mounted on vital institutions like the judiciary and the Press, which are the nerve centres of a parliamentary democracy", he said.

Parliament had been reduced to a ratifying body by frequent resort to ordinance raj, the police and intelligence agencies had been demoralised, and the workers' right to protest had been severely curbed by adopting the Essential Services Maintenance Act.

Mr Pawar said, "The populist and manipulative politics which dominated our national life over the last decade have brought about a virtual disintegration of the structure of all democratic parties, creating a great organisational void in our body politic".

PAPER REPORTS NORTHEAST INSURGENT ACTIVITIES

Islamabad THE MUSLIM in English 17 Oct 81 p 5

[Text] INDIA's north-eastern states are facing a bushfire rebellion which may turn out to be a real nightmare for Prime Minister Indira Gandhi.

Latest reports indicate that the People's Liberation Army (PLA) in Manipur, the Naga underground in the jungle state of Nagaland and the Mizo rebels in the neighbouring state of Mizoram are plotting to build a "Pan-Mangoloid nation".

According to reports, this will comprise Nagaland, Arunachal Pradesh, parts of Assam, Manipur and Western Burma where the Naga rebels have found refuge.

Recently, the Indian Army announced the capture of 43-year-old N. Biseswar Sing, leader of the underground Manipur PLA. He was caught by the Army's "seek and destroy" patrols at Tekcham village in Manipur.

Biseswar Singh, according to the military, left his wife and three children to lead the fight against the central Government and carve out a free state.

Manipur was a tiny kingdom until 1949 when it was formally incorporated as a district in the Indian Union.

Military analysts explain that one of the reasons behind the rebellion in Manipur is the rising unemployment among educated youth. According to latest count, out of a population of 1.2 million, there are over 150,000 educated unemployed in the state.

Several youth organisations sprung up from among these educated unemployed and in the early sixties. Biseswar Singh set up what he called the "Revolutionary Government of Manipur".

In 1975, the elected government of Dorender Singh announced pardon for all the rebels. The youth were given land, money grants to start orchards near the Indo-Burmese border.

But Biseswar Singh was not satisfied with the government concession. He went with a team of guerillas to Lhasa in Tibet where they were trained by the Chinese.

In 1978, he reorganised the PLA from his hideout in Burma.

But a more disturbing aspect is that Biseswar Singh joined hands with a new leader of the Naga rebels, Tang Khul Muivah. Together, they launched their headquarters in North Burma.

With Biseswar Singh's capture Indian military authorities believe it is possible to seal the escape route of the rebels in the Burmese jungles.

But this hinges on the co-operation which they will have to get from the Burmese Government. In this light, Indian officials are worried by the impending abdication of Burma's strongman, Gen. Ne Win.

Officials here believe that the Indian Army's actions against the insurgents, backed by the Burmese troops, will be considerably weakened if Ne Win's successor is not strong enough to crush internal rebellion.

As one observer said: "The fortunes of insurgents in the entire north-eastern region are completely linked with the political state of affairs in Burma. Things are bad enough. Even with a strong ruler like Ne Win, who commands the loyalty of the soldiers, the Burmese Government has not been able to keep more than a token control over the North Burma jungles bordering India. The prospects of this guerailla-infested land expanding under a weak government are indeed frightening".

Adding to these fears is the fact that about 2,000 Naga rebels have established themselves in Burma. Reliable reports indicate that the Nagas have effective liaison with a militant body called the North-East Regional Students Union. Their aim is to set up a Marxist Pan-Mangoloid nation. They reportedly operate in small groups and plan the rebellion in such a way as not to disturb the authorities.

According to some experts, what has helped the Naga underground movement, the PLA and the rebel Mizos is the law which gives tribesmen in North-East India free movement up to 40 kilometres on either side of the international border.

T.N. Kaul, a confidant of Mrs. Gandhi, says: "The problem in Assam and other areas of the north-east is one of creating confidence in the hearts and minds of the people, their economic and social interest be protected in harmony with the larger national interest and integrity of the whole country".

The basic question is how to make the Nagas, the Mizos and the Manipuris, who are better educated than those in the neighbouring India states feel that they belong to the mainstream of Indian culture. Right now, this is a distant prospect.

CSIS ANNIVERSARY MARKED BY COMMEMORATIVE PROGRAM

Jakarta KOMPAS in Indonesian 13 Sep 81 pp 7, 12

[Article: "Commemoration of 10th Anniversary of CSIS [Center for Strategic and International Studies"]

[Text] Jakarta, KOMPAS--The organization for the study of doctrine strategic and international questions, better known under the name of CSIS (Center for Strategic and International Studies), on 11 September commemorated its 10th anniversary.

The simple commemorative program was attended by Minister of Information Ali Moertopo, Deputy Minister for Youth Affairs Abdul Gafur, and many other guests.

On this occasion the CSI directors turned over a souvenir book as a gesture of thanks to two of the golden figures of CSIS, Lt Gen (Retired) Ali Moertopo, and Lt Gen (Retired) Soedjono Hoemardani, now a development inspector. The two leaders are honorary chairmen of CSIS.

Apart from that those attending the ceremony were given selections from five studies currently being worked on by CSIS: "Hubungan Bapa-buah dan Anak-buah dalam Masyarakat Indonesia" [Relationships Between Superiors and Subordinates in Indonesian Society]; "Gagasan Masyarakat Asia-Pasifik" [Concepts of the Asian-Pacific Community]; "Pendidikan dan Pemerataan" [Education and Equality]; "Energi dan Pemerataan" [Energy and Equality]; "Epistemologi dan Kebudayaan" [Epistemology and Culture].

The CSIS was established on 1 September 1971, with the principal objective of carrying out studies oriented toward policy, both on international questions as a specific matter and on domestic questions closely connected to overall developments.

To achieve this objective, in addition to having a permanent group of staff analysts, CSIS also brings together a number of consultants and correspondents from academic, youth and student and journalist circles and from industrial, financial, commercial, and labor groups. In this way, on the one hand, CSIS tries to provide an opportunity for the development of interdisciplinary studies and, on the other hand, tries to bring together a variety of intellectual views in an orderly atmosphere but in a spirit of independnece.

Basically, the CSIS does not present an official view or recommendations in its own name as an institution. The reports, studies, and analyses which are published are in the name of the respective authors. The CSIS is only responsible for the level and the objectivity of the analyses which are produced.

As of 1 September 1981 CSIS had about 40 professional staff members (permanent staff analysts), supported by the same number of administrative staff members. To support its study activity, the CSIS has a library and other, academic infrastructure which can be used by the general public also.

A large proportion of the results of the study activity of the CSIS is broadly distributed in various forms of publications, including books, monographs, reports, studies, and periodical publications. In the past 10 years the CSIS has published about 40 books.

CSIS publications like ANALISA (a monthly) have entered their 10th year of publication, while THE INDONESIAN QUARTERLY has entered its ninth year of publication. In 1980 the CSIS ceased publication of RINGKASAN PERISTIWA [Summary of Events], a bi-weekly which had been published since 1971. To replace it, CSIS is publishing DOKUMENTASI [Documentation], based on clippings on a variety of particular questions. Since July, 1981, it has published NAWALA CSIS [CSIS Life] as a means of contact and communications between the CSIS and various groups outside it. Through this publication it is hoped that information can be provided on a continuing basis (it is a bi-monthly) on what has been done, is being done, and will be done by the CSIS.

The Center functions under a Council of Directors chaired by Dr Daoed Joesoef (now minister of education and culture). Its offices are at Jalan Tanah Abang III/27, Jakarta Pusat.

INCREASED INTERNATIONAL ORGANIZATION ASSISTANCE FOR TRANSMIGRATION

Jakarta KOMPAS in Indonesian 23 Sep 81 pp 8, 9

[Article: "Increase in Assistance of International Organizations for Transmigration."]

[Excerpts] Kendari, KOMPAS--There is substantial interest on the part of international organizations in the transmigration program in Indonesia. For the implementation of transmigration programs in Southeast Sulawesi alone, at present there are three international organizations which are providing support, respectively, the Asian Development Bank, the Islamic Development Bank, and the European Economic Community.

According to the secretary general of the Ministry of Manpower and Transmigration, Dr Urip Widodo, the assistance provided by the three organizations is in the form of a loan. From the Asian Development Bank the loan is for a period of 5 years (1979-1984) and involves $50,290,000. This total includes $10 million from the Islamic Development Bank and $5 million from the European Economic Community.

Regarding international organization assistance for the transmigration program in Southeast Sulawesi, according to Urip Widodo it is directed at performing rehabilitation work on 17 old transmigration projects and 70 local villages. In addition, for the movement of 4,500 heads of transmigrant families to Wawotoli (Kendari Regency), assistance will be provided to improve agricultural facilities, including provision of 5,800 work animals, irrigation, drinking water, and health services for the transmigrants and the people living around them.

The movement of transmigrants during the third five-year plan is targeted at 500,000 heads of families. According to the secretary general of the Ministry of Manpower and Transmigration, up to 12 September 1981, 133,992 heads of families had been moved. The movement of transmigrants during the third five-year plan has been much higher than during the two previous five-year plans.

During the first five-year plan the number of transmigrant families moved was more than 9,000 per year, on the average. In the second five-year plan this total went up to more than 11,000 families. However, during the third five-year plan the movement of transmigrants has increased rapidly. From January to September, 1981, 58,643 heads of family were designated, or 7,330 heads of family per month.

With the increasing implementation of the transmigration program there has come increasing reflection and more intensive action on the part of various government offices involved in multi-sector implementation of the program. Rather complex problems have been encountered which are difficult to resolve, said Urip Widodo. For example, these problems involve deciding on the location of the project. The locations for housing for the transmigration project are determined, based on several considerations. In addition to the technical factor there is also the appropriateness of the location where people will live, the factor of health, and technical considerations involving agriculture.

These questions often result in moving the housing site from the place originally selected. This also often causes delays in preparation of the housing project, which finally causes a delay in the location of the transmigrants.

QUESTION OF COMMITMENT TO MUTUAL ASSISTANCE RAISED

Jakarta KOMPAS in Indonesian 17 Sep 81 pp 6, 9

[Article: "Sarlito Wirawan: Perhaps Indonesians Are Not Really Committed to Mutual Assistance"]

[Excerpts] Jakarta, KOMPAS--In looking at present circumstances, it is possible that Indonesians are not really committed to helping each other [gotong-royong]. And the myth that this country has a mutual assistance tradition often becomes a set of shackles. It is because of that that every difference of opinion which comes up must always be resolved by means of discussion and the development of a consensus.

This was stated by Dr Sarlito Wirawan in his speech on "The Question of Basic Human Needs in Indonesia," which he made at the third National Science Congress in Jakarta.

Sarlito went on to say that for almost 10 years, that is, during the period of Guided Democracy and at the beginning of the New Order period, there were no votes taken in Parliament [DPR] and in the People's Consultative Council [MPR(S)]. At that time "voting" was considered taboo. However, later on "voting" began to be used in the DPR and in the MPR.

100 Percent

He said that this happened because total agreement could not always be achieved. And if a consensus was arrived at, it was always necessary to have a process of nonsensical "lobbying." That process was accompanied by intrigues and subtle terror.

According to Sarlito, the fact that the Indonesian people are not really disposed to assist each other collectively is based on the consideration of egotistical humanity. That is, a human being may help another person if his own interests are involved.

In this connection Sarlito also said that government leadership in Indonesia at the present time still contains many elements of traditional, paternalistic, and charismatic leadership. In this connection Sarlito noted that both Soekarno and Soeharto had become president because there was a revolution going on, although they were revolutionary leaders who had their own characteristics.

He went on to say that the question now is how long the revolutionary leadership can last during the period after the revolution. The style used by the revolutionary leaders, who usually were also charismatic leaders, does not fit in with the procedures of true democracy. The more mature a society is, the more mature its democratic procedures. Thus, the techniques of manipulation to maintain power which were often used by the charismatic leaders are no longer appropriate.

ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT IN RACE WITH POPULATION GROWTH

Jakarta KOMPAS in Indonesian 17 Sep 81 pp 1, 12

[Article: "Prof Sukadji Ranuwihardjo: Rate of Economic Development in Race with Population Growth"]

[Excerpts] Jakarta, KOMPAS--The rate of Indonesian economic development is still in a race with the high rate of population growth. That is why the results of development are still slow to see. This was stated by Prof Sukadji Ranuwihardjo in his address to the third National Science Congress (KIPNAS) in Jakarta Wednesday afternoon [16 September].

In the context of human development and economic growth, according to Sukadji the core of the question can be summarized as the effort to wipe out poverty, which still weighs heavily on the Indonesian people. In the course of two five-year plans and by the middle of the current third five-year plan, economic development has been able to bring down the number of people who are below the absolute poverty level. That is, from more than 50 percent in 1969 to about 30 percent in 1981.

According to Sukadji, what is important in the process of economic development is relative poverty, not absolute poverty. That is, the poverty level of one group of people, compared with the average living standard of society. In this sense the distribution of indome and wealth and the ability to use them have a major influence on the abolition of absolute poverty.

Comparative studies in developing countries show that there is a high correlation between the level of poverty and the average income level (GNP per capita). Based on this it is suggested that the key to the solution of the problem of poverty is a high rate of economic growth.

Sukadji thinks that a high rate of economic growth alone is not enough. It must be accompanied by equality in the division of income and assets, which gives decisive influence to the abolition of absolute poverty and also to prevent a disproportionate division of wealth from spreading increasingly between rich and poor. "The argument which opposes the rate of growth and equality, in fact is unacceptable, because these are twin aspects of economic development," Sukadji said. He added that equality without growth if accompanied by rapid population expansion meant nothing more than the equalization of poverty.

Meeting basic human needs in the form of food, clothing, and shelter, as well as health care and education, has a very close, mutually-dependent relationship with the abolition of poverty. If their basic needs are met, this does not mean that the poor in society are free from suffering.

In fact, the lack of food and nutrients, poor health, and the lack of knowledge and skills will limit the opportunity to work and the capacity to earn an income. A number of studies show that, although labor may be abundant at relatively low wages, because its productivity is very low, the use of high technology capital is more economical. In turn, such use of high technology capital will narrow the opportunities for work.

According to Sukadji, increasing the availability of food, health care, and education is very important, but this is not enough. These must be accompanied by the attributes of policy. That is, in a deliberate sense the opportunities for work must be broadened and adequate levels of income stimulated, at the same time that a policy is adopted on the equalization of income and the control of assets.

LONG-TERM FOOD FORECAST

Jakarta KOMPAS in Indonesian 11 Sep 81 pp 1, 9

[Article: "Chief of BULOG [Logistics Affairs Body] on the Year 2000: There Will Be No Famine in Indonesia"]

[Excerpts] Jakarta, KOMPAS--In the year 2000 it can be stated with certainty that Indonesia will be free of the danger of famine. The food available will be more than sufficient but not so abundant as to cause a food surplus.

This was stated by the deputy minister for cooperative affairs and the chief of BULOG, Dr Bustanil Arifin, in his speech before members of the Jakarta Lions Club Wednesday evening [9 September] at the Hotel Jayakarta Tower in Jakarta.

According to Bustanil, in the years between 1980-1990 and 1990-2000 the rate of population increase will fall, although slowly. For example, it will reach the rate of 2 percent in 1990 and, hopefully, will be at 1.8 percent in 2000. This is because the Indonesian people are increasingly aware of the effort to control population, for example by putting off the age of marriage and postponing the arrival of the first and second child.

It is believed that the elasticity of income in terms of demand for food, for example rice, will fall, because the level of consumption has already reached 130 kilograms per capita. Further, it is expected that income will continue to rise from the present level of $600 per capita annually to $900 per capita annually by 2000. "This means that increased consumption will be more influenced by population increase, compared with increased income," said Bustanil.

Bustanil continued that the food consumed by the Indonesian people 20 years in the future will remain relatively the same as at present, that is, with a heavy emphasis on rice. Meanwhile the people in the villages who eat corn or casava will continue to be numerous.

By 2000 the consumption of rice per capita will reach the level of 150 to 160 kilograms per year. After that it is estimated that consumption will only increase slowly because income, which will already be relatively high, will make it possible for the people to look for their caloric intake from other foods.

The population of Indonesia in 2000 is expected to be about 220 million. If consumption of rice per capita reaches a maximum of 165 kilograms per year, about 36.5 million tons of rice will be needed, plus about 10 percent more for carryover stocks. This means that 40 million tons will be needed, or twice the production in 1980. "It is felt that this is not a fantastic goal to be reached, because the production of rice between 1969 and 1980 increased by almost 90 percent in 11 years," Bustanil said.

H ABOENG KOESMAN SOMAWIDJAJA--In Presidential Decision Letter No 135/M/1981 President Soeharto appointed H Aboeng Koesman Somawidjaja, Mayor of Cirebon, as deputy governor of West Java. With the installation of H Aboeng Koesman West Java will have two deputy governors, the other one being Dr Soehoed Warnaen. According to the spokesman of the Ministry of Internal Affairs, Dr H Feisal Tamin, in his statement to the press yesterday [4 September], the installation of the new deputy governor will be held in Jakarta on 9 September. Asked by the press about the respective functions of the two deputy governors in the same province, Dr Feisal replied that, based on Law No 5 of 1974 on the basic functions of provincial government, a province or a regency could appoint more than one deputy governor or regent. This is based on several considerations, including efficiency and effectiveness in performing the tasks of government, the geographical situation, the local population, as well as other matters which may have a special character. He said that at present there are 10 provinces which have deputy governors, although there are not yet any deputy regents or deputy mayors in office. The provinces which already have deputy governors are Aceh, Lampung, the city of Jakarta, the three provinces of Java, Irian Jaya, East Timor, and South Kalimantan. Apart from Jakarta, which has 4 deputy governors, and West Java, which has 2 deputy governors, the other provinces only have one deputy governor. Dr Feisal Tamin also said that the position of deputy governor was not assigned on the basis of an election by the Provincial Council but rather was a matter for nomination by the governor after consulting with the Provincial Council involved. The nomination is later presented to the president through the minister of internal affairs, who has the power to forward it or return it. MAJOR GENERAL (RETIRED) TAHIR--President Soeharto has appointed Major General (Retired) Tahir inspector general for development for projects at the provincial level directly subject to presidential instructions. The decision by the present, contained in Presidential Decision Letter No 155 of 29 August 1981, is intended to fill the post of inspector general for development which has been empty for some time, following the death of Air Vice Marshal Soetopo. Before being designated as inspector general for development, Tahir was director general of the Customs and Excise Service and was an officer on the Central Inspection Team (TEPERPU) assigned to KOPKAMTIB [Command for the Restoration of Security and Order] with the task of coordinating the interrogation of PKI leaders who carried out the rebellion known as the G-30S/PKI [30 September Movement/PKI] over the period from 1965 to 1973. After that Tahir was appointed director general of the Customs and Excise Service until the end of August, 1981. While he was director general of the Customs and Excise Service, he attracted public notice when, together with the attorney general, he launched Operation 902, that is, an operation aimed at wiping out smuggling, based on a Presidential Instruction dated 9 February 1976. Due to Operation 902 businessman, importers, and officials of the Customs and Excise Service who were involved in the smuggling of goods were brought before the courts. Indeed, some of them were assigned to special detention on Nusakambangan Island. The results of Operation 902 were very decisive in raising state tax receipts, which increased considerably in the following years. For example, in fiscal year 1979/1980 customs receipts were estimated at Rp 691.9 billion, but actual receipts were Rp 789.3 billion. For fiscal year 1980/1981 customs receipts in the budget were estimated at Rp 840.5 billion, but actual receipts totaled Rp 1.082 trillion. Tahir's final task as director general of the Customs and Excise Service was the formation of a Canine Narcotics Unit in the Directorate General of Customs and Excise. In the first phase the Australian government provided 6 dogs trained in sniffing narcotics and later provided training to 20 dog handlers for 3 months in Jakarta. The United States Customs Service provided further aid in training two dog handlers in the United States, and in October, 1981, it is expected that they will return to Jakarta with two narcotics detection dogs. With his appointment as the new inspector general for development, Tahir will join three others in the same position, that is, Soedjono Humardani, Soekasah Somawidjaya, and H V Worang. REFUGEE REPATRIATION PROCEDURE IN SAVANNAKHET DESCRIBED

Vientiane SIANG PASASON in Lao 7 Aug 81 pp 3,4

[Article by Phousamphan Vattana: "The Nation Forgives"]

[Text] In the evening of 31 July 1981 there were crowds of people along Khemkhong Road in the city of Savannakhet. It was like a festival. Among them were old men and women, young men and girls, and children. They were smiling and happy but also concerned and eager to see the return home of some Lao people who had been misled by slanderous, deceptive, reactionary propaganda. They left their homes and country and fled to Thailand, which the propaganda described as progressive and pleasant. They ended up in an oppressive hell for the destitute.

When the boat landed there appeared the faces of more than 30 Lao people. They looked very forlorn. Some were very thin and some were swollen from hunger, depending on their condition. Nevertheless, they all smiled proudly because they had made it back, confessed their mistakes to their country, and been warmly welcomed by the new revolutionary administration.

Since arriving back in their native land, they have been welcomed by the party committee, the provincial administration, the Central Committee of the National Construction Front, the provincial National Construction Front and by the people and friends etc. Everyone was happy and praised them for returning and becoming good citizens again.

Afterwards officials loaded them on buses which were waiting to take them to a rest camp which was not far from Savannakhet. The party and the administration committees had set this up for them, and it had many comforts. It had a sleeping area, a dining area, and a classroom for learning the truth and the policy of the party, the government, and the new regime.

While at the camp I met a middle-aged man who was thinner than all the others. He introduced himself as Thamit, aged 35, from Don Khong. I asked him, "What were you thinking before you came back and what was their slanderous propaganda saying?" He said, "Before I came back they interrogated me many times and told me that if anyone returned the Communist Lao government would punish them: they would be sent for a long term in a seminar because they were political offenders...."

"But no matter if this propaganda were good or slanderous, true or not, I knew I had to return to end this hell in Thailand where I found myself. If I am going to die, it would be better to die in my homeland."

When they were boarding the Thai boat to come back to Laos, everyone thought the same thing: refugees would be punished or sent for a long term in seminar. No one thought they would be welcomed as they were. But when they arrived back in Laos they felt excited and proud to see officials of the new regime. There were party officials and administrative officials from Savannakhet Province and Khanthabouli District. It was arranged for large numbers of people to greet them as they arrived. This was as much like the reactionary traitors' propaganda as sky was to earth.

The Lao People's Revolutionary Party with its brilliant leadership and the revolutionary administration had a just and correct policy for the gullible misled people. The Lao Democratic People's Republic, the homeland with its beautiful streams, forests, and lakes which belongs to and is protected and loved by all the Lao people always forgives misled people if they decide to return to build the nation.

INDUSTRIAL PRODUCTION TARGETS, FIGURES NOTED

Vientiane SIANG PASASON in Lao 12 Aug 81 p 2

[Excerpt] The last 6 months was the beginning of the First Five-Year Plan and was also a period of preparation for the next 6 months of the year. All the officials and workers assigned to various jobs worked untiringly and did not think of themselves or the difficulties or the threats or slanders of those opposing the revolution and so were able to score basic achievements in economic construction. They expanded agriculture and industry considerably. For example they repaired old abandoned factories restoring them to normal operation so that these would again serve the economy. Among these were: rice mills, saw mills, the lead mine at Khammouan, plywood mills, tobacco drying sheds and the ice plant of the brewery and soft drink plant etc. Other factories which were already running were given careful guidance by the [Ministry of Industry and Trade] so that they could overcome various difficulties. This was apparent in the production of the first 6 months which equaled 58 percent of the planned production for 1980. Of this, industrial and handicraft production was valued at 83,036,222 kip. Electrical production amounted to 399,535,000 kilowatt hours worth 37,202,900 kip. Lead ore production reached 186.02 tons worth of 6,798,184 kip. Gypsum production was 25,000 tons worth 4,750,000 kip.

Of these factories, the government enterprises produced a value of 120,942,302 kip which was 91.77 percent of all production. Private factories produced a value of 11,463,612 kip or only 8.23 percent of the total. In addition, the production sector of the ministry took in revenues in the first 6 months of 49,132,893 kip. This was 90.76 percent of the plan. Some businesses and factories produced revenues at planned levels such as tobacco companies, agricultural tool companies, clothing factories and metal roofing factories.

In addition the officials assigned to the industrial and handicraft sector supported the production bases and, as contracted, bought 1,610 tons of tobacco leaves from the farmers worth 4,657,868 kip during the first 6 months. They also got 230 tons of dry leaf for the cigarette factory. The Wood and Cane Corporation bought 4,784 cubic meters of lumber worth 3,857,920 kip and 100,000 sheaves of cane.

Coincidental to reconstruction and production the workers and officials in the industrial sector strove to expand into new areas of production to increase production and ensure the economic well-being in 1981. The basic construction budget totals 20,349,508 kip and foreign aid and loans total 26,650,000 dollars.

CAUTION URGED IN ADOPTING NEW POLITICAL SYSTEM

Karachi DAWN in English 6 Nov 81 p 9

[Editorial: "A New Political System"]

[Text]

THE question of a new political system for the country has again become a focal point of public attention. The President has spoken twice on the subject recently, disclosing at his Lahore Press conference, on October 24, that the Government had under its consideration a political infrastructure based on Islamic principles. The matter is now being studied by the Islamic Ideology Council. The President also said that the draft, when finalised, would be submitted for scrutiny, revision and approval by the proposed Federal Council or Majlis-i-Shoora to be constituted some time this month. Four days later, at Peshawar, the President reverted to the subject to stress that in formulating the new framework for the country's governance, he was in contact with leading Ulema, Fuqaha (Islamic jurists), lawyers and intellectuals. The details of the draft proposals have not been disclosed but the President has stated that they are within the ambit of the Islamic tenets. What is obviously aimed at is a new political dispensation which satisfies the aspiration for an Islamic social order.

The move may have been inspired by the best of motives but its implications give rise to some questions and misgivings. It would have been different if the scheme in question had been conceived as an interim regulatory plan designed to provide a smooth exit out of the present transition via elections. But evidently this is not so. Present indications are suggestive of finality. There is wide awareness in the country of the critical compulsions inherent in the present situation, which, on the one hand, calls for accelerated but measured steps towards a resumption of the political and democratic process and, on the other, demands complete unity and solidarity in the national ranks to face the problems of security arising from the Afghan and other regional developments. Given these realities, responsible leaders of opinion, especially those claiming the political support of the people, must be wary of taking up a position on matters involving political governance. A return to representative rule is not a matter of dispute as such, although any lingering differences over the modalities and conditions of political and democratic revival could prolong the present uneasy interregnum and make things unpredictably difficult.

From what one knows of the thinking of the defunct political parties, several of them will perhaps agree to Martial Law being followed by an interlude or an intermediate phase before elections are held and power transferred to a representative government. In the course of such an interlude, the Government and leaders of political opinion may, if they deem it necessary, agree through a dialogue to certain readjustments concerning the holding of elections. There is a good chance, in the present climate of a largely shared perception of what the country might risk if the gulf of mutual mistrust between the Government and the political forces were to continue, to obtain agreement on the issues involved in holding elections. But nothing should be done before or during such an interlude to unsettle the historically settled question of the Basic Law of the land

The prospect of a breakthrough in the stalemated relations between the Government and the political parties could be seriously impaired if an attempt is made to introduce a new pattern of government in supercession of the one envisaged by the 1973 Constitution Here one might look into the question of whether an attempt to modify the political structure embodied in the Constitution can be justified on the plea of Islamisation. It is scarcely possible to assert that the Constitution contains any provisions which are against the injunctions of Islam, even though it might legitimately be claimed that it suffers from deficiencies which ought to be supplied in the interest of establishing an Islamic society. Likewise it can hardly be claimed that the political scheme of the Constitution is incompatible with a given prototype of an Islamic polity. Most Islamic scholars are agreed that no such prototype is available as a frame of reference. For all practical purposes, Muslim countries are free to devise their own political systems and institutions to suit their particular needs, conditions and aspirations — the only stipulation being that they are not in any way in conflict with any of the fundamental tenets and principles of Islam. Indeed, if any criterion is to be applied, it is the spirit in which a system is worked — rather than its form — that must define the system and determine its orientation From this point of view, there is hardly anything to fault the political and governmental scheme written into the nation's Constitution — either on ideological, political or any other ground. In any case, Islamisation in our context will have to be an evolutionary process that will unfold itself in terms of a succession of laws and constitutional amendments passed by parliament over a period of time. This might be different in Iran which has gone through an Islamic revolution. Revolutionaries understandably have no patience with an evolutionary process.

Any new political structure, unless it is expressly said to have been devised for an interlude, will have to be grafted onto the 1973 Constitution. This obviously will involve a major change — and not just another amendment of limited importance as might be mistakenly supposed. It will materially change the 1973 document as it was finally adopted and enforced. What will remain of the original basic law if it is subjected to structural change? This cannot but erode the sanctity of the Constitution and impair the allegiance and commitment it must elicit from all sections of the nation. Secondly, there is the equally basic issue of the authority and acceptance of any important constitutional change brought about by an agency other than a representative one The proposed Federal Council may be a desirable ad-hoc step to fill an interim gap. Even if it has spokesmen for opinions ranging across the entire political spectrum, it will be a nominated body and cannot claim the credentials and authority of an elected Parliament. The chances of a new political structure emerging from the Council gaining public acceptance and durability will be slim indeed

The compulsion for a well-judged approach in this regard is underlined by the need to avoid a break between the Government and the politicians and to preserve the basic structure of the 1973 Constitution, which must remain available as a solidly founded bridge of continuity — and not as a slender thread running almost obscurely across the present interregnum. It is this aspect of the matter that demands the greatest of care and circumspection if the possibility of an early return to democratic stability and consolidation is to be kept open. Any drastic change in the pattern of government, the federal character, mode of elections, franchise, law-making powers of Parliament, the party system, and so on is likely to widen the gulf between the Martial Law regime and the leaders of political opinion. In paving the way for democratic restoration we possess a fairly elaborate framework of settled political and constitutional issues. The need is for developing a national consensus on the modalities of bringing the agreed framework back into play.

DEFENSE MINISTER DISCUSSES COUNTRY'S DEFENSE PLANS

BK101157 Karachi Domestic Service in English 1005 GMT 10 Nov 81

[Text] Federal Defense Minister Mir Ali Amhmed Khan Talpur has said Pakistan wanted to live in peace with all states particularly its neighbors and was sincerely endeavoring to promote further the existing peaceful and fraternal relations but it cannot ignore its urgent defense requirements. He was speaking at the inauguration of the light aircraft manufacturing factory at the Pakistan aeronautical complex at Kamra and the handing over ceremony of the first overhauled F-6 aircraft to the Pakistan air force today.

Elaborating his point the defense minister said that Pakistan has no aggressive designs against any country but due to the geopolitical changes in the region it had become imperative to boost up the country's defenses to meet the present challenges. He said that the factory was the first step toward the establishment of the aircraft manufacturing industry in the country.

The minister paid tributes to the Chinese and Pakistani engineers on their success for overhauling the first F-6 plane and thanked China, France and Sweden for providing technical assistance and training to the personnel of the Pakistan aeronautical complex.

Earlier, Director General of Aeronautical Project Air Marshal Sheikh M. Syed in his welcome address said that the factory would prepare various parts of the multipurpose light trainer aircraft--Mashak--from raw material and then a full-fledged aircraft would be assembled in the factory.

PNSC ATTEMPTS TO STOP RESALE OF DENIED POLISH VESSELS

Karachi DAWN in English 10 Nov 81 p 5

[Article by Yehia Syed]

[Text] London, Nov 9--To deter any other buyers from getting hold of 3 ships, the Pakistan National Shipping Corporation took out an injunction from London High Court against the Polish foreign State enterprise, 'Centromor,' prohibiting the shipbuilding yard from disposing of the 3 vessels built exclusively, under contract, for PNSC, signed in Jan 1979. The High Court injunction orders Centromor to maintain 'status quo' until the ships are handed over to PNSC.

The PNSC has given notice to all shipping brokers here about the court injunction who have taken note of the action taken by PNSC.

The PNSC was forced to take this action because the Polish shipyard is demanding the price of 3 vessels which are ready for immediate delivery, in hard cash. They gave the plea that they are forced to ask the price in cash because of the prevailing economic situation in Poland, although there is no such clause in the contract. The PNSC has already paid five and a half million dollars as down payment in accordance with the terms of the contract.

In view of the desperate economic and food situation in Poland, PNSC even agreed to an increase of ten per cent in the contract price of the vessels although there was no escalation clause included in the contract.

Although it was purely a commercial contract and not a government to government loan, PNSC was forced to refer the Polish default over their international commitment to the government of Pakistan for intervention, which even failed to make the Polish authorities to hand over the 3 ships to PNSC.

Centromor's default has caused a very considerable setback to PNSC's worldwide commercial considerations, which has been planned to induct into services on regular intervals the ships being constructed in Poland and, although ready now, being held there by the Poles. In addition to the 70 crews of the two vessels, waiting in Gdansk since Oct 3 costing PNSC 20,000 dollars per day, consultants, surveyors and trial teams also have been present in Gdansk over the 12 months to supervise the construction of the vessels, which has cost PNSC a great deal of money. The first ship was originally scheduled for delivery in March, but due to setback at Gdansk shipyard the delivery of the first and second ship were to be made jointly on Oct 26. The third vessel was also to be delivered during the first week of November which is also ready now.

PAKISTAN BANK BLOCKS CREDIT TO LARGE ACCOUNTS

Islamabad THE MUSLIM in English 3 Nov 81 p 1

[Text]

KARACHI, Nov. 2: Over 44 per cent of the total bank credit is concentrated in just 601 accounts, according to official figures available here.

Statistics show that the tendency for credit to flow into big accounts at the cost of small borrowers has gained grounds over the past few years.

Bank advances by scheduled banks, excluding IDBP and ADBP, amounted to Rs.46,659 million by December, 1980, and were locked in 692,168 accounts. Out of the total credit, advances of Rs. 10 million and above accounted for a sum of Rs.20,775 million and were concentrated in 601 accounts.

As on June 1977, a little over 39 per cent of the total credit was locked in 322 accounts and amounted to Rs.10,013 million out of the total advances of Rs. 25,365 million.

On the other hand, total credit outstanding against small borrowers, for advances of less than Rs.1,000, has declined from Rs.80.7 million in June 1978 to Rs.20.6 million as on Dec 20, 1980. The number of borrowers in this category has declined from 99,417 to 53.844 during the period. Advaces of Rs. 26,3 million were outstanding in 56,653 accounts in June 1977.

The scheduled banks have failed to achieve many of the targets fixed by the State Bank for priority sectors including small loans. Official statistics reveal that whereas the target for quick profit yielding small seasonal loans for agricultural production was more than fulfilled, the gross discursement for agriculture as a whole fell short of Rs.256 million or 12 per cent of the target during 1980-81.

Similarly, the net increase in loans for small business and industry also fell short of the mandatory targets by 29 and 16 per cent respectively.

Whereas the bank credit has the Tendency to get blocked in big accounts because of increasing defaults in repayments, the recovery pace of small loans is good.

The shortfall in the mandatory targets for small loans, according to the State Bank, "appears to have been on account of better recoveries." Although the target anticipated on a net increase basis, was 31 per cent, disbursement on account of small loans during 1980-81 was 45 per cent higher than last year due to better than expected recoveries.

Despite the securities and sunities provided by the big borrowers, the banks are reluctant to enforce guarantees to recover long outstanding dues. With small borrowers it is different.

Similarly, big borrowers have access to the bank credit compared to small borrowers.

Even the National credit Consultative Council is influencing the commercial banks to advance credit to big borrowers rather than increasing the credit for small loans in the housing sector. The minimum lending limit for housebuilding has been raised to Rs. 1,50,000 with the maximum limit limit being fixed at Rs. 3 lakhs.

Another problem now confronting the banks is the rapid growth in advances with the simultaneous fall in the rate of increase in deposits.

The growth bank advances during 1980-81 was to the tune of 18.3 per cent against 15.8 per cent in the previous year. On the other hand, the growth in bank deposits slumped from 18.7 per cent in 1979-80 to 10.3 per cent in 1980-81. There has been a constant decline in the growth rate of deposits. The average annual growth rate of deposits at 14.9 per cent during 1978-81 has been lower than 25.4 per cent in the preceding three years. The slow down was more marked in the case of time deposits which fell sharply from 20.9 per cent in 1979-80 to 4.8 per cent in 1980-81.

The growth rate in deposits in the range of Rs. 50,000 and above have declined from 18.9 per cent in 1979 to 10.9 per cent in 1980. Their share in the total bank deposits fell from 36 per cent to 25 per cent.

On the other hand the growth rate in deposits of the size range upto Rs. 50,000 improved and their share in total deposits went up sharply from 64 per cent in 1979 to 75 per cent in 1980. Growth rate of deposits in the category of Rs. 1 lakh to Rs. 10 lakh declined from 19.8 per cent to 9.3 per cent.

IMPORTS RISE BY 14 PERCENT IN 1980-1981

Karachi DAWN in English 10 Nov 81 p 10

[Text]

The value of merchandise imports amounted to Rs 53.5 billion in 1980-81 fiscal as compared with Rs 46.9 billion in 1979-80, depicting a rise of 14.1 per cent.

According to official statistics this was mainly attributed to increased imports of raw materials. Imports of raw materials increased sharply by 38.8 per cent to Rs. 30.9 billion during 1980-81, accounting for 57.7 per cent of total imports as against 48.5 per cent in 1979-80.

The share of capital goods in the total imports fell from 35.5 per cent to 27.8 per cent, while that of consumer goods declined from 16 per cent to 14.5 per cent.

Petroleum and petroleum products, chemical fertilizers, vegetable oil, tea, iron and steel scrap, non-ferrous metals, animal tallow and machinery (electrical and non-electrical), were the major items recording increase during 1980-81 compared to the last year.

Imports of petroleum and petroleum products went up by 42.3 per cent to Rs. 15.2 billion due entirely to a marked rise of 63.3 per cent in the average imports price as their import volume declined by 12.9 per cent. In contrast the value of vegetable oil imports increased solely on account of enlarged quantum of imports which rose by 35.1 per cent to 468.9 million kgs, as their import price recorded a decline of 15.4 per cent.

The value of exports, at the same time, also increased by 25.1 per cent in 1980-81 to Rs 29.3 billion from Rs. 23.4 billion in 1979-80.

The increase in exports occurred notwithstanding a substantial appreciation, mainly in the second half of 1980-81, in the value of US dollars (to which rupee is linked and in which the bulk of Pakistan's exports are denominated), in terms of major European currencies.

The breakup of exports in terms of economic categories showed in the shares of primary commodities and manufactured goods in total exports rose from 47 per cent and 43 per cent in 1979-80 to 43.8 per cent and 44.9 per cent respectively in 1980-81 while the share of semi-manufactures declined from 15 per cent to 11.3 per cent.

Rise in the value of exports during 1980-81 was mainly attributable to record exports of raw cotton and rise resulting from both larger export volume and increased prices.

Export volume of raw cotton recorded a sharp increase of 29.5 per cent from 261,000 metric tons to 338,000 metric tons mainly due to larger demand from China, which accounted for about 65 per cent of the total raw cotton exports. Quantum of rice exports increased from 1,087,000 metric tons to 1,244,000 metric tons. Value of exports of fish and fish preparations rose due solely to enlarged export volume as their average export price declined by 6.2 per cent. Value of exports of cotton yarn and thread and carpets and rugs also increased entirely on account of increased average export prices.—APP

OVERSEAS JOB OPPORTUNITES REPORTED GOOD

Karachi MORNING NEWS in English 6 Nov 81 p 9

[Text] The opportunities for overseas employment of Pakistanis will keep on rising till 1985 at a rate of 15 per cent of the present outflow.

This was stated by Mrs Zulekha Zar Executive Director, Overseas Employment Corporation of Pakistan, while addressing a luncheon meeting of Rotary Club of Karachi (Midtown) here.

She pointed out that the number of people who secured jobs outside Pakistan in 1975 was more than 23,000 but it tremendously rose to 1,40,000 in 1977 while during 1980, the outflow was 1,30,000.

She said that the recruitment was done by the Overseas Employment Corporation, besides the 400 private licenced recruiting agencies.

She said that the Overseas Employment Corporation of Pakistan had over 250 clients in different countries, majority of them in Middle East, for recruiting workers for them in Pakistan.

She pointed out that among the people securing jobs abroad, majority belonged to the skilled and semi-skilled category, followed by labour and then highly qualified persons and professionals categories:

Among the total persons going abroad only four per cent belonged to the highly qualified category, therefore, there should not be any alarm on exodus of qualified people.

However, she suggested that a study be conducted about the scope of employment for various types of workers abroad and facilities for their training be provided here.

She said that Government took a positive step earlier by launching a five-year crash training programme under which 50,000 persons had been trained in different fields.

She said that measures should also be taken for providing employment opportunities to those Pakistanis who are returning after doing jobs abroad. She pointed that the ratio of those returning was 10 per cent as compared to those going abroad.

She pointed out that the competition for securing jobs abroad was hardening as other countries, like India, Thailand, Korea, Bangladesh, Philippines were also in the field nowadays.

She said that conditions abroad were changing and now technical personnel would be in greater demand was compared to the unskilled workers--PPI.

CITING CORRUPTION, PRESIDENT URGES REVITALIZED CIVIL SERVICE

Islamabad THE MUSLIM in English 4 Nov 81 p 4

[Editorial: "Revitalising Bureaucracy"]

[Text]

FOLLOWING a visit to the renamed Civil Services Academy—the Pakistan Administrative Staff College—which is responsible for mid-career training, the President pulled no punches when he addressed public servants. Emphasising that the bureaucrats' 'prestige and respect was at the lowest ebb' today, the President added that 'bureaucracy today was known for its corruption, inefficiency and preference for materialism'. These words are harsh, but true. Perhaps no group of people is so maligned or so low in popular esteem than contemporary successors to the pucca sahibs of the Raj. In another move, the President made not an insignificant change in the nomenclature of the administrative services. The previous label of All-Pakistan Unified Groups, has been dispensed with in favour of the much-familiar Civil Services of Pakistan. It has, however, been emphasised that this in no way implies revival of the old CSP system, but in future all services including police, postal and accounts service would be incorporated into the Civil Services. This may be a mere change in nomenclature but it is nevertheless symbolically significant. As the President rightly pointed out, the bureaucracy went down in popular esteem due to its past history of misconduct.

Lord Macaulay's creatures were successfully transformed into bureaucratic Brahmins who, even in the post-colonial era, endeavour to cover their brown skins with the white mask of contemptible colonial superiority. They became synonymous with the arrogance of power, a gross inability to relate to the common man and an insufferable elitism which produced more an effete corps of impudent snobs than a professionalism with a demonstrated capacity for competence. However, the civil bureaucracy should not be seen as a monolith, which it never has been. There is the CSP (currently called the District Management Group) and the rest. The 1973 Administrative Reforms, which abolished service labels (CSP, FSP, PSP, etc.,) creating in its place the All-Pakistan Unified Groups, were directed more at the CSP than against any other service. In fact, the rest generally welcomed these reforms as they promised them long-sought promotion opportunities. Ever since the 1973 Reforms, the CSP group has been lobbying hard for a restoration, in practice as in name.

Recently, the Foreign Affairs Group (FAG) has been redesignated as the Foreign Service which is quite alright, for FAG did not sound too good. Now it is back to the Civil Service of Pakistan. Perhaps the civil services needed this face-lift but that is what it should remain and nothing more. One positive element is the renewed emphasis on mid-career training for public servants. Save for training involving foreign courses, civil servants dreaded the prospect of a return to the classroom. This situation has been changed and mid-career training is now linked to promotions, similar to the armed forces where the National Defence College trains senior officers. In a developing country one of the major problems is total lack of accountability of public servants. It is time bureaucracy was made accountable and we stopped treating it like a holy cow.

NEW AIRPORT IN BALUCHISTAN: CHAIN PLANNED

Karachi DAWN in English 6 Nov 81 p 1

[Excerpt] Quetta, Nov 5: The Governor of Baluchistan, Lt-Gen Rahimuddin Khan, today inaugurated the newly constructed asni Airport.

Speaking on the occasion he disclosed that there would be an airport at every 150 sq. mile area, in Baluchistan and the Federal government had already prepared a plan in this regard.

He said that Pasni airport would go a long way in meeting the needs of the relatively less-developed areas of Mekran division and added with the inauguration of this airport Baluchistan has advanced a step further in the development of communication sector.

He said the difficult geographical conditions and widely scattered population of the province were the main obstacles in the development planning and implementation. Keeping in view these difficulties, the Government had always accorded top priority to the communications sector, as is evident from today's ceremony.

He said work on Ormara and Gwadur airports was in hand while work at Tewani and Punjgur would be started very soon. At Zhob and Khuzdar, it would be taken up at an appropriate time. Expansion work at the Quetta airport was going on.

Taking into account the bad weather conditions, causing frequent cancellation of flights for Quetta, the Governor suggested that Sibi airport may be expanded to be used as an alternate for Quetta airport.

He hoped that PIA would not only expand its flights throughout Baluchistan but also increase their frequency to benefit maximum number of people of the province.

TALENT POOL COLLECTS DATA ON QUALIFIED PERSONS

Islamabad THE MUSLIM in English 3 Nov 81 p 3

[Article by Anwar Iqbal]

[Text]

ISLAMABAD, Nov. 2: National Talents Pool of the Manpower and Overseas Pakistanis Division is collecting the data of all those persons possessing Masters, M. Phil. and Ph.D. degrees in administrative educational and social sciences.

The work of data collection has been undertaken on a directive of President Ziaul Haq. The purpose of this survey is to maintain complete record of all such persons, who are highly qualified in their fields, so that their talents could be utilised in accordance with the national requirements.

The National Talents Pool has already asked all the government departments and institutions to provide them with a list of all such persons on their strength, who come under this category. Similar notices will also be issued to the semi-government and private organisations.

All the universities in the country – technical and non-technical both – have also been advised to provide the NTP with a list of all those persons, who are registered with them as holders of Masters and higher degrees.

At a later stage it will also be advertised in newspapers for information.

meanwhile, government departments and organisations dealing with public relationing have been asked to send the particulars of such suitable officers to the NTP by Nov. 3, who could be nominated as Co-ordinating and Assisting Co-ordinating Officers for data collection.

FALL IN COTTON PRICES MAY AFFECT EXPORTS

Karachi DAWN in English 8 Nov 81 p 4

[Text]

Pakistan's export of lint cotton during the current season may be adversely affected in terms of foreign exchange earnings following steep fall in world prices.

Cotton traders maintained that the world cotton production had attained the unprecedented level of about 70 million bales during the current season, which virtually upset the international cotton trade. The steep fall in New York cotton prices from 88 cents to 64 cents per lb was reflected all over the world including Pakistan, where the price dropped by about Rs. 130.00 per maund over the past two months. The world consumption even in boom period they said, seldom exceeds the 60 million bales mark. But as the major consuming countries, including Japan, were cuting back their imports, a large surplus of about 10 million bales might further depress the prices.

The task before the Cotton Export Corporation is to ensure fair return to the grower by lending support to the local market, and to sell the entire exportable surplus at a competitive price.

According to latest crop reports the production target of 4.6 million bales might be exceeded by a fair marwin but the local mill consumption might not be able to show the corresponding increase owing to slack world demand of yarn and cloth.

In any case, trade circles said, the mills demand may not exceed the 2.5 million mark, which would leave an exportable surplus of over two million bales.

The CEC export agents said that although inquiries were pouring in every day from foreign buyers, the CEC has not given them a go ahead signal. The CEC has also not made any export commitments for the new crop although the world prices had almost been stabilised around 65 cents and had dropped to below the international parity level locally they said.

The CEC officials, however, appeared optimistic about the prospects of cotton exports in view of its recognised quality.

COTTON PRODUCTION, EXPORTS PUSHED

Karachi MORNING NEWS in English 8 Nov 81 p 7

[Text] THE Government has announced new support prices for seed cotton (phutti) for 1981-82 which will be 4 to 6.4 per cent higher than the existing prices. The existing and new prices as per 40 kgs, are as follows:

Variety	Existing price Rs. (per 40 kgs.)	New price Rs. (per 40 kgs.)	% increase
Desi	156	166	6.4
BS 1. NT	160	170	6.25
B-557	171	178	4.09
Sarmast, Qalandri MNH-93, K-68-9 tellspine and MS-39-40	183	192	5.49

The production target for cotton for 1981-82 has been fixed at 4.6 million bales—0.3 million bales more than what was produced in 1980-81. The area to be brought under cotton cultivation is estimated at 2.07 million hectares. The production target for Punjab has been fixed at 3.05 million bales and for Sind at 1.55 million bales. This will give an overall increase of 6.97 per cent over the actual production of 4.3 million bales last year.

The Provincial Governments and Cotton Export Corporation will ensure that the farmers get the support price as fixed by the Government. The availability of inputs including seed and fertilizer have also been firmed up and WAPDA has been instructed to ensure regular supply of electricity for running tubewells.

Cotton crop this season is reported to be in excellent condition and it is expected that the country will easily achieve the highest ever production target of 4.5 million bales. Recent rains have to some extent affected crop in certain districts of Punjab but the damage caused has been much below the economic injury level and would not have a significant effect on the overall output. In Sind, 18 co-ordination centres have been set up in the main cotton growing areas to collect information on the availability of pesticides sprayers etc. and to locate the zones of affected crops on the basis of day to day field reports. An area of 608,800 hectares has been brought under cotton cultivation as against the largest of 563,000 hectares. The crop condition is reported to be satisfactory and if favourable climatic conditions would continue, the target of 1.55 million bales is likely to be easily achieved.

Sind Agriculture Department is implementing a 4 year plan for production of quality and certified cotton seeds of high yielding varieties in the province. According to plan by 1984-85 about 0.567 million maunds of improved quality seeds of cotton will be produced. During the current season, 105 maunds of pre basic seeds of Qalandri, Sarmast, K-68 and Desi varieties of cotton have been sown on 21 acres. The pre basic seeds will be resown in the next 3 kharif seasons to produce 1,575 maunds of basic seeds. In the 33rd year of the plan, basic seeds would be grown on the fields of registered growers for multiplication which will yield 23,625 maunds of seeds in 1983-84. The seeds will again be sown on an area of 70.875 acres which will produce 0.567 million maunds for distribution among growers for general cultivation. Of the total, 71.4 per cent will be Qalandri, 9.5 per cent of Sarmast and 14.3 per cent of K-68 and 4.8 per cent of Desi varieties. In this way the present desi varieties such as 'LT' would be completely replaced by high yielding long staple cotton varieties.

At the present level of production, cotton contributes almost 10 to 12 per cent to GNP and about 20 per cent value added to major crops. A part from its use as raw material for yarn and cloth, it is the most important indigenous source of edible oil. It is, therefore, necessary to tap the full potentialities of this important industrial crop by raising its productivity.

TWO WAYS

There are 2 ways of increasing the output of cotton-either by increasing the area under cultivation or the yield per acre. It is easier to induce farmers to bring more area under cultivation but the more productive and economical approach would be to raise yield per unit of cultivation. For a number of years the crop has been cultivated on about 2 million hectares of land. The current years estimation of 2.07 million hectares diversion of more area to this crop which would leave lesser land for other crops. The increase of production of one crop at the cost of other crops negates the entire development strategy. It is but natural that growers would concentrate on crops which ensure them better returns. At the moment what is required is to launch a comprehensive and well co-ordinated development plan and to concentrate on increasing per acre yields. Agricultural scientist and extension services need to play their pivotal role. Much remains to be done in the area of improving the quality of fibre and development of pest resistant strains. Expansion of efficient extension services would also help the farmers, particularly the small growers in adopting and practising modern technology to increase per acre yields. There is also need for experimenting with and perfecting a low cost technology so that the small grower is able to afford the cost within his extremely limited means. This is essential otherwise escalating costs will not permit the small growers, who form bulk of the farming community, to make use of modern inputs.

The Pakistan Central Cotton Committee is currently looking into the possibilities of growing cotton in Baluchistan in which both the Provincial and Central Governments are interested. The main reason for this interest is the fact that the major cotton growing areas face the danger of shrinkage owing to the erosion of land caused by salinity and waterlogging. Baluchistan has enormous area lying barren but there is a severe problem of water shortage. However, PCCC is experimenting in areas where there is a fair prospect of water for cultivation purposes. Concentration on development of barren areas also needs to be further emphasized to boost cotton production.

SECOND LARGEST EXPORTER

Since the last 2 years, cotton has regained its position as number one cash crop of the country. We have been able to break all past records of cotton exports. During 1980-81, Pakistan attained the status of second largest exporter of cotton after US in the free world market by exporting 1.92 million bales worth over 525 million dollars. This trend is expected to continue in the coming year as well. d.

World cotton production during the current year 1981-82 is expected to acrieve a record of 68.8 million bales. The production level has been estimated by the International Cotton Advisory Committee. It is expected that increase will be concerted in the United States, but other countries like Pakistan, India, Syria and probably China will also contribute their shares to the increase. Cotton production in USSR and Egypt may decline during 1981-82. World cotton growing during the year 1981-82 is expected to be over 82 million acres.

Pakistan has contracted to supply of 0.1 million bales of cotton worth $26 million to India. India had requested Pakistan for more than 0.1 million bales of 4 types of raw cotton but Pakistan has agreed to sell only 0.1 million bales for the moment. However CEC has agreed to consider the Indian request for additional cotton, when the present limit is exhausted. The 4 types of cotton which Pakistan will export to India, include Qamar, Eagle, Numoer 1424 and Number 1423. Between 15,000 and 35,000 bales of each variety will be exported to India, most of which will be shipped in September, 1981 while some quantity will be sent this month.—Courtesy ABL Agricultural Review.

PRICES OF PETROLEUM PRODUCTS RAISED

Karachi DAWN in English 10 Nov 81 p 1

[Text]

ISLAMABAD, Nov 9: The Pakistan Government this evening increased the retail prices of seven varieties of petroleum products in order to match the additional cost of Rs 280 million on their import due to Oct 29 OPEC decision to revise upward the world oil prices.

An official statement today explained that the OPEC decision will cost an additional expenditure of Rs. 280 million during the current fiscal year on the POL imports. It had, therefore, been decided to make certain adjustments in the selling prices of some of the POL. However the prices of kerosene oil, light diesel oil and J.P.-1 remained unchanged.

The World Bank and the IMF had come to an understanding with the Pakistan Government while negotiating Bank assistance a couple of years ago that the Government would make every endeavour to see that the cost on Government subsidies should be reduced and preferably eliminated.

The Government had taken a decision at the time of 1980 budget that the cost and tariff of all commodities and services related to imported energy would be automatically revised in the event of their import prices going up.

The Government statement said: "After meeting in Vienna on October 29 the OPEC have announced upward changes in the crude oil prices. The price of light Arabian crude has been increased from 32 dollars per barrel to 34 dollars per barrel from Oct. 1, 1981. The prices of other type of crude have also been revised

"The net effect of the changes in the crude oil prices on the Pakistan economy will cause an extra expenditure of Rs. 280 million during the current financial year. It has, therefore, been decided to make certain adjustments in the selling prices of some of the POL without increasing prices of kerosene oil, light diesel oil and J.P.I.

"The revised prices of the POL products, thus effected are as follows :-

Product	Existing price	Increase	Revised price
	Rs.	Rs.	Rs.
High speed diesel oil	3.05 per litre	0.10 per litre	3.15 per litre
Motor Gasoline	5.00 per litre	0.05 per litre	5.05 per litre
High Octain blending compound	6.30 per litre	0.05 per litre	6.35 per litre
J.P. 4	2.80 per litre	0.10 per litre	2.90 per litre
Lubricating base oils (average price)	6.90 per litre	0.05 per litre	6.05 per litre
Furnace Oil	1250.00 per M Ton	100.00 per M Ton	1350.00 per M Ton
Asphalt	2000.00 per M Ton	200.00 per M Ton	2200.00 per M Ton

EXCELLENT PUNJAB COTTON CROP--Faisalabad, Nov 5--Cotton picking in the Punjab is in full swing and in view of the excellent crop condition the yield is expected to touch the mark of 32 lakh bales. An official source said here today that the newly evolved variety Express was cultivated this year over an area of 1,000 acres in the Punjab by progressive farmers. The variety evolved by the Ayub Agriculture Research Institute has shown quite encouraging results with an average yield production of 35 to 40 maunds per acre. The variety is an early maturing, pest resistant, and high yielding and better fibre quality. Picking in Sargodha Division has already been comp where normal wheat sowing is being done. The variety has already been recommended by the Punjab Agriculture Research Coordination Board and is now with the Pakistan Seed Council for approval for general cultivation. Enough seed of the Express variety would be available for distribution among the farmers during the next cropping season. Another desi variety Ravi was cultivated in the Lahore Division over a vast area and is expected to yield encouraging quantity during the season. Thousand maunds of seed of this variety were distributed among the farmers in the Lahore Division. Experts believe that with the advent of these new varieties country's export of cotton is also to increase considerably after meeting the country's requirements. UK, KUWAIT AID--Quetta, Nov 7--A comprehensive power programme is to be executed with British and Kuwaiti assistance of over Rs 210,100 million. Official sources said that the Kuwait fund had committed Rs 130,200 million to provide electricity for 300 villages for domestic industrial, commercial and agricultural consumption in the province. It would take two years to complete. Similarly, the British government has agreed to provide Rs 80 million for the construction of three transmission lines in the province. These include Killa Saifullah-Zhob, Kashmore-Sue Dera Bughti and Khanozai-Ziarat transmission lines. This project will also take about two years to complete. Both projects for rural electrification and construction of transmission lines would be executed by WAPDA.--APA [Text] [Karachi MORNING NEWS in English 8 Nov 81 p 1]

BALUCHISTAN ENERGY VILLAGES--Islamabad, Nov 7--The second solar energy village in the country will be set up in Kharan (Baluchistan) in pursuance of the presidential directive. A team of experts from Energy, Resources Cell of the Ministry of Petroleum and Natural Resources, headed by Director-General, Mr Sohail Qureshi, will visit Baluchistan next month to finalise the project. It may be recalled that president Zia-ul-Haq during his recent visit to Baluchistan declared that the country's second solar village will be set up in Baluchistan. Besides international agencies France is likely to provide grant assistance for the five kilovolt photo voltic solar village. Negotiations with the French Government in this connection is in final stages. The project is estimated to cost 150,000 dollars. Energy Resources Cell has completed the entire designing of the project. It will cater to the needs of the water requirements, domestic and community energy needs.--PPI [Text] [Karachi DAWN in English 8 Nov 81 p 4]

CHASE MANHATTAN BRANCH--The Chase Manhattan Bank yesterday announced to open its branch in Karachi in April 1982. Mr Francis X. Standkard, Executive Vice-President of the Bank, told a news conference that "setting up of a branch in Pakistan represents logical extension of our commitment to Asia and growing trade requirements of our customers." He said although the branch would not officially open until some time next year, "we are enthusiastic about improving investment and economic climate of Pakistan. He hoped that setting up Chase branch would help facilitate further investment in the country. He said Karachi branch would be Chase's first branch within the South Asia. He said the new branch was expected to be open in April 1982 until then, business in Pakistan would continue to be managed by Mr Victor Cordell, Vice-President Hong Kong. Mr Ronald Watt will serve as the country manager of the new branch here. [Text] [Karachi MORNING NEWS in English 6 Nov 81 p 9]

BARANI DEVELOPMENT PLAN--Sialkot, Nov 7--The National Economic Council has sanctioned the Barani development plan on which Rs 460 million would be spent. This was revealed by Brig (retd) Muzaffar Ali Khan Zahid, Chairman Agency for Barani Area Development (ABAD). Addressing a big gathering of cultivators at Shakargarh he said that according to this plan over 2 lakh acres of land in Chhamal, District Sialkot, and Suhawa, District Jehlum, would be brought under production by using most modern methods of cultivations. He further said that in the above project areas all out efforts would be made for the development of poultry farming and animal breeding. This included establishment of veterinary hospitals and poultry units. These steps would be taken with the help and assistance of various cooperative organizations, he added. This plan would be completed within six years, he said and added that it was the earnest desire of the government to revolutionise the economic and social conditions of the masses living in far flung rural areas. He assured the people that in the project areas electricity, pucca roads and hospitals would be provided. [Excerpt] [Karachi DAWN in English 8 Nov 81 p 4]

'JUI WON'T JOIN MRD'--Toba Tek Singh, Nov 4--Chief of Jamiat-ul-Ulema-i-Islam, Maulana Abdullah Darkhwasti, has said that MRD included a former ruling party whose hands were stained with the blood of martyrs of Nizam-i-Islam movement and the question of his defunct Jamiat's unity with such elements in any way, does not arise. He said this while talking to a delegation of Toba Tek Singh leaders of his party who called on him at his residence at Khanpur. The delegation included Maulana Mohammed Omer Ludhianvi, Ahmed Yaqoob Chaudhry and Maulana Mohammed Akhter. Maulana Darkhwasti said we want enforcement of the Islamic system based on Quran and Sunnah. The Maulana condemned the murder of Chaudhri Zahoor Elahi and demanded dire punishment for the killers. AFGHAN REFUGEES CAMP VISITED--The visiting three-member Maldivian education delegation led by Education Minister Mohamed Zaheer Hussain visited an Afghan refugee tented village near Peshawar this morning. Talking to the Afghan refugees, the leader of the delegation said that as Muslims the people of the Maldives share their sufferings and support their just cause. He expressed the hope that they would soon return to their country with honor and dignity. Later, the delegation drove to the historic Khyber pass and visited Pak-Afghan border at Torkhan. NEW PANCHAYAT DIFFICULTIES--Many Municipal Panchayats which started functioning from Nov 1 without offices stationary or furniture are facing difficulties. Only a few are being run by educated Councillors, inquiries show. A number of members started working without taking oath, others without any knowledge of the rules or the working methods. In spite of the fact that the Mayor, Deputy Mayor and the Municipal Commissioners have been visiting various units to acquaint themselves with the problems, they have yet to find means to solve them. However, a programme of meetings has been planned from Nov. 17 for the chairman, members and staff clerks who will be briefed about the various Panchayat rules and laws to be tackled by them. A good number of Panchayats have yet to receive their seals (being given in phases) and their Identity Cards. There are others who have yet to get the possession of alloted offices. No responsible person in KMC seems to know the exact number of prosecutions launched in Panchayats or has issued any programmes for their own officers. However, Councillor Kalhori of Thatai Compound issued a press release stating admission of four cases under Local Government Ordinance and issuance of summons for Nov 9 to the parties. THREE SHIPS IN PENANG--Kuala Lumpur, Nov 4--Three Pakistan Navy ships arrived in Penang, a port city north of here, yesterday, for a three-day goodwill visit to Malaysia. The three ships PNS "Tamiur" a fast anti-submarine destroyer, PNS "Tippu Sultan," a destroyer, and PNS "Badr," a battle class destroyer, arrived under the overall command of Rear-admiral Iftikhar Ahmad Sirohey, Commander of Pakistan Fleet. On arrival Admiral Iftikhar and the three Commanding officers paid a courtesy call on the Governor of Penang and the Chief Minister. They then attended a lunch given by the Governor. The Commander of the Pakistan Fleet will pay a courtesy call on the Malaysian Chief of Navy Vice-Admiral Datuk Mohd Zain Salleh. As a goodwill gesture the men from the three ships have also agreed to donate blood to the Penang Blood Bank. Friendly matches of hockey have also been arranged between the men from the three ships with local teams. The Malaysian-Pakistani League, an organisation of Pakistani Community in Penang, will host a tea-party to the crew of the visiting ships tomorrow. The ships will leave Penang on Nov 6. ADP IN NWFP--Peshawar, Nov 7--The provincial Government has allocated Rs one billion for implementing the Annual Development Programme in various parts of NWFP during the current financial year clearly indicating the keen interest of the government in the development and economic growth of the province. This was stated by Mr Salim Saifullah Khan, NWFP Minister for Finance and Industries while addressing the councillors and notables in Khairo Khel and Tajazai in Lakki Tehsil of District Bannu, on Thursday. He said that the main problems of Bannu district was the supply of drinking water which had been solved to a larger extent through spreading a network of tubewells in the district. A sum of Rs 10 million had been allocated for the expansion of drinking water in Bannu District during the current financial year and drinking water was now being supplied to about 100 villages through permanent pipelines, he added. He said that now when the local councils had been formed it was the duty of the councillors to survey the needs of their areas and fix priorities to complete minor schemes in the villages.--APP [Text] [Karachi DAWN in English 8 Nov 81 p 5]

HAQ GREETS BANGLADESH'S SATTAR--President Gen Mohammad Ziaul Haq has congratulated Mr Justice Abdus Sattar on his election as the president of Bangladesh. In a message to Sattar, the president said: Your obvious success reveals the confidence of the people of Bangladesh in your leadership and the policies of your government. The president wished the Bangladesh people continued progress and prosperity. He assured the newly elected Bangladesh president of full cooperation in further development and stabilization of relations between the two countries. AFGHAN ARSONISTS ARRESTED--Karachi, 26 Oct--It has been reported that the Pakistani Government arrested 12 Afghan saboteurs and terrorists when they entered Pakistan near Torkham to carry out subversive activities. The arrested persons entered Pakistan in disguise and were reportedly armed with the latest weapons, which have been taken from them. They have been brought to Karachi by a special fokker plane and are being interrogated to find out why they entered Pakistan illegally. The arsonists have been placed under strict surveillance, and some sensational revelations are expected to result from the interrogation. [Text] [GF311138 Karachi NAWA-E-WAQT in Urdu 27 Oct 81 p 1]

FINANCE MINISTER'S STATEMENT TO WORLD BANK PARLEY

Dacca THE BANGLADESH TIMES in English 12, 15 Oct 81

[Statement by Mr. M. Saifur Rahman, Minister of Finance at the Joint Annual Discussion of the Board of Governors of the World Bank]

[12 Oct 81 pp 5, 6]

[Text] At the very outset, I would like to join the other Governors in extending a hearty welcome to Mr A. W. Clausen, the new President of the World Bank group. We are confident that under his leadership the institution will not only preserve but will carry forward the understanding that has been achieved over the years on international socio-economic development. I would also like to welcome at this stage the new members of the Bank and the Fund. We have listened with great interest to President Reagan's address and noted with reassurance the continued support of the United States for our two institutions. We are also greatful to the Managing Director of the Fund and the President of the Bank for their very thoughtful and forthright statements.

At the conclusion of last year's Annual Meetings in October 1980, a broad consensus had emerged on the role of the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund in the 1980s. There was widespread appreciation among the developing and the industrial countries of the assistance that the developing countries will need in the 1980s to improve their levels of living and to facilitate the structural changes in their economies required by the changes in external environments. It was also appreciated.

--That all previously planned programmes of international assistance, including that of the Bank and the Fund, must be re-examined in order to determine how the increased and urgent needs of the developing world could be met.

--That these institutions must mobilise substantial additional resources to take into account the unexpected rates of inflation, the sharply deteriorated current account deficits of the developing countries due to the rise in prices of oil and other imports, reduction in their export earnings due to recession in the industrial countries, increased requirements for energy investments and requirements of the People's Republic of China.

--That there was indispensable need for increasing development assistance to the non-oil developing countries, particularly for the low-income countries.

--That the industrial countries have to follow appropriate adjustment policies, improve market access for the exports of the developing countries, avoid protectionism, reduce undue reliance on monetary policies, with a view to reducing the heavy burden of adjustment which under those policies fell mainly on the developing countries.

Unfortunately, we are sorry to say that very little progress has been achieved on the consensus that we thought was arrived at among the members of these two institutions, and we note with deep concern the relentless deterioration of the short--and medium-term prospects for the developing countries and the apparent unwillingness of many developed countries to pursue policies supportive of international development and greater international assistance.

The Annual Reports of the International Monetary Fund and of the World Bank, the World Development Report 1981, and the World Economic Outlook published by the Fund--all indicate that the international economic situation continues to remain difficult and is deteriorating, particularly in the developing countries. A number of major industrial countries continue to face recession, energy cost continue to remain high, as to inflation and interest rates. Fluctuating exchange rates, almost negligible growth of world trade, and delining prices of primary commodities exports of non-oil developing countries have led to serious balance of payments pressures and depressed their investment programmes. The growth rates of the non-oil developing countries, mainly because of shortage of critical resources and also because of their dependence on the markets of industrial countries, declined further in 1980-81. The combined current account deficits of the non-oil developing countries, which reached $84 billion in 1980, almost 80 per cent higher than the level of 1979, are expected to go up to $97 billion this year, and will probably exceed $100 billion in 1982. Further, a serious deterioration has taken place in the relative terms of trade of the developing countries.

The most disappointing feature of the international development scenario is the picture regarding net disbursement of official development assistance (ODA). In 1980 the total flow reached 0.37 per cent of their aggregate GNP, of which only 34 per cent was available to the low-income countries. Most disconcerting, however, is the fact that only 10 per cent of ODA was available to the least-developed countries.

With aid flows much below the desired and reommended levels, and practically no access to the commercial bank resources, one could seek some compensation through exports and benefits of trade--a course vigorously advocated by international institutions and bilateral donors. Here also the low-income countries continued to be left behind. Their exports could not grow fast enough to match the rising cost of oil and imports from industrial countries.

The middle-income countries have been more fortunate in this respect in the past decade. The increase in developing countries' export purchasing power during the 1970s breaks down into $105 billion for oil exporters, $118 billion for middle-income oil importers, but a mere $3 billion for low-income oil importers. Low-income oil importers' export purchasing power was almost one third lower in 1980 than in 1970--in contrast to the middle-income countries, whose purchasing power increased by almost two thirds. This is a clear indication that the deteriorating terms of trade had the most devastating effect on those who could afford it the least--and my own country is a serious casualty of this phenomenon to which I shall revert shortly.

What is most depressing and frustrating are the projections made by the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund for the decade as a whole. Under the optimistic "high case" projection of the World Development Report, as well as the "scenario A" of the Fund analysis per capita income for the low-income oil importing countries is projected to grow only 1.8 per cent in the next decade compared with 3.4 per cent for the middle-income oil importers and 3.1 per cent for the industrial countries as a group. Under the "low case" scenario, the situation is much more precarious permitting no more than 0.7 per cent per capita growth for the low-income oil importing countries compared with 2.1 per cent for the middle-income oil importers and 2.3 per cent for the industrial countries. Thus, even under the most favourable circumstances, i.e., the "high case", the gap between the rich and the poor countries (including the gap between middle-income and low-income countries) will widen in this decade, and this effect will be considerably aggravated under the less favourable circumstances. Is it not a shame for the international community that at the end of a century of unprecedented technological, economic and social advances in many parts of the world, 850 million people may still remain consigned to a situation devoid of a minimum element of human dignity?

In the low-income countries the identified adjustment problems appear to have no short-term solution. Apart from immediate balance of payments needs, the longer-term tasks of investments and restructuring will require a decade or more of increased support with concessional funds. The time scale is even longer for the least-developed countries where the essential foundations of economic development frastructure, human capital commercial networks, and administrative machinery at all levels are still at the nascent stage. It is in the context of these prospects that a UN conference for the least-developed countries was specially convened last month in Paris. The conference finalized and adopted the substantial new programme of action for 31 least-developed countries outlining in detail the objectives, goals, and strategy of development for these countries and also the support measures needed from the international community for realizing the programme of action. Though significantly short of expectations the conference in general terms agreed to double ODA to the least-developed countries by 1985. It was also gratifying that most donors reaffirmed their commitment to provide 0.7 per cent of their GNP as ODA in the immediate future. The hopes generated in Paris call for urgent positive action not only by the bilateral development partners but also by the multilateral agencies.

Exhortations for structural adjustments on all fronts, such as expansion of exports, containment of energy demand, steps for increasing energy supplies, and rearrangement of financial flows, are no doubt well-conceived. Admittedly, structural adjustment is a must for long-term stable and viable growth. But is it not unrealistic to expect the developing countries to tackle all areas of adjustment simultaneously? While concentrating on food and agriculture, the most important area for import substitution for many developing countries, no country can ignore even modest levels of investment in education, health, population planning, supply of pure water, and, above all, for building up physical infrastructure in the interest of medium- and long-term growth considerations. The small indeed if they do not receive the requisite cooperation of industrial and oil surplus countries in this respect.

Apart from the much-discussed imbalances between the oil exporting and oil importing groups of countries, the other problem, perhaps not so widely recognized, as discussed by the Fund in the World Economic Outlook, is that which exists within the large group of oil importing countries, principally between the industrial countries and the non-oil developing countries. Developing countries cannot expand their exports, particularly of manufactures, if the industrial countries continue to use protective measures against them. The needed structural adjustment of their economies will also require time even if all the right policies are implemented. Most importantly, financing at adequate levels will be required for a number of years in support of adjustment programmes. Direct private investment in developing countries by industrial and oil exporting countries has no doubt a crucial role to play in that context, but in low-income it is clear that the overwhelming part of the financing need has to be met on concessionary terms.

The non-oil developing countries are receiving support toward covering a part of their current account deficits directly through bilateral loans and grants from the OPEC countries, as well as indirectly through international lending agencies. An important new contribution to the current account financing of Fund members, including non-oil developing countries, is the arrangement concluded by the Fund with Saudi Arabia. A noteworthy feature of OPEC assistance, as is well known, is its united character. We sincerely hope that the initiative taken by Mexico and Venezuela in helping developing countries with special measures relating to the import of oil will soon be followed by other oil producers.

Let me take advantage of this occasion to say a few words about my own country, Bangladesh, whose 90 million people represent almost one third of all human beings living in the least-developed countries. Almost 80 per cent of our people live below the poverty line. We have been most seriously hit by the adverse changes in the international economic situation. While over 70 per cent of our export earnings is pre-empted by oil imports, there is hardly any respite from the burden of payment for imported capital goods and industrial raw materials. The pressure on our balance of payments has thus been severe indeed. We are, however, determined to raise the level of living of our people and launched our second five-year plan a year ago, placing high priority on raising agricultural production, cutting down growth of population, exploiting domestic energy sources, and spreading mass literacy. I am glad to report to you that in the very first year of our plan, fiscal 1980-81, we exceeded our target of increase in food production and have been making all out efforts to raise domestic resources. Unfortunately, however, the full potential of growth of the economy cannot be realized due to shortfall from the expected level of international support. Our investment objectives and investment priorities are intended to bring structural changes in our economy and in fact in our situation it is hard to distinguish between structural adjustment and development. Limited capacity to save from the presently low levels of income and the deteriorating external environment, have put severe constraints on our efforts. Our terms of the trade have deteriorated substantially over the past two years, although we have been exporting more in terms of volume of many of our products, export receipts have declined. I mention these only to draw the attention of the international community to strong and generous support needed to reinforce our national efforts. While we note the recommendations by the Bank and the Fund to adopt outward looking policies for increasing exports, there is a limit to which this can be achieved in the short run, as there is hardly any room to cut down consumption below subsistence levels. To generate a surplus for exports and to exploit our domestic energy resources, we need a substantial level of external assistance, which is known to the Bank and the Fund as well as to the bilateral donors.

We welcome the agreement reached on interim procedures for subscribing to the General Capital Increase of the World Bank. Although we congratulate the World Bank on another successful year of operation leading to a total commitment of over $ 12 billion for IBRD and IDA, we are disappointed to note that IDA commitments in fiscal 1981 were lower than in the previous year. Net disbursements appear to show upward trends. The IFC also deserves our commendation for increasing their operations significantly over the past year. We fully agree with Mr. Clausen that the major source of success of the IFC is its flexibility and shunning of doctrinaire approach.

We are, however, deeply concerned to note the dim prospects for expansion of the activities of the World Bank. We welcome the effectiveness of the Sixth Replenishment of IDA. But apart from the fact that it came late, considerable uncertainties still seem to remain about the level of actual commitments that will be achieved in fiscal 1982 and fiscal 1983. We strongly urge that according to the original international agreement, IDA VI should remain a three-year programme and should have the full authority to commit the agreed amount of $ 12 billion by fiscal 1983. In the light of the difficulties facing the low-income countries which have been described at length, it is absolutely essential that there is no slippage in commitment of IDA VI resources beyond fiscal 1983. Unless this is ensured, there is great danger of the commitment period of IDA VII being adversely affected. In the light of the timetable followed for Replenishments in the past, the negotiation process for IDA VII must start by the end of 1981 with the view of reaching agreement by July 1, 1983. We are encouraged by the statement of the President of the World Bank in this respect. What should be most important, is to ensure growth in IDA VII in real terms over IDA VI at least comparable to past trends. Since this is the largest single source of concessional assistance for the low-income countries, this will be an important indication by the donor community that it seriously considers helping the developing countries in meeting their resource needs in the most difficult period ahead and according to their requirements, as outlined in WORLD DEVELOPMENT REPORT 1981. We are extremely thankful to Mr. Clausen for his elucidation of the nature and role of IDA whould should help to disabuse the minds of many uninformed critics and remove serious misunderstandings existing in certain quarters. His discussions about the standards of IDA operations and the important and productive role that IDA has played and is playing in the developing world, and particularly in the low-income countries, has been most timely. We also congratulate him for so succinctly describing the contribution that IDA resources can make to help the poor countries in achieving greater economic stability, greater self-reliance, and greater social cohesion, and also the importance of IDA to the national self-interest of the developed nations.

While on this subject we also urge an early agreement on the composition and terms of reference of the Task Force on Concessional Flows in order that appropriate solutions may be found without loss of time for the problems that currently affect the volume, quality, and the effective use of concessional flows. It has assumed special importance in view of the need for mobilizing additional concessional resources for meeting the urgent needs of the Sub-Saharan African countries. There is hardly any scope for diverting resources to the African countries from other poor regions of the world. It should be borne in mind that the largest numbers of the world's absolute poor are concentrated in South Asia and per capita income "high-case" scenario, will barely be equal to the level obtaining in the Sub-Saharan African countries at the present time.

We shall be less than candid if we did not express grave concern over the developments regarding the lending programme of the World Bank for fiscal 1982, and the indicative plan for fiscal 1982-86. These do not take into account any of the concerns expressed by the Governors in the last Annual Meetings and reiterated in the Gabon meeting of the Development Committee. The Brandt Commission Report had made valuable recommendations for increasing the Bank's lending capacity.

[15 Oct 81 pp 5, 7]

[Text] We hope that the Task Force on Non-Concessional Flows set up by the Development Committee will also have important suggestions to make. But over and above all these, we look forward to the initiation of innovative techniques by the new President of the Bank who has vast experience in the handling of and raising international resources. As was recognised at the last Annual Meetings, the international financial institutions, including the World Bank, have a major role to play in the recycling of the international suprluses. The Fund has already taken a significant step by coming to an agreement with the Saudi Arabian authorities. We hope the World Bank will be able to come to some such arrangement to raise its resources for lending, in addition to exploring other means for increasing its resources by possible redesigning of the capital structure.

We remain concerned over the change in some members' perception of the role of the World Bank. The World Bank has played an historic role in increasing the understanding between the developing and developed member countries. We do not take any doctrinaire approach and believe that the private sector can play important roles in the development of many economies. However, we remain convinced that it is not necessarily the answer to the problem in all cases, particularly in the case of the low-income countries. The World Bank should not close its doors to financing of infrastructure projects and other viable projects in the developing countries in fields which cannot be attractive for private entrepreneurs such as roads and highways, rural development, population planning, and human resource development. Public investment will have to play a predominant role in these areas. We must recognise that the World Bank is not a commercial bank and was never conceived of as such by its members. As has been described by Mr Clausen, the Bank and IDA have been playing a significant role in the nonfinancial field also, such as technical assistance and research and there is a strong case for expanding that role rather than reducing it.

If concessional resources are likely to grow only very slowly, as the trends seem to indicate, it will be necessary for the management of the Bank to consider innovative measures through appropriate selection of projects and financial mechanisms to channel IBRD resources to the low-income countries. We hope that under the leadership of the new President of the Bank, with his vast experience in international banking and finance, it will be possible to break away from the traditional concepts of creditworthiness, which have been mechanically applied and have resulted in the exclusion of a large number of developing countries from IBRD resources.

We hope that the World Bank will continue to retain the leadership role it has established for itself in the field of development policy and in the matter of meeting basic human needs of the poor people in the developing countries through innovative project designs. While we are happy to note from Mr Clausen's statement that the Bank will continue to follow the priorities established in its lending operations over the years, giving adequate attention to the needs for agriculture and energy, it would be wrong in our view to cut down the share of social sector investments. We firmly believe that these institutions have genuine obligations for helping the developing countries to meet the basic needs of those living in absolute poverty and to continue assistance in these areas for development of human resources.

We are also encouraged to note in the statement of the President of the Bank the importance that will continue to be attached to the need for expanding energy production in non-oil developing countries. But we want to re-emphasize that an increase in the Bank's investments in energy production must represent a net addition to total available resources, unless the pattern of resource allocation set up over the years, to which I referred a little while ago, is to be seriously distorted. While all parties--developing countries, industrial countries and oil surplus countries--recognise the need for such investment, it will be a pity if resource mobilisation measures suffer due to lack of agreement on an aprpopriate organisational arrangement for channeling such investment. In last year's annual discussions there was widespread support from the Governors for the establishment of an energy affiliate. We would strongly urge that the initiative earlier taken by the World Bank management be expanded and recommendations agreed upon between the concerned groups of countries for determining the optimum means of financing and the appropriate organisational mechanism for an expanded energy programme, including the possibility of an energy affiliate. In our opinion, the World Development Report has argued well why international financial institutions should play a significant part in the process of designing larger energy investments. While cooperation between such institutions and the member countries on the one hand and private energy companies on the other are most desirable, we would be hesitant to opt for any doctrinaire and generalised pattern for this purpose. After all, according to the Bank's own analysis, the bulk of the resources for energy investments will have to come from the private sector--with the Bank playing a catalytic role. Obviously, conditions will differ from country to country depending on the size of possible and probable reserves of energy resources, domestic needs, and possibility of exports. Before leaving this subject, we must reiterate our suggestion that if market-based resources are to play the major role in energy investments, special arrangements must be made for interest subsidy to the low-income countries.

The Annual Report of the Fund indicates that the institution and its Executive Board have been highly active during the year that is just over. We are happy to note that the financial activity of the Fund reached a new peak in terms of number of arrangements with members in the use of the Fund's resources.

We would also like to put on record our satisfaction about the coming into effect of the Seventh General Review of Quotas and steps taken to place in line the quotas of the People's Republic of China and Saudi Arabia. Though not fully meeting the expectations of the developing countries, the Executive Board's decision on compensatory financing of fluctuations in the cost of cereal imports to assist members encountering balance of payments difficulties is also a step in the right direction. We welcome the decision to establish a subsidy account in connection with the supplementary financing facility and hope that the resources of the subsidy account in connection with the supplementary financing facility and hope that the resources of the subsidy account will be supplemented by donations and borrowing on suitable terms in addition to using a part of the Trust Fund repayments. We would like to congratulate the Managing Director for concluding a borrowing arrangement with the Saudi Arabian Monetary Agency. Short-term financing arrangements made with several central banks of industrial countries will also help the Fund in augmenting its resources. While these steps will enable the Fund to pay a suitable role in recycling international surpluses and to meet the increased borrowing requirements of its members over the next three years, we would urge caution in exploring the possibility of Fund borrowing from the private market and its possible impact on interest rate structure and Fund charges. It is in this context that we reiterate the need for expediting deliberations by the Fund Board on the Eighth General Review of Quotas.

We cannot help pointing out that though the financial activity of the Fund reached a new peak, the bulk of Fund assistance to the developing countries in recent years is characterised by high conditionalities, whereas the major part of assistance provided in the period 1974-78 was low-conditionality resources under the oil facility and compensatory financing facility. Also any concrete Fund action on the proposal in the Group of Twenty-Four Programme for Immediate Action for a new medium-term facility in the Fund, and a subsidy account for the enlarged access policy are conspicuous by their absence in the Fund Annual Report.

Simplification of the composition and characteristics of the SDR is welcome, but we regret that discussions concerning allocation of SDRs in the fourth basic period have not come to a satisfactory conclusion and have failed to take account of the overriding principle that the SDR should be the principal reserve asset in the international monetary system. It is disappointing that the Executive Board of the Fund has not concluded its deliberations and made any recommendations for submission to the Board of Governors for further allocation of SDRs at an appropriate and substantial level. We hope that the Fund Board will carry out the mandate from the Interim Committee without any loss of time.

We have noted with great interest the reference made to Bank-Fund collaboration in the statements of the Managing Director of the Fund and of the President of the Bank. Admittedly, adequate collaboration and cooperation are required and desirable between the two Bretton Woods institutions, but such cooperation should be wholly for the purpose of helping the developing countries in following adjustment measures with adequate financial support. We would also like to point out that collaboration between the two organisations should not mean or lead to reinforcement of stricter conditionalities which will put the developing countries in straight jackets with serious economic and social consequences and inevitable depression of their growth rates.

The developing countries have never opposed or refrained from adopting rational and realistic domestic policy reforms and changes. The growing relationship of the developing countries with our two institutions is clear evidence of this process. But one must not lose sight of the need for a realistic time frame for such changes so as not to upset the fabric of social equilibrium. For economic policies of nations, particularly the developing ones, cannot be considered in isolation from their sociopolitical realities, programmes and institutions. What is more important, policy reforms in most cases can be undertaken only in the context of adequate resource support from the international community--the industrial and capital surplus oil countries which have been subjects of intensive discussions in the last few days.

Developments in the industrial countries in the last year or so invariably give an impression that assistance to the developing countries is an item being relegated more and more to a lower position in the agenda of their international concern. This contrasts sharply with positions being taken on ideological considerations and massive planned expenditure on armaments both in the East and the West. We must not let this occasion pass without drawing attention to the fact that the centrally planned industrial economies have also not played their part in helping the developing countries. The projections about the growth prospects of these economies in this decade are, on the whole, more favourable than those for other groups of countries. It cannot be denied that these countries are benefiting from trade with the developing countries, the OSCD countries, and also with the surplus oil countries. It will therefore be quite appropriate to urge them to take their legitimate contribution to the developing world in their efforts to improve the living conditions of their people.

During our discussions last year the recommendations of the Brandt Commission, aptly described as "A Programme for Survival," raised considerable hopes and, in our view, provided an opportunity for an exhibition of statesmanship and political will be the leaders of the industrial countries. It clearly brought out that most economic problems of the present world are interlinked, and global interdependence dictates that there can be no piecemeal solutions to these problems. The report rightly asserted that it is in the best interests even of the developed world to sustain and support the development of the developing world through a massive transfer of real resources and a restructuring of international economic relationships. We therefore sincerely hope that the ensuing Cancun Summit, which was pleaded for by the Brandt Commission, will restore momentum to the process of global negotiations which is now in a standstill position. In the context of this meeting we look forward to a consensus on channeling more resources to the developing countries if the drastic consequences of the "low-case" projections are to be avoided. The requirements for the "high-case" scenario as illustrated by the analyses of the Fund and the Bank are certainly not excessively demanding. Can the developed world, in all good conscience, suggest cutting down the flow of resources which is needed for investment to raise hundreds of millions of poor people from below the poverty line, raising their life expectancy, and educating their children? Whereas in the industrial countries per capita income increased from about $4 000 in 1950 to over $10,000 in 1980, and for middle-income countries it grew from $640 to nearly $1,600 in 1980, for the low-income countries the improvement was from an appalling figure of $170 to $250--a gain of only $80 per person in 30 years! Is it therefore too much to expect that a modest part of the increase (only 3 per cent of the increase) of the national product of the industrial countries be transferred to the developing countries in the rest of the decade?

I am about to conclude. In recapitulation I would like to make some observations on the issues of structural adjustments, conditionalities, and the role of private investment in engendering the development process. So much has been made of these during the past few days in this forum and also in the Interim Committee and Development Committee that I feel a compelling urge to make some reference on these much-debated issues. We certainly believe in the virtues of undertaking structural adjustments to put our economy on the right track of a sustenable development process, but it has to be appreciated that this process calls for massive investment and a reasonable time frame. Of late, however, our task has been made manifoldly difficult by the recession induced by the trade restrictive, and at times, incoherent, policies pursued by a number of developed economies with debilitating repercussions on our adjustment efforts. Would it not be unfair of the developed economies to remain insensitive to the consequences of their policies for weaker economies?

The idea of appropriate conditionalities is well understood. But mechanical enforcement of performance criteria, relying mainly on soulless data without adequate consideration of the under lying objectives which the conditionalities are meant to attain, may end in fulfilling the criteria and yet the attainment of the objectives may remain as elusive as ever. On the contrary, objectives may be realized even though the fulfillment of performance criteria may fall short of numerical targets. Should then a country, which under difficult internal and external situations attains the major objectives, be penalized merely because it falls short of meeting some performance criteria mechanically? In my own country, we have met the performance criteria on export expansion in volume but have failed to meet it in export earnings entirely due to the serious deterioration in the prices of our main export products. Should the jute farmers, the tea garden workers, and the fishermen of Bangladesh to produce more by toiling from dawn to dusk under a broiling sun for a miserable reward and wretched existence be further penalised for failing to meet the numerical targets of export earnings? They are not even aware that they are condemned to a wretched existence not because of lack of endeavour on their part, but because of the unfair and inequitable international economic relationship. The answer lies not in penalizing our farmers, workers, and fishermen, but in correcting the unfair international economic relations. The area of adjustment therefore lies beyond the borders of Bangladesh. Doctrines of exchange depreciation mechanically applied merely result in the transfer of resources from the developing countries to the developed countries through deterioration of the terms of trade.

Concerning the virtue of market-oriented private investment, let me remind the audience that as a general rule, the market smiles at the rich but frowns upon the poor--and we are poor and least developed. And yet, being in desperate need for investment resources, we have adopted a comprehensive set of policies to encourage and promote private foreign investment--but except to a limited extent we have not yet been taken as a desirable suitor since our environment is not as attractive compared with that of the middle-income and advanced countries. Let me assure you that we shall continue our efforts for attracting private investment. I wonder, however, whether the private investors would invest in small irrigation and rural development projects, construction of jute and fertilizer godowns, construction of primary and secondary schools, feeder rural roads and secondary roads, jetties and harbours, and other infrastructure projects. When we talk of private investment in least developed countries, could we lose sight of these compelling economic realities which certainly would not attract private investors?

What I want to say is that the doctrines of structural adjustment, conditionalities, and of private investment have to be pursued with caution and pragmatism. These doctrines should not be pursued in isolation from the economic realities in the low-income and least-developed countries, forgetting the millions of people living in sub-human conditions whose welfare is after all behind all our objectives and policies.

NATIONAL CONFERENCE APPOINTS MA'SHUM LEADER OF MAJLIS

Jakarta MUTIARA in Indonesian 16-29 Sep 81 p 10

[Article by Jopie Lasut]

> [Text] The religious scholars of the NU [Nahdlatul Ulama] have just held their national conference at Kaliurang [Central Java]. A new general leader has just been appointed to fill the position left vacant by the late K H Bisri Syamsuri 16 months ago. "The decisions which they took concern ordinary matters," said a non-NU political leader, commenting on the conference of religious scholars, which is a legacy of the prophet.

Kaliurang--About 200 religious scholars [alim ulama] from 22 provinces, meeting at Kaliurang, 24 kilometers North of Yoguakarta, only made decisions on matters in a moderate way.

In the political field the conference decided that, "in order that the presentation of candidacies for the presidency might be presented in a constitutional way at a public session of the MPR [People's Consultative Council], the 1982 general election should be held on time."

The National Conference also declared, "the highest position in the government of our country is that of the chief of state who, according to the Constitution of 1945 is called the president and the supreme commander of the Armed Forces, but, according to the MPR, is their mandatory. And in order not to reduce the status of that position, there is no need to add other titles." This means that titles like "The Father of Development" are included among the unnecessary titles.

However, beside a number of decisions involving politics, the economy, health, and religion the most important decision made by the National Conference was the appointment of a new general leader.

Culture Plunges Into the Well

By a unanimous vote those attending the conference agreed to the appointment of Kyai Haji Ali Ma'shum as general leader of the Majlis al-Shura [Advisory Council] of the NU. That position automatically involves serving as general leader of the PPP [Development Unity Party]. "Members of the NU know that unless it fills the post of general leader it will be difficult for the NU to maintain a high level of political activity," said Yusuf Hasyim, first chairman of the Executive Council of the NU, "particularly in view of the general elections which are 8 months ahead of us." Possibly, he had in mind the example of the walkout of the Development Unity Faction in Parliament.

According to Dr H M Tolchah Monsoer, of the NU Regional Advisory Council of the Special Area of Yogyakarta, the position of general leader of the NU certainly cannot be compared with the position of the pope in Rome, but his role for NU members is comparable with that of the great imam, Ayatollah Khomeyni.

(Editor's Note: there must be a fundamental distinction here. The general leader follows Sunni Muslim teaching which opposes worship of the Imam and the grant of forgiveness through the Iman. Conversely, these matters are very much encouraged in Shi'ite teaching.)

Why is the position of general leader important? There were people attending the National Conference who say that the PPP at present is theoretically the alternative to GOLKAR [Functional Groupings, the focus of government political activity]. Meanwhile, in accordance with the results of the last two general elections, speaking objectively the NU may be called the principal element in the PPP. The most influential group in the central organization of the PPP is the Advisory Council of the NU. "The problem is that the ulama who are members of the Advisory Council of the NU have the right to determine whether the NU will participate in a general election or in a cabinet," said Dr Tolchah Mansoer. "The Advisory Council can be compared with the legislature of a country. And the Tanfidziah is like the executive branch."

The fourth chairman of the Executive Council of the NU, Machbub Djunaedi, said that in the NU there are two bodies which parallel each other vertically. The Advisory Council handles religious questions, and the Tanfidziah provides the daily leadership, handling social and political matters. Although they are at the same level, if the Tanfidziah should say "B" and the Advisory Council should say "A," what would be in effect would be "A."

That is why the general leader who is chairman of the NU Advisory Council (which consists of 20 elected religious leaders [kyai]) holds a decisive position for the advancement of the PPP at critical times. This is especially the case at the time of general elections.

At present the general chairman of the Executive Council of the NU is K H Idham Chalid. And the position of general leader is held by K H Ali Ma'shum. This means that the leader who has the veto right is K H Ali Ma'shum. "If now K H Ali Ma'shum, as general leader, should order me to jump into a well, I would do it," said Jusuf Hasyim. "That is in my cultural outlook. Members of the NU expand in such a culture."

It once happened that all decisions of the Executive Council of the NU, which had been decided on carefully, were declared to be no longer in effect, at the stroke of a pen, by a general leader. The decisions were considered to be in conflict with religion. It is hoped that a general leader will be able to demonstrate his leadership, particularly in difficult times.

The senior ulama, K H As'ad, the director of the Asem Bagus Pesantren [Asem Bagus Religious School] in Situbondo, had occasion to picture for us what a candidate for the position of general leader should be. As an ulama known to follow a "hard" line (and who once turned down the position of general leader), he said, "A general leader must have charisma. However, beside that a candidate for the position of general leader must also have the qualities of a commander," he said. There are many senior NU ulamas who have prestige but do not have the mark of a commander. K H As'ad did not attend the National Conference at Kaliurang, but his message was used as a guideline by most of those attending the National Conference. K H Ali Ma'shum was regarded as the proper person to hold the highest position in the NU.

K H Ali Ma'shum once had also turned down that position. However, under pressure from those attending the conference, he finally agreed to accept it. According to observers, usually in the NU when there is an election for the position of general leader, people say, "Not me." This is different from the post of general chairman of the Executive Council of the NU. If a person is chosen for that post, he says, "I must accept."

"I am a natural kind of person," said the new general leader, in an interview at his religious school. The "Al Munawir" religious school is located on a parcel of land of two and one-half hectares, 9 kilometers south of Yogyakarta. Now 66 years old, he had just finished sweeping the verandah of his home, an attap building in the middle of a pious residential district, which has a population of 800 people.

He first studied under the direction of his father, K H Ma'shum, at the Lasem religious school, where the students lived on the premises. At age 16 he moved to the Termas religious school in Pacitan. There he was already regarded as a leader by the other students and given the nickname of "Village Chief of Termas." Then he moved again to study under K H Munawir in Krapyak. Because he was one of the most intelligent students, he was chosen as a son-in-law by this teacher. After visiting the Muslim holy land several times, finally he was assigned by his father-in-law to be the director of the Krapyak religious school. Since 1956 the school, which previously had space for only 90 sutdents, finally was able to produce about 1,340 experts in the Koran, who are spread throughout Indonesia.

This ulama, simple in manner, full of a sense of humor, who, according to his students, likes to listen to Indonesian popular songs, gives the impression, on better acquaintance, that he is like a "stone" carefully wrapped in cotton woool. "Perhaps I was chosen because I am known as an ulama who often writes pamphlets," he said, with a hearty laugh. "Usually, I express my views in a pamphlet. Then I send it to community leaders and other religious figures. For example, concerning the holding of a general assembly of the World Council of Churches. Basically, at the time, I said that it was not possible to ensure security for holding a conference of that kind in Indonesia. That became a general view. At the time the Muslim community in Indonesia was regarded by the followers of other religions as the most tolerant."

Furthermore, when Prof Dr Mukti Ali planned to print the Koran in Latin letters, again K H Ali Ma'shum prepared one of his pamphlets. He strongly opposed the effort to turn out this new edition. Both from the point of view of law, history, and politics, as well as from the point of view of the consequences--for example, that it might be turned into a container for peanuts. Kyai Ali presented all of that as a reason for opposing the proposal of the Ministry of Religion.

Again, in the case of his opposition to the Marriage Law, he defended his views in pamphlets. Basically, the NU community at the time was ready to go to jail in the defense of their religion, Kyai Ali said.

What is the view of the former minister of religion, Dr Mukti Ali himself? As a man who is close to the NU as well as the Muhammadiyah [Muslim Brotherhood], Mukti Ali said: "The appointment of Kyai Ali was the right step. Kyai Ali does not belong to the Muslim fundamentalists. He is a moderate, compared with K H As'ad of Situbondo, for example. Besides that, K H Ali Ma'shum can be accepted by the Muhammadiyah. I myself was a student under Kyai Ali."

Kayai Ali has often conducted a dialogue with national leaders of the Muhammadiyah. "We consider that questions which could cause divisions within the Islamic community must be discussed openly," said K H Ali Ma'shum. A teacher who is a member of the Muhammadiyah in Yogyakarta said, "with the NU increasingly liberal and the Muhammadiyah increasingly conservative, there was a meeting place for the 2 organizations. And the process has already begun at the present time. On both sides there are elements which want to get together, and they are becoming more numerous with every passing day."

There Is No Longer a Great Leader

In connection with the National Conference of religious leaders at Kaliurang, apart from the opportunity to become acquainted with the new general leader, people also had the opportunity to become acquainted with the Jam'iyah, or the organization which will be led by K H Ali Ma'shum. According to its history, the NU was formed by ulamas of the Ahlul Sunnah Wal Jamaah religious school (following the Sunni variant of Islam) on 31 January 1926 in Surabaya. One of the founding ulamas was K H Hasjim Asj'ari, who held a central position. He functioned as a link for other ulamas because of his charisma, his age and piety, as well as his knowledge of religion. With him in attendance the NU movement gained a psychological benefit because the name of Asj'ari recalled the followers of the Great Imam al Asj'ari, the founder of the Ahlul Sunnah Wal Jamaah, K H Hasjim Asj'ari, the elder brother of the columnist, Abdurrachman Wahid, who finally was appointed "Great Leader" of the NU. This is a title which, up to the present, no other ulama has ever dared to claim. The Nadlatula Ulama, which means" the resurgence of the ulama," was established for several reasons.

When the Masyumi [Indonesian Muslim Consultative Aseembly] was established, the NU once joined that party. However, later on, in 1952, it split off from it. According to the NU Consultative Council for the Special Area of Yogyakarta, "the ulama at the time only functioned as an advisory body."

In 1955, when general elections were held for the first time, the NU surprisingly emerged as the third largest party, with 45 seats in Parliament.

After the "New Order" leadership was functioning smoothly, in 1971 general elections were held. The results of that general election placed the NU in position as the largest party in Indonesia, among nine other parties, obtaining 10,213,648 votes. This was 3,258,096 more votes than the NU obtained in the general election of 1955, according to the official statement of the Executive Council of the NU to the 57th national conference of the NU. The number of the NU representatives in Parliament after the 1971 elections was 58, but after the general election of 1977 this total dropped to 56, because 2 seats were given to members of the PPP [Development Unity Party].

Regarding the various factions within the NU, according to a representative from West Java, it may be stated that there are "roughly" three. First is the faction from Jombang and Jember which, historically, dominated the NU until the National Conference in Kaliurang. The second faction consists of the ulamas from the religious schools of Central and West Java. The third faction consists of ulamas from outside of Java. However, according to Abdurrahman Wahid, such a division is slowly disappearing because many students from outside of Java are now studying at religious schools in East, Central, and West Java. Indeed, according to Prof Dr Mukti Ali, family ties between the ulamas from Banten to Madura are very close. Therefore, according to Dr H M Tolcha, it is very difficult to be in the opposition in the NU, in view of the family ties. However, he rejects the view that there are "aristocrats" in the NU. An NU leader may emerge only because of his piety, his knowledge of religion, or his leadership capacity, but not because of the religious school he attended or his family.

The NU Challenge

In the past week two conflicting statements came out in succession from organizations of ulamas. The first one came from the National Conference of NU ulamas at Kaliurang, which issued a statement that candidacies for the presidency must be presented constitutionally. The conference also issued a statement that additional titles for the president such as "the father of development" were not needed.

Differing from the statement of the ulamas was the statement issued by the Ansor Youth Movement (the younger generation of the NU) at its seventh general conference in Semarang recently. This stated that the award of the title, "Father of Development," to General Suharto was proper and was not excessive. The Ansor Youth Movement hoped that the MPR [People's Consultative Council] would entrust national leadership under the fourth five-year plan to General Suharto. As a reason for this view the general chairman of the Ansor Youth Movement, Chalid Mawardi, said that an integrating factor was needed which could support national unity and union for the subsequent implementation of national development. It appeared that this factor was to be found in General Soeharto. The title of "Father of Development" should be given to General Soeharto as a figure who has performed useful services in national development. Chalid Mawardi did not regard this statement as in conflict with the decision of the ulamas at Kaliurang.

However, previously, K H Ali Ma'shum, general leader or religious leader of the NU Advisory Council who was just chosen at Kaliurang, stated that subordinate organizations like the Ansor Youth Movement also were obliged to respect the decisions of the ulamas. Why? Because the ulamas were the legacy of the prophet, said the NU general leader. It was also heard later that the general leader would hold a special meeting to review the attitude displayed by Chalid Mawardi.

Ultimately, is it possible that this difference of opinion within the Islamic community in Indonesia cannot be bridged? Usually, according to a teacher at the IAIN [State Islamic Religious Institute], differences of opinion occur in questions where there is bargaining for position. However, if they involve basic questions touching on religion or religious institutions, then the Islamic leaders can unite in a concerted way.

REPORTER FINDS LIFE IMPROVING IN KAMPUCHEA

Stockholm VIETNAM NU in Swedish No 1, 1981 p 2

[Article by Bertil Ekerlid]

[Text] Together with Henrik Forss and the editor of this periodical I am sitting at an outdoor restaurant in Phnom Penh. We have ordered roast duck and rock lobster. It is a lively evening on this street which crosses Monivong, Phnom Penh's main street.

If anyone had said in November 1979, after our delegation went to Kampuchea, that roughly a year later I would be sitting at an outdoor restaurant in a vital Phnom Penh I would have rejected it as a Utopian vision.

The situation seemed so hopeless then that one wondered if this country could ever get back on its feet. Phnom Penh was largely a deserted city. There was no food in the country, no seed corn, no farm tools, no transportation means, nothing.

But a miracle has occurred. Thanks to a massive effort by various aid organizations--especially UNICEF--and a good harvest in 1980 the country has started to function again.

The destroyed medical clinic I visited with Marten Hauffman in November 1979, which was a complete wreck then, is now being operated by the Kampucheans as a dental clinic.

The poorly-equipped hospital we saw in 1979 has now been supplied with materials from the various aid organizations.

Everything seems to have started up even though of course there are still shortages in many areas.

But the Phnom Penh that was a ghost town in November 1979 has come alive. With markets, businesses, cyclists and cars on the streets.

REPORTER IMPRESSED WITH NATION'S PROGRESS

Stockholm VIETNAM NU in Swedish No 1, 1981 p 3

[Article by Maud Sundqvist]

[Text] Like Bertil Ekerlid I visited Kampuchea in February. At that time the harvest was almost over and there was enough food. Foreigners in Phnom Penh had started to talk about the "Kampuchean marvel."

I came to Kampuchea with TV pictures of starving people pulling themselves along the streets in the back of my head. Now in February 1981 there are no "wandering skeletons" to be seen.

Now farm carts with timber and water casks, baskets and food of all kinds are rolling into Phnom Penh and the marketplaces. These are carts drawn by slow-moving oxen or briskly trotting little horses and they are loaded with sacks of rice, beans, watermelons, pineapples, bananas, coconuts, lettuce, cabbage, to-tomatoes, pumpkins, dried fish, pigs and so forth.

Motorcycles and ordinary bicycles come by with bundles of poultry strapped to the baggage carrier. The poor geese have to bend their necks up to avoid hitting their heads on the road.

A hundred-mile roundtrip in the countryside shows a picture of hard work. The rice had been harvested and they were threshing it. Under the farm huts which are set up on piles stood sacks of rice in big heaps.

In 1980 rice cultivation doubled compared with the previous year, "Year 0." Now the goal is to further increase the area under cultivation by 20-30 percent. The people already have more to eat in Kampuchea than in Vietnam. And if one believes the official statistics Kampuchea produced twice as much rice per inhabitant last year as China did.

According to official statistics rice production in 1980 per inhabitant was: 146 kg in Kampuchea, 139 kg in Laos, 92 kg in Vietnam and 69 kg in China.

Gap of 6-8 Weeks

But even though Kampuchea had a good harvest in 1980 it was not enough. It will take at least 100,000 tons of rice to feed the population, now stated to be 5,756,000. This means that there is a rice shortage corresponding to 6-8 weeks' consumption. So toward late fall people will go hungry if the foreign aid dries up.

One should also bear in mind that the 1980 rice production was only about 40 percent of the prewar production. Kampuchea was exporting rice then.

The situation now is anything but stable. There are no reserves. If there is a drought hunger will return. There is a shortage of draft animals. An animal epidemic would be devestating and cases of hoof-and-mouth disease have been reported.

Fragile Miracle

The people are fragile, both physically and mentally. It is amazing they have been able to return to work so quickly. But many get tuberculosis and malaria. In the rainy season there is a lot of dysentery. There is a danger of cholera.

There is still fear of the Pol Pot people who are getting new weapons from China. As long as this traffic continues people can't feel safe in Kampuchea.

The fragile miracle will continue to be threatened for a long time to come.

RED CROSS GENERAL SECRETARY MY SAMEDY DISCUSSES WORK

Stockholm VIETNAM NU in Swedish No 1, 1981 pp 9-11

[Text] The Kampuchean Red Cross has resumed its work. "It is not our fault that activities were halted for 4 years," said general secretary Dr. My Samedy, who is also head of the medical college. He has now been elected to the national assembly along with Red Cross chairman Miss Phlek Phiroun.

Dr. Samedy told of work by the Kampuchean Red Cross which assists returned refugees, builds model villages and involves many people in volunteer projects.

We resumed our activities on 15 May 1979. Our building had been completely destroyed under the Pol Pot regime. It was overgrown and filled with trash and dirt. All documents had been destroyed. Even our sign had been destroyed. There we started by cleaning up and clearing out the rooms and looking for tables, chairs and other equipment. Then we could start to work.

Of the active Red Cross members before 1975 only the chairman, Miss Phlek Phiroun, is left. All the rest were killed, murdered. Some can be found on the lists at Tuol Sleng Prison.

When the Revolutionary People's Council, that is President Heng Samrin, decided that Kampuchea's Red Cross should be reorganized we formed a committee of 10 people. This group has cooperated with the International Red Cross and with sister organizations in socialist countries on relief work.

Then we formed local committees in the provinces. There are now 12 of these. For example the Red Cross committee in Phnom Penh has 2000 members who work without pay.

After the Pol Pot nightmare our Red Cross has an enormous job to do. The first thing is to help people return to their home towns. It was very hard for us with all those who wandered from north to south, from west to east. All they owned was the clothing on their backs, perhaps only a pair of ragged pants. There wasn't even rice to eat.

We helped as much as we could. The first aid also arrived from the Vietnamese Red Cross: medicine, equipment, food. We passed out bedding, mosquito nets, clothes and enough rice to enable people to walk the long way home.

Then came aid from the socialist countries, primarily the Soviet Union. Help from the international organizations did not start arriving before August 1979.

Since we lack doctors the International Red Cross committee has sent doctor teams. We now have a team from the Soviet Union which is working in Tak Hmau just south of Phnom Penh, one from the German Democratic Republic in Kompong Thom, one from Poland in Kompong Speu and then the Swedish Red Cross team which is working in Svay Rieng.

We have worked together with sister organizations in Sweden, France, Finland, India and other lands that have sent help. The chairman of the International Red Cross Committee has visited Kampuchea, as has a delegation from the Red Cross Socities' association (the League) and representatives from the Red Cross in Finland, the Soviet Union, Japan, etc.

We have been visited twice by Anders Wijkman, general secretary of the Swedish Red Cross, and its representative, Sven Rosen, has been here several times along with Sven Lampell. Right now the Swedish Red Cross is helping us build a home for children with room for a hundred young orphans and it is helping to repair the lecture hall at the medical college. Work on the lecture hall has begun and we expect to have it ready in a month. At the children's home we have set up sheds for construction materials which have just arrived at Cap St-Jacques (Vung Tau) in southern Vietnam. We think the work will be done before the rainy season.

The UN refugee commissariat has sent help to the refugees who have returned from Thailand, Vietnam and Laos. They reached an agreement with the Revolutionary People's Council that the Kampuchean Red Cross would distribute this aid. We have volunteers who go out and distribute the aid. Our central Red Cross organization and the provincial committees work together. In Battambang we have a very active committee.

The refugee aid is occurring in three stages and the first aid has now been distributed to 20,000 people. This involves mosquito netting, sleeping mats and cloth. We will now get going on the second stage and hand out kitchen utensils. Farming tools will come in the third stage.

Our work consists of much more. Our volunteers work with health care, perform mass vaccinations, hand out medicine and aid, sew clothes for orphans, train hygiene activists who can also give first aid.

One branch of activity is to create so-called model villages. Our volunteers go out and help people in the villages to build up health care. In Phnom Penh we have created six of these model villages.

I have started something we call the Young People's Red Cross. The core is formed by medical students and I have enrolled around 280 students in the work.

They work in the model villages, collect garbage and dig holes in which to bury it, build latrines, help out with agriculture--for example with the harvest-- and help distribute aid.

[Question] What assistance do you think you can get in the future?

[Dr. Samedy] We want to get aid from all countries. We have started a cooperation with the Japanese Red Cross and with the French branch which is engaging in the fight against TB here. They have made out a budget to fix up the old TB Institute. We are now waiting for the technical equipment.

When it comes to cooperation with the Swedish Red Cross we hope this can be developed further. We will go to Sweden at the invitation of the Swedish Red Cross.

In a few months our chairman will visit Geneva to discuss future relations with the International Red Cross Committee and the League. It may turn out there are more Red Cross branches that would like to work with us.

[Question] What is the position now? Are you members of the League?

[Answer] The Kampuchean Red Cross has been a member of the League since 1960. There was a break from 1975 to 1979 due to Pol Pot's genocidal regime. Then we were deported to various places.

Now the politics have been removed. In 1979 we went to the Red Cross League's general assembly in Geneva but the League did not recognize us officially. The imperialists and the Chinese hegemonists support Pol Pot's Red Cross--although it never existed. Kampuchea did not participate in the period 1975-79.

We represent continuity with the old Kampuchean Red Cross. The bylaws are the same, the headquarters are the same, the chairman is the same. If the committee members were still alive they would also be the same. But they were killed by Pol Pot. It is not our fault the activity was shut down for 4 years.

That is why we have asked to become League members but the vote went against us. That means the place will remain empty for the time being. We think that is a little inhuman. There is no principle to follow in our case but it is a question of continuity.

In the fall there will be a new general assembly in Manilla. We don't know if we will be invited or not. And if we are invited--in what capacity will it be? We don't know. If politics is not mixed into it people will vote for us. The League--and to a certain extent the International Red Cross Committee as well--approves of our activity. They see we are doing Red Cross work. We have good contacts with many Red Cross societies, though they are not official.

The International Red Cross will now conclude its relief work in Kampuchea since its job is to help people in catastrophe situations. When a country is out of danger the League takes over. That is why my chairman's Geneva trip is interesting. I think in the future we will cooperate bilaterally with the Red Cross branches in various western countries.

[Question] What kind of cooperation would you like with the Red Cross and other organizations in the West? How will the cooperation look?

[Answer] Mainly material help. That does not rule out our accepting personnel from friendly societies and from Red Cross groups in other countries if we lack experts. For example the French Red Cross is sending experts to combat TB. I can't say exactly how the bilateral cooperation will develop, if there are more Red Cross groups that would like to work with us. Discussions will show us that.

[Question] You have a picture of Buddha in the room. Does that mean you are a Buddhist?

[Answer] Yes, Kampuchea is a Buddhist land. Religion has now returned. But we must search through the rubble left behind by the Pol Pot people to find a picture of Buddha, for example. We found this among the refuse and brought it back. It weighs 200 kilograms.

[Question] Why are there so many with shaved heads, for instance in the hospital?

[Answer] There are several reasons. When somebody wants something he prays to Buddha for help in getting his wish fulfilled. Nothing is more costly than hair for a Buddhist. So one says to the Buddha picture: "If I am helped--get to see the family again, for example--I will sacrifice my hair to Buddha." If one of my children gets sick the doctors take care of it. But at the same time I pray to Buddha because the child is very dear to me.

In the Pol Pot period many people prayed for a savior, they prayed that God would help them stay alive. When FUNSK [expansion unknown] and the Vietnamese army rescued Kampuchea's people later on there were many--perhaps a majority--who shaved their heads.

DEPUTY FOREIGN MINISTER HOR NAM HONG: ALL AID WELCOME

Stockholm VIETNAM NU in Swedish No 1, 1981 p 16

[Statement by Deputy Foreign Minister Hor Nam Hong to VIETNAM NU]

[Text] Of Sihanoukh's ambassadors from the opposition government period, 1970-75, all but two were executed under Pol Pot and they are now part of the FUNSK [expansion unknown] leadership. One is the former ambassador to Cuba, Hor Nam Hong, now deputy foreign minister. He hopes for diplomatic relations and welcomes Swedish aid.

Hor Nam Hong made this statement to VIETNAM NU:

Starting this year we have an economic development plan and we are concentrating primarily on agriculture.

The most urgent assistance needs are in health care and education. Equipment is needed to develop farming--tractors, artificial fertilizer, pesticides and herbicides and other things. Help is also needed to start up industries that process agricultural products.

If Swedish aid is given it would be wise to concentrate on a few areas--for example health care and agriculture.

When we talk about realities in Kampuchea we cannot ignore the barbarity under the Pol Pot regime. If one doesn't know about that one thinks the situation in Kampuchea now is not so remarkable compared with that in other countries.

The Pol Pot years left deep scars on all our people. This isn't felt quite as strongly with foreigners. But as soon as we get together in the family or among friends we come back to it again and again. One sees children playing and people laughing--but what have they experienced?

We want peace in which to rebuild and we are not looking for trouble with any country, especially our neighbors in Southeast Asia. Here we want stability and peaceful cooperation. We don't understand how some countries can condemn the Pol Pot regime's genocide and at the same time work for the return of the Pol Pot people so they can resume their mass murders.

Now Son Sann's and Sihanoukh's names are being used but they are just cards in a game based on a "Pol Potism without Pol Pot." This just serves the hegemonistic policy of Peking and creates tension in Southeast Asia between us and the ASEAN lands. Without this tension China couldn't intervene. Thailand's policy serves China's interests more than it does that of the people of Thailand.

The Pol Pot people, the Khmer Serei, Son Sann, China, Thailand--it is those we call reactionaries, who are working together against us in order to sabotage our peaceful development and our revolution.

But their intrigues are useless, the situation here is irrevocable in the sense that neither Pol Potism nor other reactionary forces can return and seize power in Kampuchea. Never.

At the meeting of Indochinese foreign ministers in Ho Chi Minh City in January we made concrete proposals to get negotiations with the ASEAN countries going. We want Southeast Asia to be a zone of peace, stability, safety and cooperation in spite of different systems of society. This is no political tactic, we really want peace. We need peace. The same is true of Vietnam.

We would be grateful if you would explain what the situation in our country is really like and that we want peace to rebuild after all the destruction wrought by the genocidal regime. We also hope that normal relations can be restored between us and Sweden as soon as possible.

All assistance is welcome in the hard times being encountered by our people--on condition that it is not bound by political conditions. So far we have not listed what we wanted but have left it up to donors to decide the extent to which they can help out in the areas of health care, education and the social sector--especially with regard to orphans. This also applies to friendly nations.

BRITISH JOURNALIST SEES ZIA 'STRONGER THAN EVER'

Islamabad THE MUSLIM in English 11 Nov 81 p 8

[Text]

ISLAMABAD, Nov. 10: President Ziaul Haq's position is "more stable at the moment" than ever before, a British newspaperman said over the weekend after touring Pakistan.

David Dodwell of 'Financial Times', who returned to London from a visit to Pakistan replied to questions by Richard Open Heimer in the South Asia survey of the BBC about the present-day situation in Pakistan, broadcast on Nov. 7.

Asked about President Zia's position at the moment, David Dodwell said:

"It is my own impression that Zia is probably more stable at the moment than he has ever been. He certainly feels that for himself and I think there are many good reasons for him to believe that.

The economy is in better shape than it has ever been and after four good harvests, the country is now self-sufficient in wheat and may even export wheat this year which is perhaps something which would not have been conceivable three years ago. Money is pouring in form the Gulf States which is making the poorer regions of Pakistan, the Frontier province and Baluchistan, much wealthier than they have ever been. so, materially, the country is doing much better than you could have expected two years ago and much better than any of the ordinary Pakistani people could have expected. I think Zia feels that this has given him a degree of support or at least has foiled political opposition in the country".

Asked whether President Zia would go ahead with his programme to create a Federal Advisory Council, Dodwell said:

"I think that according to latest indication from Zia, he will firmly stick with his intention to introduce his Council. He will probably try to have it in position by the end of this year".

Dodwell also pointed out that the President was paying a good deal of attention to the rural areas. He was "channelling substantial funds for developments in the rather backward areas of Pakistan, Baluchistan and the NWFP".

Dodwell thinks that the creation of Regional Councils a year ago and the proposal for setting up a new Advisory Council were steps towards achieving the goal of Islamisation.—APP

PUNJAB MINISTER DEPLORES IBRD 'INTERFERENCE'

Islamabad THE MUSLIM in English 11 Nov 81 p 8

[Text]

LAHORE, Nov. 10: Punjab Finance Minister Nawaz Sharif admitted at a Press conference here this afternoon that World Bank's interference in the working of Water and Sanitation Agency of the Lahore Development Authority was on increase.

"The IBRD tells us what should be an establishment's strength, who should be what and what should be the salary bill", he said referring to World Bank's dictates and added that though WASA was over-staffed the strength of its directors still fell 30 per cent short of World Bank's demand.

The Minister said acceptance of such suggestions from the World Bank meant a great increase in overhead expenses of WASA while their rejection was not acceptable to the World Bank people. He agreed with a questioner that they (World Bank authorities) were after the government for increase in water rates. Their suggestions and recommendations were however, accepted when found proper, he said.

Mr. Sharif said the government was not prepared to give millions of rupees subsidy to WASA on account of its overhead expenses and wanted to turn it into a self-generating concern. But a subsidy would be provided when genuenly needed, he added.

He disclosed that 37 per cent of the city's water was going waste. Fifteen per cent of this amounted to water theft, another 15 per cent to distribution losses and seven per cent to leakages.

He also announced the government's decision to revert to water rates as decided by the budget meeting in July this year and accordingly freeze all other increases. These rates had increased between paisa 50 and Rs. 2 per month. Other increases in water billings would now be adjustable.

He insisted that water rates in Lahore were still the lowest in the country and the service the longest but admitted that water supply remained disconnected at places for days, sometimes as long as a week.

INDIAN JOURNALIST'S CRITICISM OF GANDHI NO-WAR PACT REACTION REPORTED

Karachi DAWN in English 12 Nov 81 p 4

[Text]

ISLAMABAD, Nov. 11: The way Mrs. Gandhi reacted first to the reduction of arms and now to the no-war pact offer makes her vulnerable to the charge that she has a vested interest in keeping the Indo-Pakistan pot boiling observed Kuldip Nayar in an article published by the "Tribune" on Nov. 5.

Captioned "Zia's offer: war and peace", the article says, "Mrs Gandhi has said that Pakistan's offer of a no-war pact was "intriguing" and could be a "trap" but has not explained why it should be so. Until a few months ago India was all for such a pact and had used different forums in the world to chide Pakistan for not accepting it, and now it is all against it. This is no less intriguing. Referring to the Indian claim that Pakistan was acquiring large quantity of modern arms, Nayar says this "is an added reason why there should be a no-war pact between the two countries. After all, Delhi is not sitting idle. It is acquiring the Mirage-2000 over and above what it has, including the Jaguars and the MIG-23s. The pact is not going to lull it into complacency. Therefore, Mrs. Gandhi's hesitation is rather surprising".

The article further says, Gen. Zia has even proposed a proportional reduction in forces and armaments on both sides. Delhi has not even asked him for elucidations which it has at least done in the case of the no-war pact offer. It may be argued that India's commitments are heavier because of its unresolved borders with China But this can be argued out at a meeting of the commanders. Beijing itself wants rapprochment between Delhi and Islamabad.

Some kind of equation with Islamabad would also help India in its Hindu-Muslim problem which has got inextricably linked with relations with Pakistan. The way Mrs. Gandhi has reacted first to the reduction of arms and now to the no-war pact offer makes her vulnerable to the charge that she has a vested interest in keeping the Indo-Pakistan pot boiling. It can divert the people's attention from problems concerning their day to day living. Gen. Zia's offer deserves consideration, but closing the door straight away is not even good strategy", the article says. —APP.

JOINT VENTURES WITH CANADA PROPOSED

Islamabad THE MUSLIM in English 10 Nov 81 p 8

[Article by Jawaid Bokhari: "Wider Cooperation for Joint Ventures Likely"]

[Text] Karachi, Nov 9: The Chairman of Canada-Pakistan Economic Council, Gaetan Lavalee, flew into Karachi this morning with proposals for joint collaboration in some 20 projects ranging from development of oil and gas to aircraft industry.

Mr Lavalee later told the Federation of Pakistan Chambers of Commerce and Industry that these proposals brought by him were formulated within a week of his departure from Canada to Pakistan. He expressed the hope that the private sector would help him materialise these projects.

Since the inauguration of the Canada-Pakistan Economic Council by Finance Minister Ghulam Ishaq Khan on Oct 8 last, 40 firms and individuals have become members of his organisation. And exactly a month later formation of the Council, he said, he was here to study the prospects of expanding trade and economic ties between the two countries.

Mr Lavalee hopes to see the Finance Minister and discuss with him the scope of expanding ties between Canada and Pakistan. He said there was scope of collaboration in oil and gas development, hydro-electric power, metallurgy and mining, forest management, tourism, manufacture of industrial and electrical machinery, aircraft industry and consultancy.

The Council chief advised the Federation of Pakistan Chambers of Commerce and Industry to set a similar body so that the two could cooperate in improving trade and economic ties.

He told Pakistani businessmen that his organisation would work for relaxation of restrictions and liberalisation of quota for textiles to boost up Pakistani exports. On the basis of six month's performance, Canadian exports to Pakistan would amount to some 80 million dollars against imports of some 21 million dollars in 1981.

Pakistani businessmen at the FPCCI meeting urged the Council President to help Pakistan boost exports so that Pakistan could repay the Canadian loans and credits that finance roughly half of its exports to Pakistan.

Mr Lavalee said the guarantees provided by Islamabad for repatriation of capital and profits would help attract foreign investment.

He also called for a series of steps to forge closer trade and economic ties between the two States. They included, holding of seminars, exchange of businessmen's delegation, and provision of detailed information of about Pakistan in Canada.

Mr Lavalee revealed that he had suggested to the Resource Development Corporation ways and means by which they could implement the 400 million dollar Saindak Copper Project through a group of Yugoslav-French and Canadian firms.

Earlier, the FPCCI chief, Mohammad Yusuf Zia, stressed the need for transfer of technology from the developed to developing States that is becoming increasingly difficult because of the rising costs involved in the process.

SHIPPING CHIEF IN POLAND FOR NEGOTIATIONS ON SHIP DELIVERY

[Article by Jawaid Bokhari]

[Text]

KARACHI, Nov. 10: PNSC Chairman Rear Admiral Abdul Waheed Bhombal reached Warsaw today at the invitation of the Polish State enterprise "Centromor" to negotiate delivery of three ships built by the yard for Pakistan, it was learnt here today.

The invitation of the Polish authorities follows the order of the London High Court to Centromor not to resell the vessels and maintain status quo till their delivery to PNSC.

A PNSC source said that it would get the three ships seized in case of resales. The PNSC has already informed all shipping brokers in the U.K. about the London High Court injunction on a suit filed by the Corporation.

Under the contract signed between the two organisations in January 1979 disputes in the agreement are to be resolved through arbitration under the English law. Negotiations for construction of eight vessels under a Polish credit were also conducted in London.

The Polish shipyard has held up delivery of the three vessels on the plea that it would sell the vessels on cash basis instead under credit as stipulated under the contract signed between the two sides because of a worsening food and economic situation in Poland.

PNSC has paid 5-1/2 million dollars as down payment in accordance of the terms of the contract and had also agreed late last month to pay 10 per cent more than the agreed price for the vessels despite the absence of an escalation clause in the agreement. The Corporation was motivated in doing so because of the food shortages being experienced by the Polish people.

Three vessels were to be delivered by November 1981, the first one in March, and the second on Oct. 26. But one day before the delivery date of the first two vessels in October, the Polish government decided to ask for cash against delivery and annuled the contract for deferred payments.

A 70-man crew of the Pakistani shipping Lines is now in Poland awaiting delivery of the vessels.

PLOT FORMED IN INDIA AGAINST PAKISTANI REACTOR 'HAS ISRAELI AID'

Lahore CHATAN in Urdu 3 Aug 81 pp 13-14

[Article: "Israeli Agents in India: Plans for Destroying Pak Nuclear Capabilities"]

[Text] With reference to the BBC report that plans for the destruction of the only nuclear plant in Pakistan have been made in India, Hindu imperialists consulted Jewish imperialists and also consulted the Russians and their agents in Kabul. However, this dirty plan has not been executed so far. This does not mean that the plan has been abandoned. It is possible that secret preparations for the execution of the plan are underway. Or it is possible that the plan has been postponed temporarily since, in the opinion of the planners, the opportune time for its execution may not have come yet. After the successful attack on the Iraqi nuclear facility by Israel, the possibility of such an attack on any Islamic country cannot be ruled out.

The United States and other imperialist powers made Israel a nuclear power by secretly supplying the necessary material. India conducted a nuclear explosion in 1974 and yet not a single voice has been raised against it from any quarter. Nor was the Indian nuclear bomb dubbed a "Hindu bomb." Pakistan has said time and again that it needs nuclear power for peaceful purposes and yet its program is seen as an "islamic bomb" in Washington, London, New Delhi and Moscow. There has been a lot of misleading and venomous propaganda against Pakistan's peaceful nuclear program. It is no coincidence that the highest levels in Moscow, New Delhi, Washington and London are equal participants in this. This is a carefully considered plan. The enemies of Islam do not want any Islamic country to develop a nuclear capability. This is a joint mission of those powers that oppose Islam. But it is regrettable that Moslems are not united against the common enemy. Believers in one God, Prophet and Quran are divided into various sects, factions and parties. Their strength has been converted into weakness by selfishness and greed.

Even prior to the attack on Iraq by Israel, the possibility of destroying the Pakistani nuclear plant by attack or force was discussed in Washington, Now the news has been received that such a plan exists in New Delhi. Under the present circumstances, only alertness and preparedness on the part of the protectors can render the dirty enemy plans unsuccessful. To sabotage a peaceful Pakistani nuclear program, destructive actions as well as an external attack could be used. Pakistan needs to be wary of untrusted friends. It should not overlook the fact that Indian elements planning against Pakistan have consulted Jews, and Jews make the policies in Washington. Getting a few weapons from Washington amounts to no more than a mere hope for the future right now. In view of the hue and cry on the part of Indira Gandhi and the Jewish influence in America, not much faith can be put in the promises and pronouncements of the American Government. India has illegally occupied the Bangladesh island of Til Pati and now it is threatening Bangladesh itself. International organizations, laws and principles are a mere hoax.

The practical reality of life is in the adage "might is right." India devoured Hyderabad, Junagarh and various other states, and also took over Goa. Nobody could do a thing about it. Now it has illegally occupied a part of Kashmir, so that even a reference to the Kashmiri issue offends India. In such circumstances, how can a weak Bangladesh regain its island from India? Respect for international agreements are not words to be found in the Indian dictionary. Bangladeshis, who regarded India as their "sympathsizer" and saviour, have come to recognize India's true colors. But it is too late now, since having been ensnared by India through deception they have converted East Pakistan into Bangladesh, which is much weaker and smaller than India. Now, try as they might, they cannot turn back the clock. They have come to their senses too late.

The news that Murtuza Bhutto, Mustufa Khar and their companions took a trip to New Delhi has been published citing the world's foremost sources. Why they went to India is not hard to understand. Their forbears broke Pakistan into two pieces. Then they planted the seeds of waywardness, destruction and devisiveness and chaos, and later they fled the country. What they needed to do was to ponder their own and their forbears' repulsive acts, learn a lesson and do penance. But they did not do so.

THREE ARRESTED, CHARGED WITH SUBVERSION

Islamabad THE MUSLIM in English 8 Nov 81 p 3

[Article by Anwar Iqbal: "Another Three of the Gang Arrested"]

[Text]

ISLAMABAD, Nov. 7: Three more members of the group involved in distributing subversive literature have reportedly been arrested.

It is said that these three persons—whose names have not yet been disclosed—were hauled up from a house on the Margalla Road by CIA police.

Police, when contacted, refused to confirm or deny the report. However, they said that they had expedited their action against the subversive elements.

It may be recalided that five men and a woman have already been apprehended by police in this connection. Three of them—Jamil Umar, Dr. Saleem and Tariq—were affiliated with the Quaid-e-Azam Unviersity while the foruth — Uzaer Kamal—was related to a teacher of the same University. The girl was stated to be working for a foreign mission in Islamabad.

In last night's raid, Police also recovered different kinds of subversive literature, including books which are banned in the country, underground magazines, pamphlets and handbills.

Meanwhile, the couple arrested on Tuesday night from a house in Sector F-8-1 for taking alcohol has been bailed out by the Sessions Judge, Khawaja Khalid Paul, on iterim basis. They had earlier been sent to the jail on 14-day judicial remand by the City Magistrate, Nasrullah Chatha.

The couple was taken into custody from the residence of a teacher of the Quaid-e-Azam University when it was raided by police after being tipped off by one of the accused held ealier.

However, none of the three other accused—Jamil Umar, Saleem and Tariq—have so far been produced before a court as police were still busy in making a challan against them. They will have to be produced before the District Magistrate for granting physical remand or sending them in judicial lock-up.

SHAHI TO VISIT INDIA BEFORE YEAR'S END

Karachi DAWN in English 13 Nov 81 p 1

[Text]

ISLAMABAD, Nov 12: Mr Agha Shahi, Foreign Minister of Pakistan, is expected to visit India sometime before the end of this year in response to the invitation of Mr Narasimha Rao, Indian Foreign Minister, which he extended when he came to Islamabad in June.

Mr Riaz Piracha, Foreign Secretary, who made an overnight stay in New Delhi earlier this month while going to Kathmandu to attend the regional Asian Foreign Secretaries conference, had met Mr R. D. Sathe, Indian Foreign Secretary, and held informal meetings with him.

The President, Gen Mohammad Zia-ul-Haq, had recently told an Indian journalist that the Foreign Secretary who was then due to visit New Delhi on his way to Kathmandu, might possibly elaborate on Pakistan's non-aggression pact offer to Mrs Gandhi, Indian Prime Minister. The President's observation was apparently with reference to a spate of highly confusing and wrapped news from the Indian capital suggesting that no formal offer had been received from Islamabad.

However, since then the Indian Embassy in Islamabad had made a statement admitting that Pakistan had communicated its non-aggression pact through the Ambassador to the Indian Government in September.

Informed sources however, point out that it is not correct as reported by some Indian newspapers that Pakistan had offered joint defence with India together with non-aggression pact. It is stated that it was hypothetical to talk of joint defence at this stage when as a matter of fact India has not even formally acknowledged Pakistan's offer which implies comprehensive discussions between the two governments about the nature and scope of a non-aggression pact.

It is further understood that the present offer to India is a new initiative by Islamabad and not related at all to the 1959 offer made by the late President, Field Marshal Ayub Khan, in the context of an entirely different geopolitical situation.

MULTIPURPOSE BRIDGE OVER INDUS DESCRIBED

Islamabad THE MUSLIM in English 5 Nov 81 p 6

[Text]

MUZAFFARGARH, Nov. 4: A modren multi-purpose 3410 feet-long bridge over the river Indus near Ghazi Ghat, Muzaffargarh is being constructed at cost of Rs.26 million under the supervision of Pakistani engineers and designers.

Briefing the Press correspondents who visited the site the Executive Engineer Bridges, Naeem Uddin said Pakistani engineers were performing an engineering feat by narrowing down the 14 kilometer wide indus to only 3.410 feet with the help of spurs and guide banks. He said this bridge would able to pass more than 10 lakh cusecs of water during the highest flood days while the past the highest flood recorded was 6.5 lakh cusecs.

He said work on this project was in progress round-the-clock.

The government had provided Rs.45 million for the current fiscal year.

With the completion of this project the distance between Multan and D.G. Khan would be reduced to 93 kilometres and guide banks would check the soil erosion near Drahma and fallow land would also be reclaimed by driving the flow of water.

He said the bridge would cross the river in 22 spans and the foundation of each span would be 134 feet deep.

He said 10 miles long approch-road would be constructed on both sides in two phases. He said a laboratory was functioning at the site to examine the quality of material and its resistance while some other official laboratories were also co-operating in this task. -PPI

DUPLICITIOUS POLITICIANS CAUSE PUBLIC DISILLUSIONMENT

Lahore NAWA-I-WAQT in Urdu 23 Oct 81 p 3

[Article: "Politicians, People At Opposite Ends of the Pole"]

[Text] Before writing these lines, I was reading "The Politicial Diary of Karachi," which is published in this issue of the magazine. In it, one of the Muslim League leaders, Mr Khwaja Khairuddin, has been quoted as saying: "The apathy that is found among people today can be very dangerous because it can be very injurious for people not to take an interest in anything."

Prior to this, Mr Khwaja demanded in this very diary that a national government be established.

Mr Khwaja is a seasoned politician and it is said that everything is possible in politics. In other words, a good politician is like a weather vane, turning with the wind. This style of politics is not prevalent among the countries from which we have learned the art of democracy or taken our model of politics. If you look at the political parties or politicians of these countries, it will be clear to you that every party, and the politicians connected with it, has a consistent viewpoint, one that represents an individual approach toward the issues of the nation. Parties do not break up overnight and have new parties born out of them, nor is it the custom for a politician to leave his party and join a party in the opposite camp. Undoubtedly, there must be a great deal of strife among the parties there as well, but the people neither change their parties nor their viewpoints, whereas in our country parties and viewpoints are changed as people change their clothes. If you look at it carefully, it appears that there are neither principles nor viewpoints. Therefore, they move in a direction from which it is possible to derive benefits. If they do not succeed in deriving the benefits, then they make a big hue and cry. We have seen such politics for years and years and politics has been presented to us in such a way that it seems to be another name for "lie". The real difference between various political parties is one merely of personalities, not of programs. What a party will do if it comes into power, nobody from the party seems to spell out. If it is spelled out, then it does not go beyond campaign slogans. If old slogans lose their attractiveness after a few years, then new slogans are created. Sometimes "the cause of the poor" and sometimes religion is exploited for political purposes. If governments change, then their influence remains confined to the upper strata. Government machinery is set up in our country so that its influences hardly reach the lower levels. It hardly affects the character of the officials in the lowest echelon.

However, Mr Khwaja's proposition that people are apathetic is worth examining.

True, people are apathetic, but toward whom? Nobody can be apathetic toward his own issues. They cannot be unconcerned about issues such as health, employment, education, justice, the distribution of resources and so forth. The future of the country, strangers on the borders and the issues confronting the dear motherland are subjects of interest to everybody. There can be different viewpoints about the issues, but it cannot be said that people do not recognize the issues. In a country where in the hamlets, villages, farms, alleys and bazaars people say, "Will India attack us? Can we take Kashmir? Is there danger on the border of the Soviet Union? Will China help us?" accusing such people of being apathetic is very unfair.

Surely these masses are apathetic to those politicians who want them to come out of their houses, not for their own sake but for that of the politicians, to get beaten up, burn buses, wreak havoc and help in bringing about a change that might enable these politicians to capture power effortlessly. After coming to power, the politicians ask the masses to stop the riots and to sit at home and wait because the revolution has already taken place. This is the drama that political leaders have asked the masses to play time and again and with which we are very familiar. In the many years of our journalistic experience we have seen many people trying hard to enter the government, and after entering it, changing completely. These people who have criticized the lack of freedom of speech and publication and the maladies of the government, these very people oppose these criticisms once they become part of the government. People pursue altogether different policies and giv e strong arguments in their support, including the defense of the country, when they are in power. If we remind these people about their campaign promises and assertions, then they say that they were made in different times and now the country is passing through a crisis and a different kind of policy is needed. When they are asked to solve the issues, they say, "We do not have the genie of Aladdin that we can solve all the problems overnight." In fact, crisis never ends. Hardships never terminate. These are strange issues that, in the face of government activity, remain unresolved for years.

There is nothing wrong in coming to power and conducting the affairs of government. If a political party or a politician truly wants to implement his principles, then he needs the government. But is it not necessary for an individual or a party after it comes to power to bring about a visible change in the condition of the masses--make their lives better, alleviate poverty, provide better system of justice, provide equal opportunities for employment and so forth? Whatever the case, the masses should discern the change as tangible, otherwise they are justified in thinking that political parties differ from each other in name only. The mere switching of faces in the government does not do much good for them. A question can be asked of Mr Khwaja Khairuddin, and with reference to other respected politicians, whether there is a workable program for solving the problems of the people of Pakistan. Often parties amount to no more than one individual or his cabal. If somebody has any doubt about this statement, then he should tell us what the difference is between three types of Muslim Leagues. What is the difference between any Muslim League and Tahreek, Istiklal or Jamhuri Party. Similarly, what kind of blueprint for solving the national issues do the other parties have? If democracy is established today and a shadow cabinet is set up, then there is an institution that will be able to criticize its work with solid arguments. It is not true that in every age there have been more or less only two parties, one the party in government, the other the party that is out. If you look carefully you will find common principles in the party in power and the party in opposition. In such a state of affairs, it is difficult to know who is where and what he wants; and whatever he wants, is it a short-range wish or a long-range goal; and whatever is being said, it is politics or permanent planning. Time after time people have seen these politicians become turncoats.

Who can deny this fact: Democratic institutions and democratic style alone can become a stable program of action for the country. But for this purpose, the trust of the people will be necessary, unfortunately something no politician or political party has. Our politics have done so many somersaults that we cannot understand them anymore. Don't regard people as apathetic. They see everything with open eyes. Before their eyes they see new alliances being made and old alliances being broken. Every activity is obvious to them and they will give their verdict when the time comes. Now the politicians should come out of the 18th century system of feudalism and should try to understand the problems of the 20th century with reference to people.

In the politics of the provinces, the masses are treated like sheep and decisions are made on the basis of family considerations of the elite.

If we did not recognize the changes that are taking place around us and did not give the masses their true place, and if by sitting at home we could change faces and take new positions and give such statements as "people are apathetic," then the harm in this would injure us rather than the masses, because true politics is like a fish that remains in that water that is called people. Provincial unity cannot be created through marriages, nor in the name of national government. Without establishing the rights by making a back door entry into the mansion of power, the issues of the country can be launched on the right track. The sooner this bitter reality can be brought home to our leaders, the better.
